

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

PREFACE.

IN introducing to the Public the "TOPOGRAPHICAL DICTIONARY OF ENGLAND," it may be necessary to state that, although some few works, bearing a similar title, have been published within the last thirty years, yet no work of sufficient authority, as a book of general reference, has appeared since the time of Camden; the publication, therefore, of a Dictionary, affording a more comprehensive and faithful delineation of the kingdom, had become a desideratum. Of the many local histories and other works, which at the time of their publication might have afforded an accurate account of the places they describe, the greater number having been published long since, and there being several counties and considerable towns of which no authentic history had been given, it was found impossible to compile from existing authorities a Topographical Dictionary in any degree deserving the public patronage. It was determined therefore to make a general Survey of the whole Kingdom, and several gentlemen were engaged to procure, by personal examination and enquiry, the fullest information upon the various subjects contemplated in the plan of the work; and, in order to facilitate their enquiries, and to preserve uniformity in the arrangement of the information, they were furnished with printed questions, embracing every object to which their attention was to be directed.

The islands of Guernsey and Jersey, with the smaller dependent islands, and the Isle of Man, though not forming integral portions of England, are so closely connected with it, that it was considered that a detail of their history, and a minute and faithful description of their peculiar systems of government, laws, customs, &c., would form an interesting feature in the work: with this view gentlemen were sent to visit those islands, and were for many months employed in collecting the requisite information, and in revising and correcting the proof sheets on the spot.

Previously to the commencement of the present undertaking, a clergyman residing in the neighbourhood of Ashby de la Zouch had projected a work somewhat similar; the materials for which he proposed to collect by transmitting, through several peers of the realm and members of parliament, printed queries to the officiating clergymen throughout the kingdom; but, finding that his letters were only partially answered, and that the present publication upon a more extensive plan was in progress, he relinquished his design, and transferred to the Proprietors more than three thousand letters, which he had received, containing much original and useful information.

It was at first intended to confine the plan of the work to a topographical and statistical account of the several places; but, considering that a summary of the history of such as either are, or have been, of importance, would increase its value, and render it more complete, it was determined to introduce a concise narrative of the principal events which have marked their progress from their origin to the present time. To effect this, several other gentlemen were employed at the British Museum, the London Institution, and other libraries, to select from authentic records and manuscripts the most important occurrences in the history of each place.

To render the account of every town and place of importance as correct as possible, prior to its being finally put to press, proof sheets were forwarded to those resident gentlemen who had previously furnished local information, in order that, in their revisal of them, they might introduce any changes which had subsequently taken place, or improvements that might be at that time in progress: these were in general promptly examined and returned, but in some instances inevitable delay was occasioned by the absence of the parties to whom they were addressed.

Though this essential precaution may have retarded the publication, it has conduced materially to the accuracy, of the work. For a similar reason, the time employed in the Survey has been longer than was at first anticipated; it having been thought advisable that the persons engaged in that arduous and important service should protract the period originally prescribed for their researches, rather than compromise the interests of the work by omitting to avail themselves of every possible source of intelligence. And here the Proprietors beg to return their unfeigned thanks for the kind attention uniformly manifested, and the valuable information liberally communicated, to their agents, during the three years they were employed in their pursuits; and gratefully to acknowledge the prompt and powerful assistance received from the resident nobility, gentry, and clergy, and persons holding official situations, many of whom have transmitted original manuscripts, containing much valuable information never before published.

It may be necessary to state that, in the arrangement, all places having the same general name are classed together according to the alphabetical order of their distinguishing epithets,—as Norton (King's), Norton (South); and always precede those of which the name is a compound term,—as Norton-Conyers, Norton-Lindsey, &c., which follow in the same order; but when, as in some instances, it is difficult to ascertain which is the primary and which the adjunct term, if the first occurring in the alphabetical order be not the proper name of the place, a reference is given to the other name, under which the description will be found.

For the greater facility of reference, the following arrangements have been adopted. First, with respect to COUNTIES:—the name, and whether an inland or maritime county,—its relative situation, superficial extent in square miles and statute acres, and population, according to the census of 1821;—historical summary;—province, diocese, archdeaconries, and deaneries;—number of parishes, stating how many are rectories, vicarages, and perpetual curacies;—lathes, rapes, hundreds, or other civil divisions of a like kind, but differing in name;—cities, boroughs, sea-ports, corporate and market towns;—courts of assize and general quarter session, and where held;—number of acting magistrates;—amount of parochial rates, and the portion assigned for the relief of the poor;—climate, agriculture, soil, and the quantity of land devoted to tillage and pasture;—predominant breeds of cattle;—extent of forests, woods, commons, marshes, lakes, &c. ;—geology;—manufactures and commerce;—navigable rivers, canals, and railways;—principal turnpike roads;—Roman stations and roads;—encampments and other relics of antiquity;—remains of religious houses;—ancient churches and fonts;—ancient castles;—principal modern seats;—mineral springs, and natural curiosities.

Secondly, in CITIES, BOROUGHs, and CORPORATE and MARKET TOWNS:—name and situation;—distance and bearing from the county town and from London;—population, according to the census of 1821;—origin, and etymology of name;—historical summary;—local description;—scientific and literary institutions;—places and sources of amusement;—commerce, trade, and manufactures;—markets and fairs;—municipal government, of what officers composed, and when and how chosen;—privileges and immunities, courts of justice, prisons, &c. ;—parliamentary representation, elective franchise, and when granted, number of electors, and how they obtain their freedom, returning officer, and the prevailing influence;—ecclesiastical and religious establishments;—nature of the livings;—in what archdeaconry and diocese, or, if of exempt jurisdiction, to whom the peculiar belongs;—amount at which the living is rated in the king's books;—endowment, whether by private benefaction, royal bounty, or parliamentary grant,—patron,—tutelar saint and architectural description of the churches;—dissenting places of worship, and of what denominations;—scholastic and charitable foundations and endowments;—benevolent institutions;—ancient monastic establishments, with the amount of revenue at the dissolution;—antiquities;—mineral springs;—natural phenomena;—eminent natives and residents;—title, if any, which the place confers, and on what family.

Thirdly, in PARISHES:—name and situation;—distance and bearing from the nearest market or post town;—chapelries, townships, &c., which they comprise;—population, according to the census of 1821;—nature of the living;—the archdeaconry and diocese in which it is included, and, if of exempt jurisdiction, the peculiar court to which it belongs;—amount at which each living is rated in the king's books;—endowment by private benefaction, royal bounty, or parliamentary grant;—patron;—tutelar saint and architectural description of the church;—dissenting places of worship, and of what denominations;—schools, hospitals, and other charitable institutions;—monastic establishments, encampments, relics of antiquity, and miscellaneous information.

IN TOWNSHIPS, CHAPELRIES, HAMLETS, and TYTHINGS, forming civil divisions of parishes, the same arrangement of subjects has been observed as in the parishes themselves: these, though enumerated under the head of the parishes to which they belong, and with which their population is collectively returned, are also separately inserted in the work, and their respective population given under their several heads. But, with regard to the great number of villages and hamlets which are not recognized divisions, it has, from their general want of importance, been thought unnecessary to notice them, with the exception of such as may possess some historical interest, or geological features, in which case they are described under the heads of their respective parishes.

It has been found difficult to determine precisely by what title to designate those places which, though formerly only chapelries, have, by virtue of their endowment by the Governors of Queen Anne's bounty, for the augmentation of the maintenance of the clergy, become perpetual curacies, and in a great measure independent of the incumbents of the parishes to which they belonged. Though, from some partial dependence on the mother church, arising either from the right of appointing the curate, or from a reservation either of the whole, or a portion, of the tithes, and in some instances of the surplice fees, they may be still considered chapelries; yet for all civil purposes they possess full parochial rights, and are consequently, in many instances, described as parishes.

It has also, in many instances, been difficult to obtain correct information respecting the patronage of the livings, many of the incumbents having been appointed by the purchaser of a next presentation only; and, in some cases, where the living has been held for a long term, the advowson has passed into other hands: the information obtained on the spot has, therefore, frequently differed from that communicated by the registrars of the several dioceses, who have kindly afforded considerable assistance on all ecclesiastical affairs.

The augmentations have been taken from a work recently published by Mr. Hodgson, Secretary to the Governors of the bounty of Queen Anne, but they do not afford any just criterion of the present value of the living, the money having been, in many instances, vested in land and other property, and in some, either the whole, or a considerable portion, having been expended on the repair of the glebe house. The amount of the revenues of the several monastic establishments, at the time of their dissolution, has been adopted from the valuation published by Mr. Speed, from a catalogue of religious houses drawn up by Mr. Burton.

Respecting scholastic foundations and endowments, and other charitable institutions, great facility has been afforded by the reports of the Commissioners appointed by act of parliament to enquire concerning charities; yet, with regard to such as were not included in those already published, much difficulty was experienced, as it became necessary to depend almost exclusively upon the information obtained from the parties by whom they were immediately superintended.

The distances of the several places have been measured by a chartometer on the most recent maps;—the market towns from the county town and from London, and the parishes and townships from the nearest market or post town; so that by adding, or deducting, the distance of any parish or township from the market town, according to its bearing, which may be seen by a reference to the county map, its distance from London may be easily ascertained. The admeasurement has generally been made from the respective churches; but, in townships or other places having no church, it has been taken from the centre of the village.

In describing the various specimens of ecclesiastical architecture, it has been thought advisable to lay aside the terms of designation which, till within a recent period, have been almost universally adopted. The term "Saxon" has been hitherto improperly applied to a numerous class of buildings, of which scarcely any specimens existed in this country till long after the Saxon period; and the term "Gothic," whatever may have been its origin, has neither reference to date, nor to distinction of character. Of truly Saxon architecture there are few, if any, well-authenticated examples; and, consequently, with reference to buildings supposed to be of this class, a decided opinion has not been expressed. For the sake of distinctness and classification, these interesting structures have been referred respectively to the Norman, the early English, the decorated English, and the later English, styles of architecture. The first of these styles is appropriately designated Norman, as having been generally adopted by that people; and the three last mark distinctly the successive periods of that style which is called English, not only as having been brought to its highest state of perfection in this country, but as displaying characteristics which distinguish it from that of any other. The Norman style, though some few specimens previously existed, was more extensively brought into practice subsequently to the Conquest, and continued till the end of the reign of Henry II.; the most ancient part of Winchester cathedral is a fine specimen. The early English style, which originated in the former, and in its earliest period is scarcely to be distinguished from it, was introduced in the beginning of the reign of Richard I., and prevailed till the end of that of Edward I.; in its progress it assumed a character peculiarly its own, by which it is easily distinguished from the later Norman: the purest specimen is Salisbury cathedral. The decorated English style was introduced at the beginning of the reign of Edward II., and continued till the end of that of Edward III.; the chapter-house at York is, perhaps, the richest and the purest specimen. The later English style was introduced in the reign of Richard II., attained its highest degree of perfection in that of Henry VII., and continued in considerable purity till the end of the reign of Henry VIII., since which period there is scarcely any building entirely of that character; the finest specimen is Henry the Seventh's chapel at Westminster.

The MAPS accompanying the work are engraved on steel plates, from drawings made from the best authorities, and corrected up to the present time. The SEALS of the several cities, boroughs, corporate towns, bishopricks, universities, colleges, &c., are engraved from drawings made from impressions in wax, furnished by the respective corporate bodies; and, notwithstanding they have generally been either enlarged or reduced to one scale, for the sake of uniformity, great care has been taken to preserve, in every instance, an exact fac-simile of the original. The mutilated state of many of the seals rendered it almost impossible to decypher the legends; but this difficulty has been kindly removed by Sir George Nayler, and other gentlemen at the Heralds' College, who have also furnished the ARMS of several of the towns.

The Proprietors cannot indulge the hope that, in a work of such magnitude, compiled from such a variety of sources, and containing notices so numerous and diversified, some errors have not occurred: indeed, the information collected upon the spot, even from the most intelligent persons, has frequently been so contradictory, as to require much labour and perseverance to reconcile and verify it. They have, however, regardless of expense, used the most indefatigable exertions to attain correctness, and to render the work as complete as possible; and they, therefore, trust that occasional inaccuracies will receive the indulgence of the Subscribers, who both in number and respectability are greater than have hitherto appeared in support of any similar undertaking.

In conclusion, they beg respectfully to inform those gentlemen who have also subscribed for the Dictionaries of the remaining portions of the United Kingdom, that the Survey of Wales is nearly completed, and that surveys of Scotland and Ireland are also in progress; and that they will thankfully acknowledge the receipt of any original information respecting any town or district in those countries.

TOPOGRAPHICAL DICTIONARY

OF

ABB

ABBAS-COMBE, a parish in the hundred of HORRTHORNE, county of SOMERSET, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. by W.) from Wincanton, containing, with Temple-Combe, 458 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Wells, and diocese of Bath and Wells, rated in the king's books at £9. 9. $4\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of the Bishop of Worcester. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. At Temple-Combe was formerly a preceptory of Knights Templars, which, at the dissolution, had a revenue of £128. 7. 9.

ABBERLEY, a parish in the lower division of the hundred of DODDINGTREE, county of WORCESTER, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. S. W.) from Stourport, containing 574 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Salop, and diocese of Hereford, rated in the king's books at £11. 10. $2\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of R. Bromley, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Michael. The village of Abberley is situated in a valley to the right of the road leading from Worcester to Ludlow. The summits of the surrounding hills afford delightful prospects, and on the declivities are fine sheep-walks and thriving plantations. Coal of excellent quality, and some limestone, are found in the neighbourhood. A court leet is held annually. A charity school is supported by the daughters of Col. Bromley. William Walsh, the poet, and a correspondent of Pope and Addison, was born here, in 1663.

ABBERTON, a parish in the hundred of WINS-
TREE, county of ESSEX, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S.) from Colchester, containing 203 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Colchester, and diocese of London, rated in the king's books at £14. 7. $8\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of the Crown. The church is dedicated to St. Andrew. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists.

ABBERTON, a parish in the upper division of the hundred of PERSHORE, county of WORCESTER, 7 miles (N. E. by N.) from Pershore, containing 82 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Worcester, rated in the king's books at £5. 8. $1\frac{1}{2}$., endowed with £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of Mrs. Sheldon. Here is a mineral spring, the water of which is bitter and cathartic, being somewhat similar to that at Cheltenham.

VOL. I.

ABB

ABBERWICK, a township in the parish of EDLINGHAM, northern division of COQUETDALE ward, county of NORTHUMBERLAND, 4 miles (W.) from Alnwick, containing 125 inhabitants. Here is a small endowed school.

ABBOTS-ANN, a parish partly in the hundred of WHERWELL, but chiefly in the hundred of ANDOVER, Andover division of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. W. by W.) from Andover, containing, with the tything of Little-Ann, which is in the hundred of Wherwell, 526 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Winchester, rated in the king's books at £42. 17. 6., and in the patronage of Sir James Burrough and the Rev. Thomas Burrough. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. Here is a small endowed school.

ABBOTSBURY, a parish (formerly a market town) in the hundred of UGGS-COMBE, Dorchester division of the county of DORSET, $8\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. S. W.) from Dorchester, and 128 (S. W. by W.) from London, containing 907 inhabitants. The name of this place is evidently derived from its ancient possessors, the abbots of the monastery of St. Peter, supposed to have been founded, in 1044, by Orcus, or Orking, steward of the household to Canute the Great, and Tola his wife, for monks of the Benedictine order. It occupied a large extent of ground: and its revenue at the dissolution was £485. 3. 5.: there are still some remains, consisting of a gateway and portions of the walls. At the dissolution it was granted to Sir Giles Strangeways, and on its site was erected a mansion, which, having been garrisoned for the king in 1644, was attacked by Sir Anthony Ashley Cooper, and burnt to the ground. The church was also occupied by a party of royalists, who surrendered before it sustained any damage. The town, situated in a valley surrounded by lofty hills, near the sea-shore, consists of three streets, partially paved, and is well supplied with water: the western part of it was consumed by fire in 1706. Fishing is the chief occupation of the inhabitants, great quantities of mackerel being taken on the sea-coast. The weaving of cotton, which was introduced here about thirty years since, has of late much declined. The market, which was on Thursday, has fallen into disuse: a fair, for sheep and toys, is held on the 10th of July. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Dorset, and diocese of Bristol, rated in the king's books at £10, endowed with £600 private benefaction, and £600 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Earl of Ilchester. The church, dedicated to St. Nicholas, is a large handsome structure, in the later style of English architecture, with a square embattled tower, and is supposed to have contained the remains of the founder of the abbey and his wife, which were removed hither from the conventual church at the dissolution. A school, originally founded for twenty boys, was further endowed, in 1754, by Mrs. Horner, with £21 per annum, for instructing ten additional boys. A charity school for clothing and educating twenty girls, instituted a few years since, is supported by the Countess of Ilchester, who has also established an infant school. St. Catherine's chapel, supposed to have been erected in the reign of Edward IV., stands on an eminence south-west of the town, and serves as a landmark: it is built wholly of freestone dug out of the hill on which it is situated; the roof is finely groined, and on each side is a handsome porch. Between this and the shore is a large decoy for wild fowl, and near it an extensive swannery, the property of the Earl of Ilchester. About a mile and a half to the west of Abbotsbury is an ancient intrenchment, occupying an area of nearly twenty acres; and near the town is a cromlech. The stones in the walls of the houses, which are obtained from quarries near the sea-shore, contain vast quantities of shells of marine animals.

ABBOTSHAM, a parish in the hundred of SHEBBEAR, county of DEVON, 2 miles (W.) from Bideford, containing 386 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Barnstaple, and diocese of Exeter, rated in the king's books at £16. 4. 7., and in the patronage of the Crown. The church is dedicated to St. Helen.

ABBOT-SIDE (HIGH), a township in the parish of AYSGARTH, western division of the wapentake of HANG, North riding of the county of YORK, 1½ mile (N. W. by W.) from Flawes, containing, with the chapelry of Hardrow, and the hamlets of Cotterdale, Lither skew, Lund, Sedbusk, Show, and Simonstone, 641 inhabitants. The river Ure, on which are several beautiful waterfalls, rises in this township.

ABBOT-SIDE (LOW), a township in the parish of AYSGARTH, western division of the wapentake of HANG, North riding of the county of YORK, containing 181 inhabitants. Whitfield Gill, in which is the picturesque waterfall called Whitfield Force, separates High Abbot-Side from this township. Here is an almshouse for six widows.

ABBOTSLEY, a parish in the hundred of TOSLAND, county of HUNTINGDON, 4¼ miles (S. E.) from St. Neots, containing 392 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Huntingdon, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £8. 17., and in the patronage of the Master and Fellows, of Balliol College, Oxford. The church is dedicated to St. Margaret.

ABBOTSTON, a parish in the hundred of BOUNTISBOROUGH, Fawley division of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, 2½ miles (N. W.) from New Alresford. The population is returned with Itchin-Stoke. The living is a rectory, united to the vicarage of Itchin-Stoke, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Winchester, rated in the king's books at £13. 6. 8. The church is desecrated.

ABDASTON, a parish in the northern division of the hundred of PIREHILL, county of STAFFORD, comprising the townships of Abdaston, Bishop's Offlow, Flashbrook, and Tunstall, and containing 596 inhabitants, of which number, 157 are in the township of Abdaston, 4¼ miles (W. by S.) from Eccleshall. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the peculiar jurisdiction and patronage of the Dean of Lichfield, endowed with £400 and £15 per annum private benefaction, and £1400 parliamentary grant. The church is dedicated to St. Margaret. In 1724, John Wright bequeathed a small portion of land for the support and education of the poor; and, in 1764, Richard Whitworth gave a house and land for similar purposes.

ABDON, a parish in the hundred of MUNSLow, county of SALOP, 9¼ miles (N. E. by N.) from Ludlow, containing 157 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Salop, and diocese of Hereford, rated in the king's books at £3. 6. 8., endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Earl of Pembroke. The church is dedicated to St. Margaret.

ABERFORD, a parish (formerly a market town) in the lower division of the wapentake of SKYRACK, West riding of the county of YORK, comprising the greater part of the township of Aberford (two portions of which are detached from the parish, one being in the liberty of St. Peter of York, and the other in the parish of Sherburn, upper division of the wapentake of Barkstone-Ash), and the townships of Parlington and Sturton-Grange, and containing 900 inhabitants, of which number, 579 are in that part of the township of Aberford, which is in this parish, 16 miles (S. W.) from York, and 186½ (N. N. W.) from London, on the road to Carlisle. The town is built on the gentle acclivity of a rock of limestone, near the small river Cock, a stream abounding with trout and eels, over which is a handsome stone bridge. It consists principally of one long street: the houses are in general built of stone, and many of them are handsome; the air is pure and salubrious, and the environs, which furnish agreeable promenades, are thickly studded with elegant villas and thriving plantations. There are extensive strata of limestone, and a productive coal mine, in the neighbourhood. The market, formerly on Wednesday, has been discontinued: fairs are held on the last Monday in April and May, the first Monday in October, the first Monday after the 18th of that month, and the first Monday after the 1st of November. Constables and other officers are appointed at the court leet of the lord of the manor. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of York, rated in the king's books at £6. 1. 8., endowed with £400 private benefaction, and £400 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Provost and Fellows of Oriel College, Oxford. The church, dedicated to St. Richard, is an ancient structure, exhibiting portions in the early, decorated, and later styles of English architecture. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. A National school has been erected on the site of one formerly endowed by Lady Elizabeth Hastings. At the distance of a mile north of the town are vestiges of Castle-Cary, an ancient Norman fortification.

ABERGAVERN, a market town and parish partly in the upper, but chiefly in the lower, division of the hundred of ABERGAVERN, county of MONMOUTH, 16 miles (W. by N.) from Monmouth, and 145 (W. by N.) from London, on the road to Milford-Haven, containing, with the hamlets of Hardwicke and Lloyndŷ, 3592 inhabitants. This was the Gobannium of Antoninus, a Roman station so called from the river Gobannius, now the Gavenny, from which the present name of the town is formed, by prefixing the word Aber, denoting its situation near the mouth of that river. Soon after the Conquest, a castle was erected here by Hameline de Balun, or Baladun, one of William's followers, who also founded a priory for Benedictine monks, in honour of the Blessed Virgin, the revenue of which at the dissolution was £59. 4.: it stood in Monk-street, the site being now occupied by a modern dwelling, called the Priory House. Of the castle, the only remains are the exterior walls, which appear to have been erected in the time of Henry II., after it had been destroyed by the Welch: within these a neat modern structure has been erected for a residence. The town is beautifully situated at the extremity of a pass where the mountains abruptly terminate, and is watered by the rivers Usk, Gavenny, and Kibby, over the first of which is a beautiful ancient bridge of fifteen arches: it is lighted with gas, and well supplied with water, conveyed into the houses by pipes from springs in the vicinity. The streets are narrow, and the houses irregularly built; but considerable improvements have been made by the enlargement of the market-place, and the removal of numerous projections in front of the buildings. The salubrity of the air and the picturesque scenery attract numerous visitors during the summer months. Assemblies are occasionally held in the winter, chiefly for the promotion of charitable purposes. The trade is principally in wool, a considerable quantity being sold on the market days during the months of June and July. The mountains in the neighbourhood abound with coal and iron-stone, and in the surrounding districts numerous iron works have been established, which are rapidly increasing. The Monmouthshire and Brecon canal, passing within half a mile of the town, affords great facility in distributing the produce of the mines to every part of the kingdom, and to the south of France. The market days are Tuesday and Saturday, the latter principally for corn: during the months of June and July a great quantity of wool is brought to the market. The fairs are held on the third Tuesday in March, May 14th (which is the principal), June 24th, the Tuesday before July 20th, September 25th, and November 19th.

The charter of incorporation, by which the government of the town was vested in a bailiff, recorder, and twenty-seven burgesses, having become forfeited in the reign of William III., the town is within the jurisdiction of the county magistrates, who hold a petty session every Tuesday. A court for the recovery of debts under 40s. is held under the lord of the manor, the authority of which extends over a district ten miles in circuit. The general quarter sessions of the county were formerly held here, but they have been removed to Usk. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Llandaff, rated in the king's books at £10. 0. 7½., endowed with £600 royal bounty, and in the patronage of Charles Kemeys Tynte, Esq. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a spacious structure in the Norman style of architecture, and contains several very ancient monuments, principally of the Herberts. There are two places of worship each for Baptists and Independents, and one each for Wesleyan Methodists and Roman Catholics. The free grammar school, founded by Henry VIII., in 1543, and formerly under the management of the corporation, was, on the forfeiture of their charter, placed under the control of the Master and Fellows of Jesus' College, Oxford, who appoint the master, whose salary is £40 per annum, giving preference to a fellow of that college. The number of scholars on the foundation is eighteen: the school-house was formerly the parochial church of St. John, which was converted to this purpose at the dissolution. About the middle of the last century it was rebuilt, but still, from its embattled tower, it presents the appearance of an ecclesiastical structure. William Prichard, in 1623, founded a scholarship in Jesus' College, Oxford, to which boys educated at this school are eligible. There are also a Lancasterian and several Sunday schools. A variety of Roman coins, among which was a gold Otho, some bricks inscribed "Leg. II. Aug.," and a sudatory, have been discovered in the town; and within half a mile of it are the remains of a Roman camp, near which was a chapel of ease, now converted into a farm-house. At Lloyndŷ is a mineral spring, said to have been efficacious in the cure of scrofula. Abergavenny confers the title of earl on the family of Neville; the earldom, like that of Arundel, is a local dignity, attached to the possession of the castle, and the only one, now subsisting, of those baronies with which the Norman warriors, who assisted in the subjugation of Wales, were rewarded.

ABERYSTWYTH, a parish in the upper division of the hundred of ABERGAVERN, county of MONMOUTH, 8 miles (S. W. by W.) from Abergavenny, containing 800 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, united to the rectory of Llanwenarth, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Llandaff.

ABINGDON, a borough and market town, having separate and exclusive jurisdiction, locally in the hundred of Hormer, county of BERKS, of which it is the chief town, 6 miles (S.) from Oxford, 26 (N. W. by N.) from Reading, and 56 (W. N. W.) from London, containing, exclusively of that part of the parish of St. Helen which is in the hundred of Hormer, 5137 inhabitants, according to the census of 1821, since which period the population has considerably increased. This place, according to a manuscript in the Cottonian library, quoted by Dugdale, was, in the time of the Britons, a city of considerable importance, and distinguished as a royal residence, to which the people resorted to assist at the great councils of the nation. By the Saxons it was called Scovechesham, or Sewsham; but acquired the name of Abendon, the town of the abbey, on the removal hither, in 680, of a monastic institution previously founded at Bagley wood, now an extra-parochial liberty in the vicinity, by Cissa, viceroy of Centwine, ninth king of Wessex, on which Ceadwalla, his son and successor, bestowed the town and its appendages. After the establishment of the monastery, Offa, King of Mercia, on a visit to Abingdon, was so much pleased with the situation, that he erected a palace here, in which he and his immediate successors, Egferth and Cenwulf, occasionally resided. The monastery continued to flourish till 871, when it was destroyed by the Danes. In 955, Edred, grandson of Alfred, laid the first stone of a new monastery, which was completed after his death by the abbot Ethelwold, and his successor Ordgar. The extent of its endowments and privileges, subsequently augmented by Edgar and Canute the Great, raised it to the dignity of a mitred abbey. William the Conqueror celebrated Easter at Abingdon, in 1084, where he was sumptuously entertained by Robert D'Oilly, one of the most powerful barons of the time, under whose inspection he left his son Henry to be educated in this convent, where the prince received that education which afterwards procured him the surname of Beauclerc. At the dissolution the revenue of the abbey was £1876. 10. 9. A nunnery was also founded here by Cilla, niece of Cissa, over which she presided till her death, when it was removed to Witham; the site of it was afterwards given, by Edward VI., to Christ's hospital in this town. The Guild of the Holy Cross, established here at a very early period, was dissolved in 1547, when its revenue amounted to £85. 15. 6. In the early part of the civil war, Charles I. garrisoned Abingdon, where he established the head-quarters of his cavalry. On the retreat of the royal forces to Oxford, in 1644, the Earl of Essex took possession of the town, and garrisoned it for the parliament; and, a few days afterwards, Waller's army, which had been stationed near Wantage, entered Abingdon, and, among other excesses, destroyed the cross in the market-place, at which, in 1641, the accommodation with the Scots was celebrated by two thousand choristers: this cross is particularly noticed by Camden for its beauty, and was the model of one afterwards erected at Coventry. Many unsuccessful attempts were subsequently made by the royalists, to regain possession of the town; the garrison, on these occasions, put every Irish prisoner to death, without trial, whence the expression "Abingdon Law."

The town, which is pleasantly situated at the influx of the small river Ock into the Thames, is handsomely built, and consists of several spacious streets diverging from the market-place; it is well paved and lighted, and amply supplied with water. Burford and Culham bridges, near the town, with the causeway between them, were constructed by the fraternity of the Holy Cross, in the reign and by license of Henry V. (the ferry being at that time dangerous for passengers and cattle); the former have been recently widened and improved by voluntary contributions, and the causeway, which is close to the town, and between the two bridges, forms a very pleasant promenade; races take place in September, when assemblies are held in the council-chamber. The manufacture of woollens, formerly carried on here to a great extent, has quite declined. Malt-ing is now the principal business, which, with the dressing of hemp, and the making of sacking and sail-cloth, constitutes the chief employment of the labouring classes.

Several wharfs and warehouses have recently been constructed, where the Wilts and Berks canal joins the Thames, near its confluence with the Ock. The market days are Monday, chiefly for corn, and Friday, for provisions only. Fairs for horses and horned cattle are held on the first Monday in Lent, May 6th, June 20th, August 5th, September 19th, the Monday before Old Michaelmas day (a statute fair), Monday after October 12th (a great market), and December 11th.

By a charter of incorporation granted by Philip and Mary, in 1557, the government of the borough is vested in a mayor, high steward, recorder, twelve principal and sixteen secondary burgesses, two bailiffs, a town clerk, and chamberlain. The mayor is chosen, on the 1st of September, from among the principal burgesses, two of whom are nominated by the inhabitants being potwal-lers, and returned to the chamber, which is composed of principal burgesses only, who elect one of them to the office; and two of the same body are immediately afterwards chosen justices of the peace for the ensuing year, by a common council, comprising the whole corporate body; and on the 29th of September, when the mayor is sworn into office, his immediate predecessor is sworn senior magistrate for the following year. The mayor, recorder, and justices hold a court of session quarterly, and the mayor and justices a petty session weekly on Tuesday, on which day the mayor also holds a court of record for the recovery of debts under £10. Courts leet are held by the mayor within a month after Easter and Michaelmas, the former having view of Frankpledge. This borough returns one member to parliament: the elective franchise is vested in the inhabitants paying scot and lot not receiving alms: the mayor is the returning officer. The market-house is a spacious and elegant building of freestone, erected in 1678, having a commodious hall in which the county court and the nisi prius court at the assizes are held, and public business connected with the borough or county is transacted. The county bridewell, a handsome stone edifice erected in 1811, at an expense of £26,000, comprises a neat court-house, in which the crown court at the summer assizes and the July county sessions are held; the October sessions are held here and at Reading alternately. The members for the county, who are nominated at Reading, are elected here; and the county magistrates hold a petty session on Monday in every fortnight for the Abingdon division.

Abingdon comprises the parishes of St. Helen and St. Nicholas, in the archdeaconry of Berks, and diocese of Salisbury; the former includes part of the township of Shippon and Norcott, and the whole of Sandford Barton and Pumney; and the latter, the remainder of Shippon and Norcott, also some lands in Sunningwell and Bayworth, which are all without the limits of the borough. The living of St Helen's is a vicarage, rated in the king's books at £7, and in the patronage of the Crown: the church is a handsome structure, in the early style of English architecture, with a square embattled tower, surmounted by a lofty spire. The living of St. Nicholas' is a sinecure rectory, the vicarage being annexed to that of St. Helen's, rated in the king's books at £29. 11. 3.: the church, built about the close of the thirteenth, or commencement of the fourteenth, century, possesses some remains of Norman architecture. Mr. Wigglesworth left lands and tenements in Abingdon, for the support of a lecture in St. Helen's church, to be delivered every Saturday evening from Michaelmas to Lady-day, and at the church at Maicham (a village two miles and a half distant) on every Sunday morning from Lady-day till Michaelmas. There are places of worship for Baptists, the Society of Friends, Independents, and Wesleyan Methodists. The free grammar school, for the education of "Threescore and thirteen" boys, was founded, in 1563, by John Royse, and endowed with two messuages in Birchin-lane, London, then known by the signs of the Bell and the Unicorn, which were afterwards destroyed by fire: the ground is now occupied by part of the premises belonging to the London Assurance Company, out of the rent of which the head master's salary is paid: according to the directions of the founder, the master is allowed to receive ten private pupils. In 1608, William Bennett of "Marlborowe" left lands in "Brodeblunsdon" for the maintenance of six poor scholars in Royse's free grammar school; these boys, who are elected by the Master and Governors of Christ's Hospital in this town, are, from the increase of the funds, clothed and instructed also in writing and arithmetic, and a handsome premium is paid with them when apprenticed. In 1609, Thomas Tesdale gave certain lands in the county of Warwick, to maintain an usher. The school is entitled to six scholarships at Pembroke College, Oxford, founded by Thomas Tésdale, two to be filled by the founder's kin, and the others from Abingdon school; and to four scholarships at the same college, founded by Richard Wightwick, two for the founder's kin. Preference is given to boys on Bennett's foundation, but, in default, the other free scholars, and the master's private pupils are eligible; though, by a rule of the present head master, the latter must have been two years in the school to be qualified as candidates. In 1756, Robert Mayott bequeathed to the corporation two meadows near Oxford, for the education of poor children of Abingdon; ten boys and six girls, who are nominated by the mayor and principal burgesses, are the present number on this foundation, and they are clothed, educated, and apprenticed. John Provost, in 1703, bequeathed property for instructing ten boys in reading and writing, and for apprenticing poor children; the present number are, from the increase of the funds, clothed and taught arithmetic, in addition to the founder's directions. In 1713, Richard Belcher gave £14 per annum, and, in 1753, Joseph Tomkins £100 South Sea stock, for the instruction of children in the borough. There are also a National and a British school; to the former, Edward Beasley, Esq., in 1826, bequeathed £200.

Christ's hospital, on the west side of St. Helen's church, erected in 1446, originally belonged to the fraternity of the Holy Cross, on the dissolution of which establishment, in 1547, the inhabitants applied, through Sir John Mason, to King Edward VI., for the restoration of their lost estates, and the foundation of an hospital for the relief of the poor of the town; in compliance with which application His Majesty, by letters patent, in 1553, founded the hospital under its present name, and incorporated twelve persons, for its government by the name of "The Master and Governors of the Hospital of Christ." It consists of almshouses for six poor men and six women and a nurse, with cloisters and a handsome hall, in which the master and governors hold their meetings, and where prayers are read morning and evening to the inmates. An almshouse was built, in 1718, for eighteen poor men or women; and another, near the river Isis, for six poor men or women, to which Mr. Beasley, in 1826, bequeathed £600 stock, the interest to be paid weekly. Other donations have at different times been made to the hospital, and are disposed of as directed by the donors. St. John's hospital, in the Vineyard, was endowed before the Reformation, for six poor men, and rebuilt by the corporation in 1801. B. Bedwell Esq. was a liberal contributor to it; and, in 1826, Mr. Beasley added £600 stock to the endowment. An almshouse near St. Helen's church was erected, in 1707, by Charles Twitty, for the maintenance of three men and three women, who are elected by the minister, churchwardens, and overseers of the parish of St. Helen; bequests of £200 each, by John Bedwell, in 1799, and by Samuel Cripps, in 1819, and of £600 three per cent. stock by Mr. Beasley, in 1826, have been added to the original endowment: there are also almshouses for four men and four women, endowed, in 1733, by Benjamin Tomkins. Various charitable bequests have been made to the poor of the town, the principal of which are, Mr. Frederick Klein's, by which, in pursuance of a decree of the court of Chancery, made in 1828, the interest of £1032. 12. 4. three per cent. stock is annually distributed, in the month of March, in small sums to the poor of the borough, by the mayor and principal burgesses; and £700 three per cents., bequeathed by Mr. Beasley, the dividends on which are given to the poor on Good Friday by the corporation. St. Edmund, Archbishop of Canterbury; Sir John Mason, British Ambassador at the court of France, and Chancellor of the University of Oxford; and the late Lord Colchester, were natives of this place. Abingdon confers the title of earl on the family of Bertie.

ABINGER, a parish in the first division of the hundred of WOTTON, county of SURREY, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S.W. by W.) from Dorking, containing 742 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Surrey, and diocese of Winchester, rated in the king's books at £12. 8. 1 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of Sir J. Evelyn, Bart. The church, dedicated to St. James, is in the early style of English architecture.

ABINGHALL, a parish in the hundred of St. BRIAVELLS, county of GLOUCESTER, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. by W.) from Newnham, containing 215 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Hereford, and diocese of Gloucester, rated in the king's books at £6. 6. 8., and in the patronage of the Rev. J. Probyn. The manufacture of paper, which is carried on to a considerable extent at Guns-mills, affords employment to from three hundred to five hundred persons of this parish and neighbourhood. A foundry for cannon balls formerly existed at this place. The church is dedicated to St. Michael. Here is a spring, the water of which is reputed to be efficacious in the cure of cutaneous eruptions.

ABINGTON, a parish in the hundred of SPELHOE, county of NORTHAMPTON, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (E. N. E.) from Northampton, containing 175 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Northampton, and diocese of Peterborough, rated in the king's books at £20, and in the patronage of J. H. Thursby, Esq. The church, dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul, exhibits various styles of English architecture.

ABINGTON in the CLAY, or ABINGTON-PIGOTS, a parish in the hundred of ARMINGFORD, county of CAMBRIDGE, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W.N.W.) from Royston, containing 233 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Ely, rated in the king's books at £16. 2. $3\frac{1}{2}$., endowed with £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of Dr. Pigott. The church is dedicated to St. Michael.

ABINGTON (GREAT), a parish in the hundred of CHILFORD, county of CAMBRIDGE, $2\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N.W.) from Linton, containing 337 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Ely, rated in the king's books at £7. 16. 3., and in the patronage of the Trustees of T. Mortlock, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Mary.

ABINGTON (LITTLE), a parish in the hundred of CHILFORD, county of CAMBRIDGE, $2\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N.W. by N.) from Linton, containing 257 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Ely, rated in the king's books at £7. 6. $5\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of the Bishop of Ely. The church is dedicated to St. Mary.

AB-KETTLEBY, a parish in the hundred of FRAMLAND, county of LEICESTER, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N.W. by N.) from Melton-Mowbray, containing, with the chapelry of Holwell, 319 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Leicester, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £15. 10. 5., and in the patronage of the Rev. Thomas Bingham. The church is dedicated to St. James.

ABLINGTON, a tything in that part of the parish of BIBURY which is in the hundred of BRIGHTWELL'S-BARROW, county of GLOUCESTER, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N.W. by N.) from Fairford, containing 127 inhabitants.

ABNEY, a hamlet in the parish of HOPE, hundred of HIGH PEAK, county of DERBY, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N.E.) from Tideswell, containing 143 inhabitants.

ABRAM, a township in that part of the parish of WIGAN which is in the hundred of WEST DERBY, county palatine of LANCASTER, $4\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N.N.E.) from Newton in Mackerfield, containing 504 inhabitants.

ABSON, or ABSTON, a parish in the hundred of PUCKLE-CHURCH, county of GLOUCESTER, $7\frac{1}{4}$ miles (E. by N.) from Bristol, containing, with the hamlet of Wick, 715 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, united to the vicarage of Puckle-Church, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Gloucester. The church is dedicated to St. James. The village is situated at the foot of a rocky hill, rising to the height of more than two hundred feet, and consisting of alternate beds of limestone and petrosilex. Roman coins, urns, bricks, &c., have been dug up; and here is an ancient camp, supposed to be of British origin.

ABTHORPE, a parish in the hundred of TOWCESTER, county of NORTHAMPTON, 3 miles (W. S.W.) from Towcester, containing, with the hamlets of Charlock and Fosote, 417 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Northampton, and diocese of Peterborough, endowed with £400 private benefaction, and £400 royal bounty, and in the patronage of Samuel Blencowe and others. The church is dedicated to St. John the Baptist. Jane Leeson, in 1646, bequeathed a rent-charge of £3 for the instruction of poor children.

ABY, a parish in the Marsh division of the hundred of CALCEWORTH, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, 3 miles (N. W. by W.) from Alford, containing, with the hamlet of Greenfield, 192 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, united in 1732, to the rectory of Belleau, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £6. 3. 6., and endowed with £200 royal bounty. The church is dedicated to All Saints.

ACASTER-MALBIS, a parish partly in the ainsty of the city of YORK, but chiefly in the wapentake of OUZE and DERWENT, East riding of the county of YORK, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. by W.) from York, containing, with the township of Naburn, 657 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of York, rated in the king's books at £5. 6. $5\frac{1}{2}$., endowed with £400 royal bounty, and 200 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of P. B. Thomson, Esq. The church is dedicated to the Holy Trinity. A school is endowed with land given by John Knowles, in 1603, which is vested in feoffees, who appoint fourteen poor children on the foundation. The navigable river Ouse passes near the village.

ACASTER-SELBY, a township in that part of the parish of STILLINGFLEET which is in the ainsty of the city, and East riding of the county, of YORK, $7\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. by W.) from York, containing 188 inhabitants. This place formed part of the possessions of the abbot of Selby: the village is pleasantly situated on the banks of the navigable river Ouse. A college for a provost and two or three fellows, one of whom was to instruct children, was founded here by Robert Stillington; at the dissolution its revenue was £33. 10. 4. Here is a free school which is supported by a small endowment.

ACCONBURY, or ACORNBURY, a parish in the upper division of the hundred of WORMELOW, county of HEREFORD, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S.) from Hereford, containing 148 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy with that of Callow, annexed to the vicarage of Dewesall, in the peculiar jurisdiction of the Dean of Hereford, endowed with £400 royal bounty. The church is dedicated to St. John the Baptist. A nunnery of the order of St. Augustine was founded here, in the reign of John, by Margery, wife of Walter de Lacy, to the honour of the Holy Cross, the revenue of which, at the dissolution, was £75. 7. $5\frac{1}{2}$.; the remains have been converted into a farm-house, and some stone coffins are still preserved. On the summit of Acconbury hill are traces of a large Roman encampment, of a square form, the rampart of which, on the east side, is plainly discernible.

ACCRINGTON, a considerable village, in that part of the parish of WHALLEY which is in the higher division of the hundred of BLACKBURN, county palatine of LANCASTER, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. N. W.) from Haslingdon, comprising the chapelry of Old, and the township of New, Accrington, containing 5370 inhabitants of which number, 1261 are in Old Accrington, $6\frac{1}{4}$ miles (E.), and 4109 in New Accrington, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. by S.), from Blackburn. Within the last few years this place has acquired considerable importance, from its situation in the centre of the calico-printing business. Several large establishments for spinning cotton thread, and weaving and printing calico, have been formed; in consequence of which the population has increased nearly twofold. The living of Old Accrington is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Chester, endowed with £1000 private benefaction, £1000 royal bounty, and £1000 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Vicar of Whalley. The chapel was taken down and rebuilt upon a larger scale in 1826. There are places of worship for Baptists, Wesleyan Methodists, and Swedenborgians. A National school was erected by subscription in 1806, in which about one hundred and thirty children are educated. Jonathan Peel, Esq., in 1824, gave £1000 towards its support.

ACHURCH, county of NORTHAMPTON.—See THORPE-ACHURCH.

ACKLAM, a parish in the wapentake of BUCKROSE, East riding of the county of YORK, comprising the townships of Acklam with Barthorpe, and Leavening, and containing 683 inhabitants, of which number, 389 are in the township of Acklam with Barthorpe, which is partly within the liberty of St. Peter of York, $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S.) from New Malton. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the peculiar jurisdiction and patronage of the Chancellor of the Cathedral Church of York, rated in the king's books at £5. The church is dedicated to St. John the Baptist. There are places of worship for Wesleyan, and Primitive Methodists.

ACKLAM, a parish in the western division of the liberty of LANGBAURGH, North riding of the county of YORK, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. E. by E.) from Stockton upon Tees, containing 105 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Cleveland, and diocese of York, endowed with £400 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Archbishop of York.

ACKLINGTON, a township in that part of the parish of WARKWORTH which is in the eastern division of MORPETH ward, county of NORTHUMBERLAND, $10\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. S. E.) from Alnwick, containing 269 inhabitants. Coal is obtained here.

ACKLINGTON-PARK, a township in that part of the parish of WARKWORTH which is in the eastern division of MORPETH ward, county of NORTHUMBERLAND, 9 miles (S. S. E.) from Alnwick, containing 125 inhabitants.

ACKTON, a township in that part of the parish of FEATHERSTONE which is in the lower division of the wapentake of AGBRIGG, West riding of the county of YORK, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W.) from Pontefract, containing 72 inhabitants.

ACKWORTH, a parish in the upper division of the wapentake of OSGOLDCROSS, West riding of the county of YORK, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. S. W.) from Pontefract, containing 1575 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of York, rated in the king's books at £22. 1. 0 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of the King, as Duke of Lancaster. The church, dedicated to St. Cuthbert, is a small neat building, exhibiting various portions of ancient architecture. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. Here was a school, originally an appendage to the Foundling Hospital. In 1777, the premises, with eighty-five acres of land, were purchased by the Society of Friends, and converted into a school for the education of youth in their own religious principles. Here is also a school, endowed with £20 a year, for the education of twenty children, besides an hospital for six women.

ACLE, a parish in the hundred of WALSHEAM, county of NORFOLK, 11 miles (E.) from Norwich, containing 698 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £20, and in the patronage of Lord Calthorpe. The church is dedicated to St. Edmund. The village is situated on a gentle eminence, on the banks of the navigable river Bure, near its junction with the Yare. A stone bridge of one arch, called Waybridge, forms here an important pass, there being no other bridge between this and the mouth of the Yare. At the Conquest Acle became a fief of the Crown, and was granted by the Conqueror to Roger Bigod, who obtained for it the privilege of a market and fair; and further advantages, including freedom from all tolls, and suits of shire and of hundred, were bestowed on the inhabitants by Richard II. At Waybridge, a small priory of Augustine canons was founded by Roger Bigod, Earl of Norfolk, in the reign of Edward I.; at the dissolution the revenue was £7. 13. 4.

ACOMB, a parish in the ainsty of the city, and East riding of the county, of YORK, comprising the townships of Acomb and Knapton, and containing 870 inhabitants, of which number, 783 are in the township of Acomb, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W.) from York. The living, a discharged vicarage, is a peculiar, rated in the king's books at £3. 9. 2., and endowed with £200 private benefaction, £200 royal bounty, and £600 parliamentary grant. The peculiar formerly belonged to the Treasurer of the Cathedral Church of York, but was surrendered, with the rectory, to the Crown in 1547; and in 1609 it was granted by James I. to Thomas Newark and his heirs. It now belongs to J. E. Baker, Esq., who has lately, by an application to the court of King's Bench, established his right to appoint a commissary to the peculiar ecclesiastical jurisdiction. The church, dedicated to St. Stephen, is a small ancient structure, occupying an elevated situation. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. A school, built by subscription among the inhabitants, is conducted on the National plan.

ACOMB (EAST), a township in the parish of BYWELL ST. PETER, eastern division of TINDALE ward, county of NORTHUMBERLAND, 8 miles (E.) from Hexham, containing 51 inhabitants.

ACOMB (WEST), a township in the parish of ST. JOHN LEE, southern division of TINDALE ward, county of NORTHUMBERLAND, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (N.) from Hexham, containing 533 inhabitants. It is bounded on the south by the river Tyne: coal is obtained within its limits.

ACRISE, a parish partly in the hundred of FOLKESTONE, but chiefly in that of LONINGBOROUGH, lathe of SHEPWAY, county of KENT, 5 miles (N. N. W.) from Folkestone, containing 186 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Canterbury, rated in the king's books at £7, and in the patronage of the Crown. The church is dedicated to St. Martin.

ACTON, a township in the parish of WEAVERHAM, second division of the hundred of EDDISBURY, county palatine of CHESTER, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. N. W.) from Northwich, containing 301 inhabitants. The Nantwich branch of the Chester canal passes through this township.

ACTON, a parish in the hundred of NANTWICH, county palatine of CHESTER, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (N. W. by W.) from Nantwich, comprising the townships of Acton, Aston juxta Mondrum, Austerson, Baddington, Brindley, Burland, Cholmondstone, Cool-Pilate, Eddleston, Faddiley, Henhull, Hurleston, Newhall, Poole, Stoke, and Worleston, and containing 3777 inhabitants, of which number, 273 are in the township of Acton. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Chester, rated in the king's books at £19. 9. 7., and in the patronage of the Earl of Dysart. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, exhibits some curiously ornamented windows, and the tower is partly in the early style of English architecture. In October 1643, the church and Dorfold hall were occupied by the royalists, on whose retreat both were garrisoned by the parliament. They were afterwards captured by the king's troops under Lord Byron, but on the raising of the siege of Nantwich, Sir Thomas Fairfax compelled the garrisons to surrender. Among the prisoners were sixty officers, including Col. Monk, afterwards Duke of Albemarle. Mr. Wilbraham, of Woodhay, left property for the endowment of two almshouses here, and others at Nantwich: there is also an endowed free school.

ACTON, a parish in the Kensington division of the hundred of OSSULSTONE, county of MIDDLESEX, 5 miles (W.) from London, containing 1929 inhabitants. The name is supposed to be derived from the Saxon word Ac, signifying oak, and tūn, a town; the neighbourhood having, in former times, abounded with timber of that description, and some land in the parish, from time immemorial, having been called Old Oak common. Previously to the battle of Brentford, in 1642, the Earls of Essex and Warwick had their headquarters here; and, on Cromwell's return to London, after the battle of Worcester, the lord president, the council of state, the members of the House of Commons, and the lord mayor, aldermen, and citizens of London, met him at this place, when the recorder of London delivered a congratulatory address. The village consists chiefly of one long street; it is watched by private subscription, and plentifully supplied with water. The houses in general are, from their antiquity, inferior to those in most other places within the same distance of the metropolis, but the whole place has a cleanly and cheerful appearance, and the air is considered particularly salubrious. The Paddington canal runs through the parish: a pleasure fair is held on Holy Thursday. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Middlesex, and diocese of London, rated in the king's books at £14, and in the patronage of the Bishop of London. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, which exhibits portions in the later style of English architecture, with modern insertions, was enlarged and repaired, at the expense of the inhabitants, in 1825. There is a place of worship for Independents, erected in 1815, and the detached buildings of a private mansion have been fitted up as a Roman Catholic chapel. A Lancasterian school has been erected near the church: and at that part of the village called East Acton are handsome almshouses, built and endowed by the Goldsmiths' Company, for twelve men and twelve women. In a garden, on Old Oak common, is a mineral spring, formerly held in general repute, but now disused.

ACTON, a joint township with Old Felton, in that part of the parish of FELTON which is in the eastern division of COQUETDALE ward, county of NORTHUMBER-LAND, $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S.) from Alnwick, containing, with Old Felton, 91 inhabitants.

ACTON, a parish in the hundred of BABERGH, county of SUFFOLK, 3 miles (N. E. by N.) from Sudbury, containing 555 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Sudbury, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £9. 6. 8., and in the patronage of Earl Howe. The church is dedicated to All Saints.

ACTON (IRON), a parish partly in the lower division of the hundred of GRUMBALD'S ASH, but chiefly in the lower division of the hundred of THORNBURY, county of GLOUCESTER, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. N. W.) from Chipping-Sodbury, containing 1122 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Gloucester, rated in the king's books at £16. 10., and in the patronage of the Dean and Canons of Christ Church, Oxford. The church, dedicated to St. James, is in the latest style of English architecture: the interior contains the tomb of Robert Poyntz, who is said to have erected the tower. In the churchyard there is a beautiful cross, raised on arches, but much mutilated. The parish derives the prefix to its name from some iron-works which formerly existed here. Fairs for cattle, horses, pigs, and cheese, are held on April 25th and September 13th.

ACTON-BEAUCHAMP, a parish in the upper division of the hundred of DODDINGTON, county of WORCESTER, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. E.) from Bromyard, containing 258 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Worcester, rated in the king's books at £4, and in the patronage of the Rev. Henry Berry. The church is dedicated to St. Giles. Courts leet and baron are occasionally held here. There are some mineral springs in the parish.

ACTON-BURNELL, a parish in the hundred of CONDOVER, county of Salop, $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. by N.) from Much-Wenlock, containing, with the chapelries of Acton-Pigot, and Ruckley with Langley, 305 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Salop, and diocese of Lichfield and Coventry, rated in the king's books at £6. 10., and in the patronage of Sir Edward Joseph Smythe, Bart. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. Here are some remains of an ancient castle, which belonged to the family of Burnell, from whom the place received the adjunct to its name. A great council, or parliament, was held here in the reign of Edward I., in 1283, at which a law, called the statute of Acton-Burnell, was enacted to facilitate the recovery of debts by merchants: the king and his court were accommodated at the castle, the residence of Robert Burnell, Bishop of Bath and Wells, and Lord High Chancellor: the lords met in the hall of the castle, and the commons in a very large barn belonging to Shrewsbury abbey.

ACTON-GRANGE, a township in the parish of RUNCORN, hundred of BUCKLOW, county palatine of CHESTER, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. W. by S.) from Warrington containing 148 inhabitants. The Mersey and Irwell canal, and the Duke of Bridgewater's canal, pass through the parish, its northern boundary being formed by the navigable river Mersey.

ACTON-PIGOT, a chapelry in the parish of ACTON-BURNELL, hundred of Condovery, county of SALOP, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. N. W.) from Much-Wenlock. The population is returned with the parish. The chapel is desecrated.

ACTON-REYNOLD, a township in that part of the parish of SHAWBURY which is within the liberty of SHREWSBURY, county of SALOP, $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N.N.E.) from Shrewsbury, containing 168 inhabitants.

ACTON-ROUND, a parish in the hundred of STOTTESDEN, county of SALOP, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S.S.E.) from Much-Wenlock, containing 214 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Salop, and diocese of Hereford, endowed with £200 private benefaction, £400 royal bounty, and £200 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Vicar of Much-Wenlock.

ACTON-SCOTT, a parish in the hundred of MUNSLow, county of SALOP, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. by E.) from Church-Stretton, containing 187 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Salop, and diocese of Hereford, rated in the king's books at £5. 10., and in the patronage of T. P. Stackhouse, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Margaret. The new turnpike road between Wenlock and Bishop's Castle passes through the parish.

ACTON-TRUSSELL, a chapelry in the parish of BASWICH, eastern division of the hundred of CUTTLESTONE, county of STAFFORD, 3 miles (N.N.E.) from Penkridge, containing, with Bednall, 562 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the peculiar jurisdiction of the Prebendary of Whittington and Baswich, in the Cathedral Church of Lichfield, and in the patronage of the Rev. J. Hamilton Molineaux. The chapel is dedicated to St. James. The Staffordshire and Worcestershire canal passes through the chapelry. The poor children are instructed in the National school at Penkridge.

ACTON-TURVILLE, a chapelry in the parish of TORMARTON, lower division of the hundred of GRUMBALD'S-ASH, county of GLOUCESTER, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E.) from Chipping-Sodbury, containing 215 inhabitants. The chapel is dedicated to St. Mary.

ADBASTON, county of STAFFORD.--See ABDASTON.

ADBEER, a hamlet in the parish of TRENT, hundred of HORETHORNE, county of SOMERSET, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N.E. by N.) from Yeovil. The population is returned with the parish. Here was formerly a chapel, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, which was demolished during the civil war in the reign of Charles I.

ADBOLTON, formerly a parish, now a hamlet in the parish of HOLME-PIERREPOINT, southern division of the wapentake of BINGHAM, county of NOTTINGHAM, 3 miles (E.S.E.) from Nottingham. The population is returned with the parish. The living, a discharged rectory, rated in the king's books at £2. 13. 9., was, in 1707, consolidated with the rectory of Holme-Pierrepoint. The church is desecrated.

ADDERBURY (EAST), a parish in the hundred of BLOXHAM, county of OXFORD, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. by E.) from Deddington, comprising the chapelries of Barford St. John, Bodicott, and Milton, and the township of West Adderbury, and containing 2277 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford, rated in the king's books at £21. 4. 9½., and in the patronage of the Warden and Fellows of New College, Oxford. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, exhibits various styles of architecture, and contains some interesting specimens of early sculpture. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. Here is a school, with an endowment of £20 per annum; and, in 1737, Lady Mary Bertie bequeathed a rent-charge of £10 for teaching ten poor children to read.

ADDERBURY (WEST), a township in the parish of EAST ADDERBURY, hundred of BLOXHAM, county of OXFORD, 2 miles (N.) from Deddington, containing 402 inhabitants.

ADDERLY, a parish in the Drayton division of the hundred of BRADFORD (North), county of SALOP, 4 miles (N. by W.) from Drayton in Hales, containing 378 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Salop, and diocese of Lichfield and Coven-try, rated in the king's books at £11. 6. 0½., and in the patronage of H. C. Cotton, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Peter. In 1719, the Rev. Mr. Adams bequeathed a small portion of land for the education of the poor children of this parish.

ADDERSTONE, a township in the parish of BAMBROUGH, northern division of BAMBROUGH ward, county of NORTHUMBERLAND, 3 miles (S.E. by S.) from Belford, containing 342 inhabitants.

ADDINGHAM, a parish in LEATH ward, county of CUMBERLAND, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (S.E.) from Kirk-Oswald, comprising the townships of Gamblesby, Glassonby, Hunsonby with Winskill, and Little Salkeld, and containing 694 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Carlisle, rated in the king's books at £9. 4. 7., and in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Carlisle. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, stands detached in the township of Glassonby. At Gamblesby are places of worship for Independents and Wesleyan Methodists, also one for the latter at Hunsonby, erected about 1823, by Mr. Thos. Hall. There are well endowed free schools at Hunsonby and Maughamby. Dr. Paley, the celebrated theological writer, held this living from 1792 to 1805, the period of his death. At Little Salkeld is a remarkable monument, supposed to be Druidical, commonly called "Long Meg and her Daughters," consisting of sixty-seven stones, varying in shape and height, which form a circle about three hundred and fifty feet in diameter. At the same place was anciently also a chapel, the site of which, according to tradition, was at a village called Addingham (which has long since disappeared), on the eastern bank of the river Eden, which forms the western boundary of the parish, where human bones, crosses, and other remains, have been dug up. The Roman road, called Maiden-way, may be traced in many parts of its course through the parish. Here are quarries of red freestone.

ADDINGHAM, a parish comprising the township of Addingham, in the eastern division of the wapentake of STAINCLIFFE and EWCROSS, and part of the township of Beamsley, in the upper division of the wapentake of CLARO, West riding of the county of YORK, and containing 1650 inhabitants, of which number, 1570 are in the township of Addingham, 6 miles (E. by S.) from Skipton. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of York, rated in the king's books at £9. 7. 8½., endowed with £600 private benefaction, and £1100 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of Mrs. Mary Cunliffe. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is an ancient structure, pleasantly situated on an eminence near the river Wharf. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists.

and, in the vicinity, one for the Society of Friends. A considerable quantity of cotton goods is made here. At the distance of a mile are vestiges of a Roman encampment.

ADDINGTON, a parish in the hundred and county of BUCKINGHAM, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (W. N. W.) from Winslow, containing 89 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Buckingham, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £9. 9. 7., and in the patronage of John Poulett, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. A small sum of money was bequeathed by Ann Busby, in 1736, for educating and apprenticing poor children. On the border of the parish is a place called "Gallows' Gap," where, in the reign of Edward III., a gallows was erected by one of the family of Molines, who, as lord of the barony, possessed the power of trying and executing capital offenders.

ADDINGTON, a parish in the hundred of LARKFIELD, lathe of AYLESFORD, county of KENT, 7 miles (N. W. by W.) from Maidstone, containing 228 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Rochester, rated in the king's books at £6. 6. 8., and in the patronage of the Hon. J. W. Stratford. The church is dedicated to St. Margaret. On an eminence, at a short distance from it, are the remains of a monument, supposed to be Druidical, consisting of a circle of stones, in some degree resembling Stonehenge, with a smaller circle situated to the north-west, near which copper swords, British coins, and other relics, have been discovered. In this parish is one of those land springs which are very common in the eastern part of Kent, called the Nailbourn: the stream breaks out with great impetuosity once in seven or eight years, directing its course into a trench dug for its reception, till it arrives at the Leybourn rivulet, the trout in which, at other times white, it turns to a red colour.

ADDINGTON, a parish in the first division of the hundred of WALLINGTON, county of SURREY, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. S. E.) from Croydon, containing 354 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Surrey, and diocese of Winchester, rated in the king's books at £4. 16. 5 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of the Archbishop of Canterbury. The church is dedicated to St. Mary: in the chancel lie the remains of the late Archbishop Sutton. The manor of Addington is held by the singular tenure of making and presenting to the king, at his coronation, a mess of pottage, called maupygernon, subject to the performance of which a carucate of land here was granted to Tezelin, cook to William the Conqueror. On the brow of the hill adjoining Addington common are several low tumuli, in which urns have been found. Adjacent to the village is Addington Place, which, in 1807, was purchased by Dr. Sutton, Archbishop of Canterbury, with the funds arising from the sale of the archiepiscopal palace at Croydon. The mansion was originally erected by Alderman Trecothick, on the site of an ancient edifice said to have been a hunting seat of Henry VIII.; it was considerably enlarged and improved by Dr. Sutton, and is now being rebuilt by Dr. Howley, the present archbishop, for the future residence of the primates. A few years ago a water-spout burst on the adjacent eminences, and the water rushing into the village, destroyed considerable property there.

ADDINGTON (GREAT), a parish in the hundred of HUXLOE, county of NORTHAMPTON, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. W.) from Thrapston, containing 256 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Northampton, and diocese of Peterborough; rated in the king's books at £10. 12. 8 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of the Rev. James Tyley. The church is dedicated to All Saints. This parish communicates with the North Sea, through the Northampton canal and the river Nen, the former of which here divides into two branches.

ADDINGTON (LITTLE), a parish in the hundred of HUXLOE, county of NORTHAMPTON, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N.) from Higham-Ferrers, containing 233 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Northampton, and diocese of Peterborough, rated in the king's books at £7. 12., endowed with £400 private benefaction, and £400 royal bounty, and in the patronage of T. Saunderson, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. There is a free school with a small endowment. This parish, like the preceding, has a communication with the North Sea by the same means.

ADDLE, a parish in the upper division of the wapentake of SKYRACK, West riding of the county of YORK, comprising the townships of Addle cum Eccup and Arthington, and containing 1028 inhabitants, of which number, 699 are in the township of Addle cum Eccup, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. N. W.) from Leeds. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of York, rated in the king's books at £16. 3. 4., and in the patronage of the Representatives of the family of Arthington. The church, one of the purest existing specimens of Norman architecture, is dedicated to St. John the Baptist. There is a free school, endowed with a portion of the income arising from £150, the gift of an unknown individual. This place was anciently called Adhill from the Ada of the Saxons, and it was the site of the Burgodurum of the Romans. In 1702, traces of a Roman town, with some inscribed stones, many fragments of urns, and the remains of an aqueduct, were discovered on an adjacent moor.

ADDLETHORPE, a parish in the Marsh division of the wapentake of CANDLESHOE, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, $9\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. S. E.) from Alford, containing 176 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £9. 10. 2 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of the Crown. The church is dedicated to St. Nicholas.

ADFORTON, a joint township with Payton and Grange, in the parish of LEINTWARDINE, hundred of WIGMORE, county of HEREFORD, $8\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. S. W.) from Ludlow, containing, with Payton and Grange, 212 inhabitants.

ADGARLEY, a township in the parish of URSWICK, hundred of LONSDALE, north of the sands, county palatine of LANCASTER, 2 miles (S. E. by E.) from Dalton. The population is returned with the parish.

ADISHAM, a parish in the hundred of DOWNHAMFORD, lathe of St. AUGUSTINE, county of KENT, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. W. by S.) from Wingham, containing 305 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, with the perpetual curacy of Staple annexed, in the peculiar jurisdiction and patronage of the Archbishop of Canterbury, rated in the king's books at £28. 3. 1 $\frac{1}{2}$.. The church, dedicated to the Holy Innocents, is a large cruciform edifice, with a low tower, in the early style of English architecture, except the large window of the transept, which is in the decorated style.

ADLESTROP, a chapelry in the parish of BROADWELL, upper division of the hundred of SLAUGHTER, county of GLOUCESTER, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. by N.) from Stow on the Wold, containing 229 inhabitants. The chapel is dedicated to St. Mary Magdalene.

ADLINGFLEET, a parish in the lower division of the wapentake of OSGOLDCROSS, West riding of the county of YORK, comprising the townships of Adlingfleet, Fockerby, and Haldenby with Eastoft, and containing 431 inhabitants, of which number, 256 are in the township of Adlingfleet, $9\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. E.) from Howden. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of York, rated in the king's books at £9. 12. 11., and in the patronage of the Crown. The church is dedicated to All Saints. In 1743, Mary Ramsden bequeathed the sum of £200 for apprenticing boys and educating girls in Fockerby, Norton, Linton, and Adlingfleet.

ADLINGTON, a township in the parish of PRESTBURY, hundred of MACCLESFIELD, county palatine of CHESTER, 5 miles (N. by W.) from Macclesfield, containing 1057 inhabitants. There are some valuable mines of coal and quarries of flag-stone. Adlington Hall, a very ancient structure, which has long been the residence of the family of Legh, was garrisoned for Charles I. in the civil war, and taken by the parliamentary forces, on the 14th of February, 1645, after a fortnight's siege: in the south-east angle is a small domestic chapel, handsomely fitted up, licensed by the Bishop of Lichfield and Coventry in the 25th of Henry VI. A manorial court is held twice a year, in May and December, at which debts under 40s. are recoverable.

ADLINGTON, a township in the parish of STANDISH, hundred of LEYLAND, county palatine of LANCASTER, 4 miles (N.) from Wigan, containing 1043 inhabitants.

ADMARSH, a chapelry in that part of the parish of LANCASTER which is in the hundred of LONSDALE, south of the sands, county palatine of LANCASTER. The population is returned with the parish. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Richmond, and diocese of Chester, endowed with £1000 royal bounty, and £200 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Vicar of Lancaster.

ADMINGTON, a hamlet in the parish of QUINTON, upper division of the hundred of KIFTSGATE, county of GLOUCESTER, $6\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. E. by N.) from Chipping-Campden, containing 162 inhabitants.

ADMISTON, or ATHELHAMPTON, a parish in the hundred of PIDDLETOWN, Dorchester division of the county of DORSET, $6\frac{1}{4}$ miles (E. N. E.) from Dorchester, containing 79 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, with that of Burleston, in the archdeaconry of Dorset, and diocese of Bristol, rated in the king's books at £2, and in the patronage of the Hon. W. T. L. P. Wellesley. This place is traditionally said to have been the principal residence of the Saxon kings of Wessex, but there is no satisfactory evidence of the truth of that opinion.

ADSTOCK, a parish in the hundred and county of BUCKINGHAM, 3 miles (N. W.) from Windslow, containing 393 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Buckingham, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £13. 16. 3., and in the patronage of the Bishop of Lincoln. The church is dedicated to St. Cecilia. In the time of the plague, in 1665, the contagion having extended to Buckingham and Windslow, a market was held at this place.

ADSTONE, a chapelry in the parish of CANONS-ASHBY, hundred of GREENS-NORTON, county of NORTHAMPTON, $6\frac{1}{4}$ miles (W. N. W.) from Towcester, containing 171 inhabitants. The chapel is dedicated to All Saints. Here is a free school for boys from the age of seven to fourteen.

ADVENT, or ST. ADVEN, a parish in the hundred of LESNEWTH, county of CORNWALL, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (S.) from Camelford, containing 229 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, consolidated with the rectory of Lanteglos, in the archdeaconry of Cornwall, and diocese of Exeter. The river Camel separates the two parishes. A copper mine is worked here, but it is not very productive.

ADWALTON, a hamlet in the chapelry of DRIGH-LINGTON, parish of BIRSTALL, wapentake of MORLEY, West riding of the county of YORK, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. E. by E.) from Bradford. The population is returned with Drighlington. On Adwalton moor a battle was fought, in 1642, between the royalists under the Earl of Newcastle, and the parliamentarians under Lord Fairfax, in which the latter were defeated. There was formerly a market in this hamlet: fairs are held February 6th, March 9th, Thursday in Easter week, the second Thursday after Easter, Whit-Thursday and every alternate Thursday till Michaelmas, November 5th, and December 23rd, all which, except the two last, are for the sale of lean cattle.

ADWELL, a parish in the hundred of LEWKNOR, county of OXFORD, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (S. by E.) from Tetsworth, containing 44 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford, rated in the king's books at £4. 13. 9., and in the patronage of Mrs. F. Webb. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. Here is an ancient intrenchment, called Adwell Cop, supposed by Dr. Plot to have been constructed by the Danes, about the year 1010.

ADWICK LE STREET, a parish in the northern division of the wapentake of STRAFFORTH and TICKHILL, West riding of the county of YORK, comprising the townships of Adwick le Street and Hamphall with Stubbs, and containing 486 inhabitants, of which number, 346 are in the township of Adwick le Street, 4 miles (N. W. by N.) from Doncaster. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of York, rated in the king's books at £4. 13. 4., and in the patronage of J. Fullerton, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Lawrence. The adjunct to the name of this place is derived from its situation on a Roman road. Here is a free school, with an endowment of £10 per annum, bequeathed by the Rev. William Hedges, a late incumbent, for the education of children. A pure spring in this parish is in great repute for healing sore eyes.

ADWICK UPON DEARNE, a parish in the northern division of the wapentake of STRAFFORTH and TICKHILL, West riding of the county of YORK, $6\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. N. E.) from Rotherham, containing 168 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry and diocese of York, endowed with £400 royal bounty, and £200 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Dean and Canons of Christ Church, Oxford. The river Dearne, and the Dearne and Dove canal, pass through the parish. Here is a mineral spring.

AFF-PIDDLE, a parish in the hundred of HUNDRED'S BARROW, Blandford (South) division of the county of DORSET, 9 miles (E. by N.) from Dorchester, containing, with the tything of Bryant's-Piddle, 441 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Dorset, and diocese of Bristol, rated in the king's books at £8. 14. 9., endowed with £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of J. Frampton, Esq. Here is a free school, endowed with £10. 10. per annum. On the summit of a hill, on the road from Piddletown to Poole, there are one hundred and twelve broad and deep pits, the largest of them sixty yards in diameter, which, in the most rainy season, never retain water: near them are some small tumuli.

AGDEN, a township in the parish of MALPAS, higher division of the hundred of BROXTON, county palatine of CHESTER, 2½ miles (S. E.) from Malpas, containing 122 inhabitants. The Duke of Bridgewater's canal passes through the township.

AGDEN, a township partly in the parish of ROSTHERN, but chiefly in the parish of BOWDON, hundred of BUCKLOW, county palatine of CHESTER, 5½ miles (N. N. W.) from Nether Knutsford, containing 77 inhabitants.

AGELTHORPE, a township in the parish of COVERHAM, western division of the wapentake of HANG, North riding of the county of YORK, 3¼ miles (W. S. W.) from Middleham, containing 131 inhabitants.

AGLIONBY, a township in that part of the parish of WARWICK which is in CUMBERLAND ward, county of CUMBERLAND, 3¼ miles (E.) from Carlisle, containing 91 inhabitants.

AGNES (ST.), a market town and parish in the hundred of PYDER, county of CORNWALL, 8½ miles (N. W. by W.) from Truro, and 263 (W.) from London, containing 5762 inhabitants. This place, formerly named Breanick, or Bryanick, is situated in an extensive mining district on the northern coast, and consists principally of cottages, chiefly inhabited by miners: it is partially paved, and well supplied with water; the rocks on the coast are precipitous, and the scenery boldly picturesque. On a pyramidal rocky eminence, six hundred and sixty-four feet above the level of the sea, is St. Agnes' beacon, formed out of an ancient cairn, or tumulus, which, during the late war with France, was kept constantly ready in case of invasion; it has lately been much diminished by the removal of stone for repairing the fences in the vicinity. At the base of the hill are vestiges of a strong vallum, supposed to have been constructed by the Romans, which anciently extended, in a direction nearly circular, for about two miles. This district was formerly explored only for tin: the principal mine, "Sail Hole," having produced an immense quantity, was discontinued a few years since. Copper mines have been subsequently opened with very great success: in the principal mine, "Wheal Towan," eight hundred men are employed. After many fruitless attempts to form a harbour, a pier of moor-stone was constructed by a company in 1794, and a considerable trade in coal, lime, and slate, is now carried on with Ireland and Wales.

The port, which is a member of that of St. Ives, has been enlarged and improved within the last few years, and is capable of affording safe anchorage to eight or ten vessels of one hundred tons' burden, but can only be entered at high water. A pilchard fishery, was established in 1802, which affords employment to about forty men. The market is on Thursday, and a fair is held on April 30th. Courts for the duchy are held here annually in October, at which constables and other officers are appointed. The living is a perpetual curacy, united to the vicarage of Perranzabuloe, in the peculiar jurisdiction of the Dean and Chapter of Exeter. The church, dedicated to St. Agnes, is an ancient structure, built chiefly of granite, with a small spire of the same material. There are places of worship for Independents and Primitive and Wesleyan Methodists. The free school, founded by the Rev. St. John Elliot, in 1760, has a small endowment arising from funds bequeathed by him for charitable uses. In 1688, Mr. Nicholas Kent, of Ningoose, bequeathed a house and garden for aged widows, now used as the parish workhouse. Near the site of an ancient chapel, in a dingle called Chapelcomb, are the remains of St. Agnes' well, of which many miraculous stories are recorded. Opie, the celebrated painter, was born here, in 1761.

AIGHTON, a joint township with Bailey and Chaigley, in that part of the parish of MITTON which is in the lower division of the hundred of BLACKBURN, county palatine of LANCASTER, 5 miles (W. by S.) from Clitheroe, containing, with Bailey and Chaigley, 1487 inhabitants. Here are almshouses, towards the support of which J. Weld, Esq. contributes £92 per annum; also a free school, endowed with £20 per annum.

AIKE, a township partly in the parish of ST. JOHN, borough of BEVERLEY, but chiefly in the parish of LOCKINGTON, Bainton-Beacon division of the wapentake of HARTHILL, East riding of the county of YORK, 7 miles (N. by E.) from Beverley, containing 98 inhabitants.

AIKTON, a parish in the ward and county of CUMBERLAND, comprising the townships of Aikton, Biglands with Gamelsby, Wampool, and Wiggonby, and containing 706 inhabitants, of which number, 249 are in the township of Aikton, 4 miles (N. N. E.) from Wighton. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Carlisle, rated in the king's books at £14. 13. 1½., and in the patronage of the Earl of Lonsdale. The church is dedicated to St. Andrew.

AILESWORTH, a hamlet in the parish of CASTOR, liberty of PETERBOROUGH, county of NORTHAMPTON, 2½ miles (E. by S.) from Wansford, containing 249 inhabitants.

AINDERBY-MYERS, a joint township with Holtby, in the parish of HORNBY, eastern division of the wapentake of HANG, North riding of the county of YORK, 3¼ miles (S. by E.) from Catterick, containing 79 inhabitants.

AINDERBY-QUERNHOW, a township in that part of the parish of PICKHILL which is in the wapentake of HALLIKELD, North riding of the county of YORK, 5¼ miles (W. S. W.) from Thirsk, containing 99 inhabitants.

AINDERBY-STEEPLE, a parish in the eastern division of the wapentake of GILLING, North riding of the county of YORK, comprising the townships of Ainderby-

Steeple, Morton, Thirntoft, and Warlabby, and containing 768 inhabitants, of which number, 266 are in the township of Ainderby-Steeple, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W.S.W.) from North Allerton. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Richmond, and diocese of Chester, rated in the king's books at £13. 6. 8., and in the patronage of the Crown. The church is dedicated to St. Helen.

AINSTABLE, a parish in LEATH ward, county of CUMBERLAND, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N.N.W.) from Kirk-Oswald, containing, with the hamlet of Rushroft, 518 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Carlisle, rated in the king's books at £8. 8. 2., and in the patronage of R. L. Ross, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Michael. The nave was rebuilt in 1816, and the chancel soon afterwards. This parish, which is bounded on the west by the river Eden, and on the east and south by the Croglin, abounds with most beautiful scenery, particularly in the vale of Croglin, and in the vicinity of Nunnery, a neat residence occupying the site of a Benedictine convent, described in the account of ARMATHWAITE. The scenery around Nunnery has been greatly improved by artificial decorations; numerous cascades, fanciful walks, &c., having been formed on both banks of the river Eden, the waters of which, near the hamlet of Armathwaite, are precipitated over a weir, four yards in height, and seventy in length, and, when the river is swollen, produce an exceedingly loud and murmuring noise. The parish contains a considerable quantity of freestone. Here is a free school, with a small endowment; and a school has been established by subscription, in which about twenty children are educated. Near the parsonage house is a chalybeate spring. John Leake, M.D., founder of the Westminster Lying-in Hospital, and author of some esteemed medical works, was born here, in 1729.

AINSWORTH, a township in the parish of MIDDLETON, hundred of SALFORD, county palatine of LANCASTER, 3 miles (E. by N.) from Bolton le Moors, containing 1609 inhabitants.

AINTREE, a township in the parish of SEPHTON, hundred of WEST DERBY, county palatine of LANCASTER, 6 miles (N.N.E.) from Liverpool, containing 260 inhabitants.

AIRTON, a township in that part of the parish of KIRKBY in MALHAM-DALE which is in the western division of the wapentake of STAINCLIFFE and EWECROSS, West riding of the county of YORK, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S.E. by E.) from Settle, containing 187 inhabitants. In this township is a twist manufactory: there is also a free school with a small endowment.

AISHOLT, or ASHOLT, a parish in the hundred of CANNINGTON, county of SOMERSET, $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. by S.) from Bridg-water, containing, with the hamlet of Lower Aisholt, 176 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Taunton, and diocese of Bath and Wells, rated in the king's books at £7. 12. 3½., and in the patronage of the Rev. John Brice. The church is dedicated to All Saints.

AISHOLT (LOWER), a hamlet in the parish of AISHOLT, hundred of CANNINGTON, county of SOMERSET, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. by S.) from Bridg-water. The population is returned with the parish.

AIKKEW, a township in that part of the parish of BEDALE which is in the eastern division of the wapentake of HANG, North riding of the county of YORK, $\frac{1}{2}$ a mile (N.E.) from Bedale, containing 620 inhabitants. There are two places of worship for Anabaptists, and one for Roman Catholics. A free school has a small endowment for the instruction of children.

AISLABY, a township in the parish of EAGLES-CLIFFE, south-western division of STOCKTON ward, county palatine of DURHAM, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (W. by N.) from Yarm, containing 166 inhabitants. This was, for several generations, the residence of the family of Pember-ton, whose mansion has been converted into an inn and several other tenements.

AISLABY, or AYSLEYBY, a chapelry in that part of the parish of WHITBY which is in the eastern division of the liberty of LANGBAURGH, North riding of the county of YORK, 3 miles (S.W. by W.) from Whitby, containing 253 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Cleveland, and diocese of York, endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £800 royal bounty, and in the patronage of Mrs. Boulby.

AISLABY, a township in the parish of MIDDLETON, western division of PICKERING lythe, North riding of the county of YORK, 2 miles (W. N.W.) from Pickering, containing 147 inhabitants.

AISMUNDERBY, a joint township with Bondgate, in that part of the parish of RIPON which is in the liberty of RIPON, West riding of the county of YORK, containing, with Bondgate, 551 inhabitants. Here is an hospital for the support of two aged widows.

AISTHORPE, a parish in the wapentake of LAWRESS, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, 6 miles (N. N.W.) from Lincoln, containing 70 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, with the vicarage of West Thorpe annexed, in the archdeaconry of Stow, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £4. 10., and in the patronage of Mrs. Mangles. The church is dedicated to St. Peter.

AKEBAR, a township in the parish of FINGALL, western division of the wapentake of HANG, North riding of the county of YORK, 5 miles (N.E. by E.) from Middleham, containing 43 inhabitants.

AKELD, a township in the parish of KIRK-NEWTON, western division of GLENDALE ward, county of NORTH-UMBERLAND, 2 miles (N.W. by W.) from Wooler, containing 167 inhabitants. Vestiges of a burial-place are discernible here, but there are no traces of any place of worship.

AKELY, a parish in the hundred and county of BUCKINGHAM, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. by E.) from Buckingham, containing 295 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Buckingham, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £6. 2. 4., and in the patronage of the Warden and Fellows of New College, Oxford. The church is dedicated to St. James the Apostle. There was formerly a chapel of ease at Stockholt, in this parish.

AKENHAM, a parish in the hundred of BOSMERE and CLAYDON, county of SUFFOLK, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. by W.) from Ipswich, containing 120 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, with that of Claydon united, in the archdeaconry of Suffolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £9. 11. 5½., and in the patronage of the Rev. George Drury.

Seal and Arms.

ALBANS (ST.), a borough and market town, having separate jurisdiction, locally in the hundred of Cashio, or liberty of St. Albans, county of HERTFORD, $12\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. by S.) from Hertford, and 20 (N. W. by N.) from London, containing 4472 inhabitants. This place, separated from the site of the Roman Verulamium by the small river Ver, derived its name and origin from the magnificent monastery founded here by Offa, King of Mercia, in commemoration of St. Albanus, the proto-martyr of Britain. Verulam, according to the Roman historians, was founded by the Britons, at an earlier period than London. It was the chief station of Cassivellaunus at the time of the invasion of Cæsar, who describes it as a place of great military strength, well defended by woods and marshes. It appears to have consisted of rude dwellings constructed of wood, and to have been surrounded by a rampart and fosse. In the reign of Nero, it was accounted a municipium, or free city; and in that of Claudius, it was surprised by Boadicea, Queen of the Iceni, who slaughtered the chief part of the Roman and British inhabitants. After its subsequent restoration, it continued to be a primary station of the Romans until their final departure from Britain. During their occupation of it, Albanus, an eminent citizen, converted to Christianity by Amphibalus, in 293, boldly refusing to abjure his new religion, was beheaded on the hill called Holmhurst, on which spot the monastery was subsequently erected, and continued to flourish under a succession of forty abbots. About the middle of the fifth century, Verulam was occupied by the Saxons, and received the name of Watlingceaster, from the Roman highway, called Watling-street, on which it stood. According to Matthew Paris, the present town owes its origin to Ulsinus, or Ulsig, the sixth abbot, who, about the year 950, built a church on each of the three principal roads leading from the monastery, dedicated respectively to St. Stephen, St. Michael, and St. Peter, and encouraged the neighbouring inhabitants to erect houses, by supplying them with money and materials. Frithe-ric, or Frederic, the thirteenth abbot, opposed the march of the Norman conqueror, by causing the trees on the roadside, near Berkhamstead, to be cut down and laid across the way; he was also principally instrumental in exacting from him an oath to observe the ancient laws of the realm. William subsequently deprived this church of a great portion of its lands, and would have destroyed the monastery, but for the interposition of Archbishop Lanfranc. The monks and the inhabitants had frequent quarrels: and, in the reign of Richard II., the insurgents in Wat Tyler's rebellion were aided by the latter in besieging the monastery. On their dispersion, the king repaired hither, attended by Judge Tre-silian and one thousand soldiers, to try the delinquents, and many of the townsmen were executed. The king remained eight days, on one of which the commons of the county assembled by his command, and, in the great court of the abbey, swore to be thenceforward faithful subjects. A sanguinary battle was fought here on the 22nd of May, 1455, between Henry VI. and the Duke of York, in which the Lancastrians were defeated, their leader, the Duke of Somerset, killed, and the king himself made prisoner. On the 17th of February, 1461, another engagement took place on Bernard heath, north of the town, when Queen Margaret compelled the Earl of Warwick to retreat with considerable loss; after this action, the town was plundered and much damaged. On the introduction of printing into England, about 1471, a press was put up in the abbey, from which issued some of those early specimens which are now so eagerly sought for by collectors; the first translation of the Bible was made here. During the civil war between Charles I. and the parliament, a party of soldiers, under the Earl of Essex, garrisoned the town, and destroyed the beautiful cross, which was one of those erected by Edward I. in memory of his queen.

The town is situated chiefly on the summit and northern declivity of a considerable eminence, and consists principally of three streets, the abbey church standing on the hill near the point where they meet. That part of it which forms the old line of the great north road is narrow, and contains many ancient houses; but the other parts are spacious and well built. It is well paved and lighted under a local act, and, from the salubrity of the air, its short distance from the metropolis, and the excellence of its municipal regulations, is a desirable place of residence. By a recent diversion of the main road, extending for two miles, about three hundred yards southward from the town, the former circuitous and dangerous route through it is avoided: on this new line of road some handsome villas, and one of the most commodious inns in the county, called the Verulam Arms, have been lately erected. The manufacture of straw plat, in which about eight hundred persons are employed, is the chief occupation of the lower class of inhabitants. A silk-mill, occupying the site of the abbey mill, affords employment to three hundred young persons of both sexes; and in a mill for spinning cotton wicks for candles, formerly applied to the cutting and polishing of diamonds, about sixty persons are engaged. The market is on Saturday, for corn, straw-plat, and provisions: there is a fair on March 25th and 26th, for cattle and horses; and a statute fair is held on Oct. 11th, and the two following days.

St. Albans is styled a borough in the record of Domesday, and is stated to have contained forty-six burgesses, who were the demesne men of the abbot, and under his jurisdiction (with the exception of a brief interval in the reigns of Edward II. and III.), until the dissolution, when the possessions of the monastery were surrendered to the crown. The inhabitants were incorporated in the 7th of Edward VI., by whose charter, modified in subsequent reigns, and confirmed in that of Charles II., the government is vested in a mayor, high steward, recorder, twelve aldermen, and twenty-four assistants, with a town clerk, who generally acts as chamberlain and coroner, two serjeants at mace, and subordinate officers. The mayor is chosen from among the aldermen, annually on the 21st of September; the high steward, recorder, and town-clerk, are appointed by the mayor and aldermen, subject to approval by the crown; the aldermen are elected by a majority of their own body, as vacancies occur; and the assistants are chosen by the mayor and aldermen. The freedom of the borough is inherited by the eldest sons of freemen, acquired by servitude, and obtained by purchase, or gift. The mayor, the late mayor, the high steward, and the recorder, are justices of the peace, and hold courts of quarter session; the mayor presides at a court of aldermen, on the first Wednesday in every month, for the transaction of public business; and a court of requests, for the recovery of debts under 40s., is held, under an act passed in the 25th of George II., every Saturday, the jurisdiction of which extends over the borough and liberty, including twenty-two parishes. The magistrates for the liberty hold quarter sessions here for that division, at which the recorder generally presides. The former town-hall was originally the charnel-house of the monastery; but a handsome and commodious edifice was erected in 1830, at an expense of £1200. The ancient prison of the monastery is now appropriated to the confinement of criminals committed for the borough and liberties. The borough first received the elective franchise in the 35th of Edward I., which was suspended from the 5th of Edward III. till the 1st of Edward VI., since which time it has continued to return two members to parliament. The right of election is vested in the freemen, whether resident or not, and in those householders who have been six months resident in the borough, paying scot and lot; the number of voters is about six hundred; the mayor is the returning officer, and the Earl of Verulam possesses considerable parliamentary influence.

The venerable abbey, rich in lordships and immunities, was valued at the dissolution at £2510: its abbots enjoyed both spiritual and temporal authority, having a palatine jurisdiction, similar to that possessed by the Bishops of Durham and Ely; they had also a grant of precedence from Pope Adrian IV. over all other abbots, with an exclusive exemption from the payment of Peter's pence, which, according to Camden, they possessed the power of collecting throughout the county, and applying to their own use. Henry VIII. granted the abbey to Sir Richard Lee, but retained the church, since made parochial, which Edward VI., in 1553, granted to the mayor and burgesses, for £400 and a fee-farm rent of £10, which latter, in 1684, was redeemed by the inhabitants for £200. This ancient cruciform structure is six hundred feet in length, and consists of a nave, two aisles, choir, presbytery, lady-chapel, and two transepts, with a large square tower rising from the intersection. The choir is separated from the nave by St. Cuthbert's screen, which, with the elaborately carved screen over the altar, the ceiling partly groined, and partly enriched with Mosaic paintings, and the tombs of Humphrey, Duke of Gloucester, and Abbot Ramryge, presents a rich and imposing appearance. The tower, supported on four arches, the two transepts, and a great part of the choir, were built of the Roman tiles from the ancient city of Verulam, about the year 1077, and exhibit the Norman style of architecture: the remainder, erected about the reign of Henry III., is in the early English style, with sharply pointed arches. Many fine brasses, in memory of the abbots, were taken by Cromwell's soldiers, and the church was much damaged by the prisoners who were confined in it during the parliamentary war.

The town comprises the parish of St. Alban, or the abbey parish, and part of the parish of St. Michael and St. Peter, in the archdeaconry of St. Albans, and diocese of London. The living of St. Alban's is a rectory, rated in the king's books at £10, endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Mayor and Corporation. The living of St. Peter's is a vicarage, rated in the king's books at £9. 0. 10., and in the patronage of the Bishop of Ely: the church, erected by Abbot Ulsinus, in 948, has been rebuilt within the last thirty years. The living of St. Michael's is a vicarage, rated in the king's books at £10. 1. 8., and in the patronage of the Earl of Verulam: the church is a small edifice, erected by the same abbot. There are places of worship for Particular Baptists, the Society of Friends, Independents, Wesleyan Methodists, and Unitarians. The free grammar school was founded by Edward VI., in 1553, and further endowed, in 1570, by Queen Elizabeth, with £20 per annum, payable by the dealers in wine in the borough and within two miles of it, in consideration of certain privileges conferred on them by letters patent. The schoolroom, adjoining the abbey church, was formerly the beautiful chapel of the Virgin. The Blue-coat school, in which about thirty-five boys are clothed, and educated in the principles of the established church, is supported by the dividends on some funded property, and by subscription. A girls' school is supported by the Verulam family. The almshouses, called Marlborough buildings, containing apartments for thirty-six persons of both sexes, were built and endowed by Sarah, Duchess of Marlborough: they occupy three sides of a quadrangle, on the site of the old manor-house of Newland-Squillers; each inmate receives £12 per annum. There are twenty-one other almshouses, founded by different individuals.

In the town is a high square brick tower, called the Clock-house, built by one of the abbots in the reign of Henry VIII.; and, at the distance of half a mile to the south-east, are some fine remains of the nunnery of Sopwell, founded, in 1140, by Abbot Geoffrey de Gorham, of which the Lady Juliana Berners was at one time prioress; like the monastery, it was built of Roman tiles and bricks, and partly of flints. Of two hospitals, founded by the abbots, and dedicated respectively to St. Julian and St. Mary de Pratis, there is not a single vestige. On the left of the road leading to Dunstable, a few fragments of the ancient walls of Verulam are still discernible. In a field adjoining the town, called New England field, are some hills, supposed to have been the site of the camp of Ostorius, and thence vulgarly called Oyster hills. There is a mineral spring in a garden near St. Michael's bridge. Matthew Paris, one of the most eminent of the old English historians, was a monk in the abbey. Among the most distinguished natives may be enumerated Alexander Necham, a poet and scholastic divine; Sir John Mandeville, the celebrated traveller; and Sir John King, and Sir Francis Pemberton, two eminent lawyers. Breakspear's farmhouse, near the town, was the birthplace of Nicholas Breakspear, the only Englishman that ever sat in the papal chair; on his elevation he assumed the name of Adrian IV.; he was a great benefactor to the abbey. Francis, the great Lord Bacon, was buried in St. Michael's church; a finely sculptured alabaster statue has been erected to his memory, in a niche on the northern side of the chancel. St. Albans gives the title of duke to the family of Beaucherc; and the representative of the family of Grimstone enjoys the title of Earl of Verulam.

ALBERBURY, or ABBERBURY, a parish comprising the townships of Cruglion, Middleton, and Upington, in the hundred of Cawrse, and the township of Bauseley in the hundred of Deythur, county of MONTGOMERY (Wales), and the chapelry of Wollaston, and the townships of Alberbury, Benthall with Shrawardine, Eyton, and Rowton with Amaston, in the hundred of FORD, county of SALOP, and containing 1946 inhabitants, of which number, 332 are in the township of Alberbury, 8½ miles (W.) from Shrewsbury. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Salop, and diocese of Hereford, rated in the king's books at £5. 10., endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Warden and Fellows of All Souls' College, Oxford. The church is dedicated to St. Michael. The Roman Watling-street passes through the parish, which is partially bounded by the river Severn. There are some remains of a castle, built in the reign of Henry II., by Fulk Fitz-Warine, who founded an abbey for Black monks of the order of Grandmont, vestiges of which may still be traced about a mile from the castle: on the suppression of Alien priories, Henry VI. gave the site to the college of All Souls', Oxford, to which it still belongs.

ALBOURNE, a parish in the hundred of TIPNOAK, rape of BRAMBER, county of SUSSEX, 2½ miles (W.N.W.) from Hurst-Pierrepont, containing 360 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Lewes, and diocese of Chichester, rated in the king's books at £7. 14. 2., and in the patronage of Charles Goring, Esq. The church, dedicated to St. Bartholomew, is in the early style of English architecture, with additions of a later date.

ALBRIGHTON, a parish (formerly a market town) in the Shiffnall division of the hundred of BRIMSTREE, county of SALOP, 6 miles (S.E. by E.) from Shiffnall, containing 968 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the peculiar jurisdiction of the Dean of Lichfield, rated in the king's books at £5. 10., and in the alternate patronage of the Master and Wardens of the Haberdashers' Company, and the Governors of Christ's Hospital, London. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. Here is a free school for six poor children, principally supported from the tolls of the fairs, which are held on March 5th, May 23rd, July 18th, and November 9th, for horned cattle, sheep and hogs.

ALBRIGHTON, a parish in the hundred of PRIMHILL, county of SALOP, 4 miles (N.) from Shrewsbury, containing 75 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, within the jurisdiction of the court of the royal peculiar of St. Mary's, Shrewsbury, endowed with £800 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Lichfield. The church is dedicated to St. John.

ALBURGH, a parish in the hundred of EARSHAM, county of NORFOLK, 3¼ miles (N.E. by N.) from Harleston, containing 601 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Norfolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £12, and in the patronage of the Heirs of Sir R. Hill, Bart., to a fellow of St. John's College, Cambridge. The church is dedicated to All Saints.

ALBURY, a parish in the hundred of EDWINSTREE, county of HERTFORD, 4½ miles (N.W.) from Bishop-Stortford, containing 596 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the peculiar jurisdiction of the Dean and Chapter of St. Paul's, London, rated in the king's books at £7. 9. 7., and in the patronage of the Treasurer in that cathedral. The church is dedicated to St. Mary.

ALBURY, a parish in the hundred of BULLINGTON, county of OXFORD, 3¼ miles (W. by S.) from Thame, containing, with the hamlet of Tiddington, 214 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford, rated in the king's books at £9. 2. 8½., and in the patronage of the Earl of Abingdon. The church is dedicated to St. Helen. Lady Mary Bertie, in 1737, gave a rent-charge of £10 for the instruction of twelve poor boys of this parish.

ALBURY, a parish in the second division of the hundred of BLACKHEATH, county of SURREY, 4 miles (E. S. E.) from Guildford, containing 765 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Surrey, and diocese of Winchester, rated in the king's books at £17. 12. 8½., and in the patronage of H. Drummond, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul; it contains two singular octangular pillars, resting upon circular bases of Sussex marble, supposed to have been removed from a Roman temple which stood on Blackheath, near the site of which is an intrenchment, with the ditch and double rampart perfect: in the neighbourhood are two chalk-pits and a quarry of stone. Courts leet and baron are held here annually. In 1754, William Resbridger bequeathed £400 for instructing children, purchasing bread for the poor, and other charitable purposes. A National school for boys is supported by subscription.

ALBY, a parish in the southern division of the hundred of ERPINGHAM, county of NORFOLK, 4½ miles (N. by E.) from Aylsham, containing 303 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £7. 11. 8½., and in the patronage of the Earl of Orford. The church is dedicated to St. Ethelbert.

ALCESTER, a market town and parish in the Alcester division of the hundred of BARLICHWAY, county of WARWICK, 15 miles (W. S. W.) from Warwick, and 103 (N. W. by W.) from London, containing 2229 inhabitants. This place, from its name, from the numerous Roman relics that have been discovered, and, from being situated on the line of the Ikniel-street, vestiges of which are still discernible in the immediate vicinity, is supposed to have been a Roman station. In the time of the Saxons it was a place of great importance, and of much greater extent than at present. At the Conquest it was a royal residence, and was made a free borough in the reign of Henry I. In 1141, a monastery was founded here by Ralph de Boteler, the revenue of which, at the dissolution, was £101. 14. The town is pleasantly situated in a fertile valley, surrounded with richly wooded eminences, on the eastern bank of the river Aln, near its junction with the Arrow, over both which rivers are neat stone bridges. It consists of one principal street, from which, near the market-place, several smaller ones diverge. Some of the houses are ancient, with projecting upper stories, though in general they are modern, and of handsome appearance: the inhabitants are well supplied with water from springs. The principal branch of manufacture is that of needles, in which about six hundred persons are employed. The market is on Tuesday: fairs are held on January 27th, March 24th, May 18th, July 28th, October 17th, and December 1st. A court leet is held annually in November, at which a bailiff and deputy bailiff are appointed; but the town is within the jurisdiction of the county magistrates. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Worcester, rated in the king's books at £14. 18. 10., and in the patronage of the Marquis of Hertford. The church, formerly dedicated to St. Andrew, was, with the exception of the tower, rebuilt in 1732, and dedicated to St. Nicholas: it is partly in the early, and partly in the decorated, style of English architecture, with a fine embattled tower crowned with pinnacles; the roof is supported by pillars of the Tuscan order. There are places of worship for Particular Baptists, the Society of Friends, Wesleyan Methodists, and Unitarians. The free grammar school was founded by Mr. Walter Newport, in 1592, and endowed with £400, now producing £20 per annum. In 1780, Mr. Brook Bridges founded a school for twelve boys and twelve girls, which he endowed with £20 per annum. There is an almshouse for eight poor men. Among the Roman antiquities that have been found in the town and its environs are various urns, coins, tessellated pavements, and other relics; and in that part called the Black Fields, to which the buildings formerly extended, old foundations have been discovered. Beauchamp's Court, the ancient manorial residence, now a farm, about a mile and a half distant, gives the inferior title of baron to the Earl of Warwick.

ALCISTON, a parish in the hundred of ALCISTON, rape of PEVENSEY, county of SUSSEX, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. N. E.) from Seaford, containing 247 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, at present under sequestration, in the archdeaconry of Lewes, and diocese of Chichester, rated in the king's books at £6, endowed with £200 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Chichester. The church presents some remains of Norman architecture, with an admixture of the early English style. Fragments of various kinds of coffins have been found here.

ALCONBURY, a parish in the hundred of LEIGHTONSTONE, county of HUNTINGDON, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W.) from Huntingdon, containing 783 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Huntingdon, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £8. 6. 1., endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £300 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Westminster. The church is dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul. A fair is held on Midsummer-day. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists.

ALCONBURY-WESTON, county of HUNTINGDON.—See WESTON (ALCONBURY).

ALCUMLOW, a joint township with Moreton, in that part of the parish of ASTBURY which is in the hundred of NORTHWICH, county palatine of CHESTER. The population is returned with Moreton.

ALDBOROUGH, a parish in the northern division of the hundred of ERPINGHAM, county of NORFOLK, 2 miles (W. by S.) from Aylsham, containing 268 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £8, and in the patronage of Lord Suffield. The church is dedicated to St. Mary.

ALDBOROUGH, or ALDEBURGH, a sea-port, borough, and parish (formerly a market town), having separate jurisdiction, locally in the hundred of Plomesgate, county of SUFFOLK, 25 miles (N. E. by E.) from Ipswich, and 94 (N. E.) from London, containing 1212 inhabitants. This borough, which takes its name from its situation on the river Alde, was formerly of very considerable extent, and its importance procured for it many privileges. From the encroachment of the sea (which, within the last century, has destroyed its market-place, with an entire street and a great number of houses), it has been reduced to an inconsiderable town; but, from the salubrity of the air, and the convenience of the shore for sea-bathing, it has lately become a place of fashionable resort during the summer. The town is situated in a pleasant vale, having the river Alde on the south-west, and commanding an extensive view of the North sea on the east, and is sheltered by a steep hill, the extended summit of which forms a magnificent terrace, affording a delightful promenade, and a beautifully diversified prospect. The strand, to which the descent from the town is gradual, consists of firm sand, favourable for bathing and walking. At the southern extremity of the main street, which is nearly a mile in length, there is a battery, on which, during the late war, two eighteen-pounders were mounted, another of five guns, and a martello tower, for the protection of the coast. The old houses are in general mean and ill constructed, but those erected by families residing here during the season, or for the accommodation of visitors, are well built and respectable; among them is an elegant marine villa, in the Italian style, built by Leveson Vernon, Esq. There is a public subscription library, commanding a fine view of the bay; a neat and commodious theatre is open for a few weeks during the season; there are two billiard-tables; and assemblies are held occasionally at the principal inns. The trade of the port consists chiefly in the exportation of corn, and the importation of coal and timber, in which forty-six vessels, averaging fifty-two tons' burden, are employed. The custom-house is a neat and convenient building near the quay; and the harbour, which is safe and commodious, attracts a number of seafaring people and fishermen, by whom the town is principally inhabited. Many of these are Trinity-house pilots, who form themselves into small associations, and purchase swiftly-sailing cutters, in which they traverse the North sea, frequently approaching the coast of Norway, in search of vessels that may want their assistance. The principal employment of the other inhabitants consists in the drying of herrings and sprats, which are found here in profusion, and exported to Holland; soles and lobsters of superior flavour are taken also in abundance. The market, formerly on Wednesday, has been discontinued; the fairs are held on March 1st and May 3rd. By the charter of incorporation, granted in the reign of Charles I., the government of the borough is vested in two bailiffs, and ten capital and twenty-four inferior burgesses: the freedom is inherited by birth, or obtained by gift. The bailiffs are justices of the peace, and hold a court of session annually in September; they are also empowered to hold a court of record for the recovery of debts under £30, but it has not been held for upwards of a century. The town hall is an ancient building of timber, under which is the common gaol for the borough. Aldborough first exercised the elective franchise in the 13th of Elizabeth, since which time it has returned two members to parliament. The right of election is vested in the bailiffs, and burgesses resident within the borough, and not receiving alms; the bailiffs are the returning officers. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Suffolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £33. 6. 8., and in the patronage of Leveson Vernon, Esq. The church, dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul, an ancient structure of flint and freestone, on the summit of a hill at the northern extremity of the town, has a square embattled tower surmounted with a turret, affording an excellent land-mark for mariners. There are places of worship for Particular Baptists, Independents, and Wesleyan Methodists. A National school is supported by subscription.

ALDBOROUGH, a parish comprising the chapelry of Lower Dunsforth, and the township of Upper Dunsforth with Branton-Green, in the upper division, and the boroughs of Aldborough and Boroughbridge, the townships of Minskep and Rocliff, and part of the township of Humberton with Milby, in the lower division, of the wapentake of CLABO, West riding of the county of YORK, and containing 2129 inhabitants, of which number, 484 are in the borough of Aldborough, 16½ miles (N. W. by W.) from York, and 205½ (N. N. W.) from London. The town, which stands upon the southern bank of the river Ure, and upon the line of the northern Watling-street, was the celebrated and important Roman station called Isurium Brigantium, and received from the Saxons the name of Eald-burg, denoting its antiquity even in their time. Its destruction is attributed to the Danes, and it has now become a very inconsiderable place, being irregularly built, and the houses in general mean and detached from each other. The elective franchise was granted by Philip and Mary, in 1558. The right of election is vested in the inhabitants paying scot and lot, in number about sixty; and the bailiff, who is appointed by the lord of the manor, is the returning officer. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the peculiar jurisdiction and patronage of the Dean and Chapter of York, rated in the king's books at £9. 19. 5. The church is dedicated to St. Andrew. The foundations of the walls of the ancient city, which included a quadrilateral area of two thousand five hundred yards, may still be traced; near the centre are vestiges of a mount, called the Borough Hill, removed in 1783, and believed, from the remains then discovered, to have been the site of a Roman temple. About a hundred paces from the south wall is a semicircular outwork, called Studforth, two hundred feet long, having a slope of thirty feet, forming a lofty terrace on the south side of the town. Many Roman remains, consisting of tessellated pavements, domestic utensils, military weapons, coins, &c., have at various times been discovered.

ALDBOURN, a parish (formerly a market town) in the hundred of SELKLEY, county of WILTS, 6 miles (N. E.) from Marlborough, containing 1385 inhabitants. The name is compounded of the Saxon terms Ald, old, and bourne, a brook. Aldbourn anciently gave name to a royal chase, granted by Henry VIII. to Edward Seymour, Duke of Somerset, which, for a long period, served only as a rabbit warren, but is now enclosed and cultivated. Previously to the battle of Newbury, in the reign of Charles I., a sharp skirmish took place here between the parliamentary forces and the royalists. In 1760, a fire consumed seventy-two houses; and, in 1817, twenty were destroyed by a similar calamity. The town is situated in a fertile valley: a considerable manufacture of fustians was formerly carried on, but it has declined. The market and fairs have been discontinued upwards of a century. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Wilts, and diocese of Salisbury, rated in the king's books at £26. 6. 3., and in the patronage of the Bishop of Salisbury. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is an ancient structure, exhibiting portions in the Norman style of architecture. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. The southern part of the vicarage-house is supposed to be the remnant of a hunting seat which belonged to John of Gaunt, Duke of Lancaster. Near a farm-house, called Pierce's Lodge, are vestiges of an ancient British encampment; and in the neighbourhood artificial mounds of earth are frequently to be met with.

ALDBROUGH, a parish in the middle division of the wapentake of HOLDERNESS, East riding of the county of YORK, comprising the townships of Aldbrough, East Newton, West Newton, and a portion of the township of Cowdons, and containing 998 inhabitants, of which number, 802 are in the township of Aldbrough, 11½ miles (N. E. by E.) from Kingston upon Hull. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of the East riding, and diocese of York, rated in the king's books at £13. 15., and in the patronage of the Crown. The church, dedicated to St. Bartholomew, is a large edifice in the English style of architecture: it contains a circular stone, bearing an inscription recording its erection by one Ulf, who was lord of the place, and had a castle here, every vestige of which has been destroyed. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. Slight traces of a Roman road are discernible in the vicinity. The rental of certain land, left by Mr. Towry, is appropriated to the instruction of children and the relief of the poor.

ALDBROUGH, a township in that part of the parish of STANWICK ST. JOHN which is in the western division of the wapentake of GILLING, North riding of the county of YORK, 6½ miles (N. by E.) from Richmond, containing 544 inhabitants. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. A very good free school was built here by S. M. Barret, Esq., which is conducted on the Lancasterian plan, and supported by voluntary subscription.

ALDBURY, a parish in the hundred of DACORUM, county of HERTFORD, 3 miles (E. by N.) from Tring, containing 676 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Huntingdon, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £20. 8. 6½., and in the patronage of the Trustees of the late Earl of Bridgewater. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, is an ancient structure, in the early style of English architecture, and contains an altar-tomb of an armed knight, in a recumbent posture, and his lady, also another, with brasses, to a knight and his lady, and their nine sons and three daughters, both executed in the richest style of ancient sculpture. This village is pleasantly situated at the foot of the Chiltern hills, the summits of which are crowned with thick plantations. There are three tenements for the residence of five widowers and widows, with an annual sum for keeping them in repair, the gift of an unknown benefactor.

ALDCLIFFE, a township in that part of the parish of LANCASTER which is in the hundred of LONSDALE, south of the sands, county palatine of LANCASTER, 1½ mile (S. W.) from Lancaster, containing 85 inhabitants.

ALDEBY, a parish in the hundred of CLAVERING, county of NORFOLK, 2½ miles (N. E.) from Beccles, containing 475 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Norfolk, and diocese of Norwich, endowed with £400 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Norwich. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. Here was a small priory, a cell to the Benedictine abbey of Norwich, which, at the dissolution, was given by Henry VIII. as part of the endowment of the dean and prebendaries of that cathedral.

ALDENHAM, a parish in the hundred of CASHIO, or liberty of ST. ALBANS, county of HERTFORD, 2½ miles (N. E. by E.) from Watford, containing, with the hamlet of Theobald-Street, which is in the hundred of DACORUM, 1399 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Huntingdon, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £24, and in the patronage of the Trustees of P. Thelluson, Esq. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, is built in the early English style. In the 31st of Elizabeth, Richard Platt founded and endowed six almshouses, also a free grammar school for sixty children, to be chosen from among the poor of Aldenham and the families of freemen of the Brewers' Company, London; and, in default of the full number of scholars from Aldenham, the choice to be extended to the adjacent parishes, the children of the founder's name and kin to have the preference. The Master and Wardens of the Brewers' Company are the governors, and elect the master, who must have taken the degree of M.A. The annual income of the whole charity is £857. 4. 6.; of this sum the master receives £80 per annum, with a rent-free residence and a supply of coal, and the usher £40; forty-five boys are taught on the foundation.

ALDERBURY, a parish in the hundred of ALDERBURY, county of WILTS, 3 miles (S. E. by E.) from Salisbury, comprising the chapelries of Farley and Pitton, and containing 1125 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the peculiar jurisdiction and patronage of the Treasurer in the Cathedral Church of Salisbury. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. Here is a small endowed free school. A monastery formerly existed at Ivy Church, in this parish, the site of which is now occupied by a modern residence.

ALDERFORD, a parish in the hundred of EYNSFORD, county of NORFOLK, 3½ miles (S. E. by S.) from Reepham, containing 45 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, united to the vicarage of Attlebridge, in the archdeaconry of Norfolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £4. 6. 8. The church is dedicated to St. John the Baptist.

ALDERLEY, a parish in the hundred of MACCLESFIELD, county palatine of CHESTER, comprising the townships of Upper Alderley, Lower Alderley, and Great Warford, and containing 1477 inhabitants, of which number, 473 are in the township of Upper Alderley, and 668 in that of Lower Alderley, 4½ miles (W. N. W.) from Macclesfield. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Chester, rated in the king's books at £14. 10. 10., and in the patronage of Sir J. T. Stanley, Bart. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. There is a place of worship for Baptists at Great Warford. Mines of lead, copper, and cobalt, have been worked in the neighbourhood, but the produce of ore has not been sufficient to encourage perseverance. A few of the inhabitants are engaged in weaving for the manufacturers of the neighbouring towns. A school-house, originally built in 1628 by the Rev. Hugh Shaw, curate of the parish, and since endowed with benefactions to the amount of £300, was rebuilt near the church a few years ago: there is also a small endowed free school in Lower Alderley. In Alderley park there is a large sheet of water, called Radnor mere, a wood near which contains some of the finest beech trees in England; and on the high ground of Aldersey Edge is a fine spring, called the Holy Well.

ALDERLEY, a parish in the upper division of the hundred of GRUMBALD'S ASH, county of GLOUCESTER, 2 miles (S. S. E.) from Wotton under Edge, containing 235 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Gloucester, rated in the king's books at £11. 4. 7., and in the patronage of Mr. and Mrs. Hale. The village is situated on a hill between two streams, which unite and fall into the Lower Avon. Cornua ammonis and other fossils are found here. Sir Matthew Hale, Lord Chief Justice in the reign of Charles II., born here November 1st, 1609; lies interred in the church.

ALDERMASTON, a parish (formerly a market town) in the hundred of THEALE, county of BERKS, 10 miles (S. W. by W.) from Reading, containing 653 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Berks, and diocese of Salisbury, rated in the king's books at £12. 12. 8½., and in the patronage of the Provost and Fellows of Queen's College, Oxford. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. Fairs are held on May 6th and July 7th. The navigable river Kennet passes through the parish.

ALDERMINSTER, a parish partly in the upper division of the hundred of OSWALDSLOW, but chiefly in the upper division of the hundred of PERSHORE, being a detached portion of the county of WORCESTER, surrounded by Warwickshire, 5 miles (S. S. E.) from Stratford upon Avon, containing 443 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Worcester, rated in the king's books at £7, endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Crown. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a curious cruciform edifice, having a low tower; the nave is in the Norman style of architecture. A recently constructed rail-road, from Stratford upon Avon to Moreton in the Marsh, passes through the village.

ALDERSEY, a township in the parish of CODDINGTON, higher division of the hundred of BROXTON, county palatine of CHESTER, $8\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. E. by S.) from Chester, containing 138 inhabitants. Salt-works existed here in the middle of the sixteenth century; and there is still a brine spring in the neighbourhood, which is not worked owing to the distance whence coal must be brought for that purpose.

ALDERSHOT, a parish in the hundred of CRONDALL, Basingstoke division of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. E. by N.) from Farnham, containing 525 inhabitants. The living is a donative, endowed with £1800 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the principal landed proprietors. The church is dedicated to St. Michael. The ancient seat of the Tichborne family has been converted into a farmhouse. This parish is within the jurisdiction of the Cheyney Court held at Winchester every Thursday, for the recovery of debts to any amount.

ALDERTON, a parish in the upper division of the hundred of TEWKESBURY, county of GLOUCESTER, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. N. W.) from Winchcomb, containing, with the hamlet of Dixon, 312 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Gloucester, rated in the king's books at £22. 1. 10 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of the Rev. Robert Townsend, D.D. The church is dedicated to St. Margaret.

ALDERTON, a parish in the hundred of CLELEY, county of NORTHAMPTON, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. S. E.) from Towcester, containing 177 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, annexed to that of Grafton Regis, in the archdeaconry of Northampton, and diocese of Peterborough, rated in the king's books at £12. The church is dedicated to St. Margaret.

ALDERTON, a parish in the hundred of WILFORD, county of SUFFOLK, $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. E. by S.) from Woodbridge, containing 566 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Suffolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £14. 18. 4., and in the patronage of the lords of four neighbouring manors, who present alternately. The church is dedicated to St. Andrew.

ALDERTON, a parish forming a detached portion of the hundred of CHIPPENHAM, county of WILTS, $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. W. by W.) from Malmesbury, containing 176 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to the vicarage of Sherston Magna, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Salisbury. The church is dedicated to St. Giles.

ALDERWASLEY, a chapelry in that part of the parish of WIRKSWORTH which is in the hundred of APPLETREE, county of DERBY, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. by S.) from Wirksworth, containing 454 inhabitants. The chapel belongs to F. Hurst, Esq., who appoints his own chaplain. There are iron-works and furnaces for smelting lead-ore in the neighbourhood.

ALDFIELD, a chapelry in that part of the parish of RIPON which is in the lower division of the wapentake of CLARO, West riding of the county of YORK, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. by S.) from Ripon, containing 133 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, within the jurisdiction of the peculiar court of Ripon, endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £600 royal bounty, and in the patronage of Mrs. Lawrence. This village is resorted to on account of its mineral springs, the water of which possesses a sulphureous impregnation: the neighbourhood abounds with beautiful and romantic scenery.

ALDFORD, a parish comprising the townships of Aldford and Churton, in the higher division, and the chapelry of Churton Heath, or Bruera, and the townships of Great Boughton, Buerton, and Edgerley, in the lower division, of the hundred of BROXTON, county palatine of CHESTER, and containing 1684 inhabitants, of which number, 491 are in the township of Aldford, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. by E.) from Chester. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Chester, rated in the king's books at £16. 17. 8 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of Earl Grosvenor. The church is dedicated to St. John the Baptist. This place derives its name from an old ford on the river Dee, which bounds it on the west, and is crossed by a good bridge: it had anciently a market and a fair. A castle was erected in the reign of Henry II., the earthworks of which only remain, nearly adjoining the church: during the siege of Chester, a garrison was placed here by Sir W. Brereton. Courts leet and baron are held for the manor, and are attended by the freeholders of Thornton and Alton, who have distinct juries. Here is a free grammar school, with an endowment of £200 per annum: and a school for boys and girls is supported by contributions among the inhabitants, the school-house having been erected at the expense of Earl Grosvenor. There are also six almshouses for widows, endowed with £22 per annum. Vestiges of a Roman road, connecting the northern and southern Watling-streets, are still visible.

ALDHAM, a parish in the Witham division of the hundred of LEXDEN, county of ESSEX, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. N. E.) from Great Coggeshall, containing 435 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Colchester, and diocese of London, rated in the king's books at £12, and in the patronage of the Bishop of London.

ALDHAM, a parish in the hundred of COSFORD, county of SUFFOLK, 2 miles (N. N. E.) from Hadleigh, containing 292 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Sudbury, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £10. 13. 4., and in the patronage of Thomas Barrett Lennard, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Mary.

ALDINGBOURN, a parish in the hundred of Box and STOCKBRIDGE, rape of CHICHESTER, county of SUSSEX, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. by N.) from Chichester, containing, with the hamlets of Lidsey and Westergate, 855 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Chichester, rated in the king's books at £5. 10. 5., and in the patronage of the Dean of Chichester. The church is dedicated to St. Mary.

ALDINGHAM, a parish in the hundred of LONSDALE, north of the sands, county palatine of LANCASTER, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S.) from Ulverstone, comprising the townships of Upper Aldingham, Lower Aldingham, Glas-ton, and Leece, and containing 760 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Richmond, and diocese of Chester, rated in the king's books at £39. 19. 2., and in the patronage of the Crown. The church is dedicated to St. Cuthbert. The sea has encroached upon a considerable part of the parish, in consequence of which the church, said to have been formerly in the centre of it, is now within the reach of a high tide. In the vicinity is an elevated promontory, commanding extensive views into Westmorland and Yorkshire, and surrounded by a moat, which is supposed to have been used as a "look out," during the incursions of the Picts and Scots.

ALDINGTON, a parish partly in the liberty of ROMNEY-MARSH, but chiefly in the franchise and barony of BIRCHOLT, lathe of SHEPWAY, county of KENT, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. by N.) from Hythe, containing 735 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, with the perpetual curacy of Smeeth annexed, in the peculiar jurisdiction and patronage of the Archbishop of Canterbury, rated in the king's books at £38. 6. 8. The church, dedicated to St. Martin, displays the early style of English architecture in its general structure; but, among later additions, there is a finely ornamented window of five lights.

ALDINGTON, a hamlet in the parish of BADSEY, upper division of the hundred of BLACKENHURST, county of WORCESTER, 2 miles (E.) from Evesham, containing 87 inhabitants.

ALDRIDGE, a parish in the southern division of the hundred of OFFLOW, county of STAFFORD, 3 miles (E. N. E.) from Walsall, containing, with the chapelry of Great Barr, and the liberty of Bentley, 1682 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Stafford, and diocese of Lichfield and Coventry, rated in the king's books at £8. 1. 3., and in the patronage of Sir E. D. Scott, Bart. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. The neighbourhood affords a kind of clay, well adapted for the manufacture of the finest sort of pottery, tiles, &c. Here is an extensive distillery; and the trade of the district is greatly facilitated by the Wyrley and Essington Extension canal, which passes through the parish. A court leet is held once in two years. There are two free schools, one with an endowment of about £110 per annum, founded in 1718, by the Rev. John Jordan, in which from thirty to forty scholars are educated; and the other, for the education of eight poor girls, endowed with £12 per annum. A National school for girls, established in 1827, is supported by subscription. The remains of a Roman encampment are visible in the parish.

ALDRINGHAM, a parish in the hundred of BLYTHING, county of SUFFOLK, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. by W.) from Aldborough, containing, with the hamlet of Thorpe, 315 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Suffolk, and diocese of Norwich, endowed with £1000 royal bounty, and in the patronage of Lord Huntingfield. The church is dedicated to St. Andrew. There is a place of worship for Particular Baptists. A market was formerly held here, which has fallen into disuse: there is a small fair on St. Andrew's day.

ALDSTONE, county of CUMBERLAND. — See ALSTON.

ALDSWORTH, a parish in the hundred of BRIGHTWELL'S BARROW, county of GLOUCESTER, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles

(S. E.) from North Leach, containing 347 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the peculiar jurisdiction of the Vicar of Bibury, concurrently with the Consistorial Court of the Bishop of Gloucester, endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Dean and Canons of Christ Church, Oxford. The church is dedicated to St. Peter.

ALDWARD, a township in the parish of ECCLESFIELD, northern division of the wapentake of STRAFORTH and TICKHILL, West riding of the county of YORK, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. E.) from Rotherham, containing 35 inhabitants.

ALDWARK, a township in that part of the parish of BRADBORNE which is in the hundred of WIRKSWORTH, county of DERBY, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W. by W.) from Wirksworth, containing 92 inhabitants. This township is in the honour of Tutbury, duchy of Lancaster, and within the jurisdiction of a court of pleas held at Tutbury every third Tuesday, for the recovery of debts under 40s.

ALDWINKLE (ALL SAINTS), a parish in the hundred of HUXLOE, county of NORTHAMPTON, 4 miles (N.) from Thrapston, containing 240 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Northampton, and diocese of Peterborough, rated in the king's books at £12. 4. 2., and in the patronage of the Rev. R. Roberts, D.D. The church is remarkable for its beautiful tower; it has some windows in the decorated style of English architecture, and a small ornamented chapel adjoining the southern side of the chancel. Richard Thorpe, in 1671, bequeathed land, now producing £16 a year, for the support of a free school for this and the adjoining parish of St. Peter. The river Nene flows through the parish, in which there is a chalybeate spring. The poet Dryden was born at the parsonage-house, in 1631.

ALDWINKLE (ST. PETER'S), a parish in the hundred of HUXLOE, county of NORTHAMPTON, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. by E.) from Thrapston, containing 166 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Northampton, and diocese of Peterborough, rated in the king's books at £11. 6. 3., and in the patronage of Lord Lilford. There is a place of worship for Particular Baptists. The river Nene, which is navigable to the North sea, and communicates with the Northampton canal, flows through this parish, on the border of which are the remains of a singular cruciform building, called Liveden, erected by the Tresham family, and richly decorated with sculpture, especially round the cornice, which exhibits a Roman Catholic legend and a variety of religious symbols. Dr. Thomas Fuller, author of "The History of the Worthies of England," and other learned works, was born in this parish.

ALDWORK, a township in the parish of ALNE, partly in the liberty of St. Peter of York, East riding, and partly in the wapentake of BULMER, North riding, of the county of YORK, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. S. E.) from Aldborough, containing 163 inhabitants. The navigable river Ure runs through the township.

ALDWORTH, a parish in the hundred of COMPTON, county of BERKS, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. by S.) from East Ilsley, containing 293 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Berks, and diocese of Salisbury, rated in the king's books at £8. 16. 0 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of the Master and Fellows of St. John's College, Cambridge. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is an ancient structure, containing nine monuments, elegantly sculptured, supposed to represent different members of the De la Beche family, and to have been executed in the fourteenth century: the tombs are disposed under enriched arches; six of the effigies are habited as knights in armour, the seventh is in ordinary attire, and the remaining two are those of females. Aldworth is thought by Hearne to have been a Roman settlement.

ALEMOUTH, or ALNMOUTH, a sea-port and township in that part of the parish of LESBURY which is in the southern division of BAMBOURGH ward, county of NORTHUMBERLAND, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. S. E.) from Alnwick, containing 406 inhabitants. The village is situated on a tongue of land, formed by the sea and the mouth of the river Alne, whence its name. The port is subordinate to that of Berwick: about ten vessels, of from fifty to one hundred and fifty tons' burden, belong to it, which are chiefly employed in conveying goods to and from London. Corn, eggs, pork, &c., are sent to London, and wool to the manufacturing districts of Yorkshire, but the trade is not so extensive as formerly. Ship-building was carried on some years ago, but that also has declined. Alnmouth is partially resorted to, during the summer, for sea-bathing. A place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists was erected in 1826. On a small island, at the mouth of the river, was a chapel, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, the remains of which were blown down in 1806: at the time of its erection the site formed part of the main land, from which it was separated by the encroachments of the sea, and a change in the course of the river.

ALETHORPE, a hamlet in the parish of FAKENHAM, hundred of GALLOW, county of NORFOLK, 2 miles (N. E. by E.) from Fakenham, containing 9 inhabitants.

ALFOLD, a parish in the first division of the hundred of BLACKHEATH, county of SURREY, $8\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. E. by S.) from Godalming, containing 470 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Surrey, and diocese of Winchester, rated in the king's books at £6. 11. 2., and in the patronage of the Rev. L. W. Elliot. The Arun and Wey junction canal passes through this parish.

ALFORD, a market town and parish in the Wold division of the hundred of CALCEWORTH, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, 34 miles (E.) from Lincoln, and 137 (N. by E.) from London, containing 1506 inhabitants. It derives its name from an ancient ford over a stream that twice crosses the town, and consists principally of one street: the houses are in general built of brick and covered with tiles, though occasionally intermixed with some having thatched roofs. A canal from this town to the sea is now in progress, which promises to be productive of great benefit. The market is on Tuesday: the fairs are on Whit-Tuesday and the 8th of November. The living is a discharged vicarage, with the perpetual curacy of Rigsby, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £10, and in the patronage of the Bishop of Lincoln. The church, dedicated to St. Wilfred, is a stone edifice repaired with brick, and contains many ancient monuments. There are places of worship for Independents and Wesleyan Methodists. A court of requests, for sums not exceeding £5, is held once a month, under an act passed in the 47th of George III., the jurisdiction of which extends over several other towns in the county. The free grammar school was founded and endowed by Mr. Francis Spanning, in 1565; its revenue, which was but small, has been considerably augmented by subsequent benefactions. By a charter obtained in 1576, it was made a royal foundation, and the management vested in governors, who are a body corporate, and have a common seal. There are two quinquennial fellowships at Magdalene College, Cambridge, for its scholars, and a scholarship of £6. 8. 6. per annum at Jesus' College, Cambridge, for students from Alford, Caistor, or Louth schools. The National school, in which one hundred and thirty children of both sexes are instructed, was founded by Mr. John Spenliffe, who endowed it with an estate now producing £70 per annum. Almshouses for six people were erected and endowed by Sir Robert Christopher, Knt., in 1668; the endowment was subsequently augmented by Lord Harborough, in 1716. Alford confers the title of viscount on the family of Brownlow.

ALFORD, a parish in the hundred of CATSASH, county of SOMERSET, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (W. by N.) from Castle-Cary, containing 136 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Wells, and diocese of Bath and Wells, rated in the king's books at £9. 9. 9., and in the patronage of John Thring, Esq. The church is dedicated to All Saints. At a farm-house called Alford Well, about three quarters of a mile from the church, there is a saline chalybeate spring, now disused, but formerly in great repute for the cure of scorbutic complaints and jaundice.

ALFRETON, a market town and parish in the hundred of SCARSDALE, county of DERBY, 14 miles (N. N. E.) from Derby, and 140 (N. N. W.) from London, containing, with Alfreton-Outseats, 4689 inhabitants. This place, in King Ethelred's charter to Burton abbey, is called Alfredingtune, and is supposed to have derived its name from some Anglo-Saxon proprietor. It stands on the brow of a hill, and consists of two streets, intersecting each other at right angles in the market-place: the houses are irregularly built, some of them exhibiting specimens of ancient architecture. The only branches of manufacture are those of stockings and brown pottery ware. The Erewash canal passes through the parish. The market is on Friday: fairs are held on July 30th and November 22nd; the latter is also a statute fair. Constables and other officers are appointed at the court leet of the lord of the manor. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Derby, and diocese of Lichfield and Coventry, rated in the king's books at £17. 8. 9., endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of Mr. and Mrs. Morewood. The church, dedicated to St. Martin, appears to have been constructed at different periods, part of it prior to the reign of Henry II. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. A free school was founded by Mrs. Eliza Turner, in 1740, and endowed with forty acres of land at Swanwick, a hamlet in this parish, for the instruction of twelve boys and eight girls of Swanwick and Greenhill-lane, in reading, writing, and arithmetic; there are now forty children in the school; the house and farm are occupied by the schoolmaster.

ALFRICK, a chapelry in the parish of SUCKLEY, upper division of the hundred of DODDINGTREE, county of WORCESTER, 7 miles (W. by S.) from Worcester, containing 445 inhabitants. The chapel is dedicated to St. Mary. Here is a free school, with an endowment of £10 per annum.

ALFRISTON, a parish in the hundred of ALCISTON, rape of PEVENSEY, county of SUSSEX, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. E.) from Seaford, containing 648 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Lewes, and diocese of Chichester, rated in the king's books at £11. 16. 0 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of the Crown. The church, dedicated to St. Andrew, exhibits a mixture of the decorated and later styles of English architecture. On the neighbouring downs are several barrows, in some of which, urns, knives, spear-heads, and other articles, have been dug up: numerous wheat-ears are caught upon them in the month of August.

ALGARKIRK, a parish in the wapentake of KIRTON, parts of Holland, county of LINCOLN, $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W. by N.) from Holbeach, containing 602 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, with the perpetual curacy of Fosdike, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £50. 18. 1 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of the Trustees of the Rev. B. Berridge. The church is dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul: the burial-ground contains a stone statue, said to be that of Earl Algar, who, aided by his seneschals Wibert and Leofric, obtained a victory over the Danes near this place, in 870, but was defeated and slain the next day.

ALHAMPTON, a tything in the parish of DITCHEAT, hundred of WHITSTONE, county of SOMERSET, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W. by N.) from Castle-Cary. The population is returned with the parish. There was formerly a chapel at this place.

ALKERTON, a tything in the parish of EASTINGTON, lower division of the hundred of WHITSTONE, county of GLOUCESTER, 3 miles (W.) from Stroud, containing 963 inhabitants.

ALKERTON, a parish in the hundred of BLOXHAM, county of OXFORD, 6 miles (W. N. W.) from Banbury, containing 158 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford, rated in the king's books at £6. 3. 9., and in the patronage of the Rev. J. C. Townsend. The church is dedicated to St. Michael. Thomas Lydiat, the learned mathematician and chronologer, was born here, in 1573.

ALKHAM, a parish in the hundred of FOLKESTONE, lathe of SHEPWAY, county of KENT, 4 miles (W. by N.) from Dover, containing 509 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, with the perpetual curacy of Capel le Ferne annexed, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Canterbury, rated in the king's books at £11, and in the patronage of the Archbishop of Canterbury. The church, dedicated to St. Anthony, is partly Norman and partly in the early style of English architecture. According to Domesday-book a church existed here in the time of Edward the Confessor.

ALKINGTON, a tything in the parish and upper division of the hundred of BERKELEY, county of GLOUCESTER, $1\frac{1}{4}$ mile (S. E.) from Berkeley, containing 1101 inhabitants.

ALKINGTON, a township in that part of the parish of WHITCHURCH which is in the Whitchurch division of the hundred of BRADFORD (North), county of SALOP,

2 miles (S. by W.) from Whitchurch, with which the population is returned.

ALKMONTON, a township in the parish of LONGFORD, hundred of APPLETREE, county of DERBY, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. by E.) from Ashbourn, containing 81 inhabitants. There was anciently an hospital, dedicated to St. Leonard, between this place and Hungry-Bentley, in the same parish, to which Walter Blount, Lord Mountjoy, was a benefactor, in 1474.

ALKRINGTON, a township in the parish of OLDHAM cum PRESTWICH, hundred of SALFORD, county palatine of LANCASTER, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. N. E.) from Manchester, containing 365 inhabitants.

ALLARTHORP, a joint township with Swainby, in that part of the parish of PICKHILL which is in the wapentake of HALLIKELD, North riding of the county of YORK, 5 miles (E. by S.) from Bedale. The population is returned with Swainby.

ALLCANNINGS, a parish in the hundred of SWANBOROUGH, county of WILTS, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E.) from Devizes, containing, with the tythings of Allington and Fullaway, 749 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, with the perpetual curacy of Lea annexed, in the archdeaconry of Wilts, and diocese of Salisbury, rated in the king's books at £31. 16. 10 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of Paul Methuen, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Anne. Here is a free school, endowed with £25 per annum.

ALLEN (ST.), a parish in the western division of the hundred of POWDER, county of CORNWALL, 4 miles (N. by W.) from Truro, containing 471 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Cornwall, and diocese of Exeter, rated in the king's books at £8. 13. 4., and in the patronage of the Bishop of Exeter. The church is dedicated to St. Alleyn.

ALLENDALE, a parish in the southern division of TINDALE ward, county of NORTHUMBERLAND, $9\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. W. by W.) from Hexham, and 286 (N. N. W.) from London, comprising the market town of Allendale, and the townships of West Allendale, Broadside, Cotton, Keenty, and Forest, and containing 4629 inhabitants. The town is irregularly built on an acclivity gradually rising from the eastern bank of the river Allen, from which it derives its name, and is supplied with water from springs, which abound in the neighbourhood: a bridge was erected over this river in 1825, and in the same year a subscription library was established. The inhabitants are chiefly employed in the lead mines, which are very extensive, producing upwards of two thousand five hundred tons annually: there are several walks for grinding and washing the ore, and some smelting-houses, in one of which, twenty-one tons pass through the furnace weekly, from which a considerable quantity of silver is separated. An act for making a new line of road through this parish, from Wardle, in the county of Durham, to Alston-Moor, in Cumberland, was obtained in 1826. The market is on Friday; and the fairs are held on the last Friday in April, the 22nd of August, and the first Friday after the 29th of October, for horses, cattle, and sheep: in the market-place are the ruins of a cross. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the peculiar jurisdiction of the Archbishop of York, endowed with £200 private benefaction, £200 royal bounty, and £200 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of Col. and Mrs. Beaumont. The church is a neat edifice of stone, rebuilt in 1807.

Within the parish also are four chapels of ease, viz., St. Peter's, rebuilt in 1825; the chapel at Nine-Banks, partially rebuilt about 1816; the chapel at the Carr Shield, built in 1822; and that of Allenheads, rebuilt in 1826. There are places of worship for the Society of Friends and Wesleyan Methodists. A free grammar school was founded and endowed, in 1693, by Mr. Christopher Wilkinson and others; the master's salary is about £60 per annum. There are also various other schools connected with the different places of worship in the parish. At a place called Old Town, about three miles to the north-west, are vestiges of an ancient entrenchment, of a square form supposed to be Roman.

ALLENHEAD, or ALLONHEAD, a hamlet (formerly a distinct parish) in the parish of ALLENDALE, southern division of TINDALE ward, county of NORTHUMBERLAND, 14 miles (S. S. W.) from Hexham. The living was a vicarage, rated in the king's books at £4.8.1½., which has been consolidated with the perpetual curacy of St. Peter's, Allendale. Here is a domestic chapel, rebuilt by Col. Beaumont, in 1826, on the site of one erected in 1701: near it is a good house for the minister. There are several coal mines and veins of lead-ore in the neighbourhood, which are worked to a considerable extent.

ALLENSMORE, a parish in the hundred of WESTREE, county of HEREFORD, 4 miles (S. W.) from Hereford, containing 513 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, annexed to that of Clehonger, in the peculiar jurisdiction of the Dean of Hereford, rated in the king's books at £5.12.6., and endowed with £400 royal bounty. The church is dedicated to St. Andrew.

ALLENTON, or ALLWINTON, a parish in the western division of COQUETDALE ward, county of NORTHUMBERLAND, comprising the townships of Allenton, Biddlesdon, Borrowdon, Clennell, Fairhaugh, Farnham, Linbriggs, Netherton (North side), Netherton (South side), Peals, and Sharperton, and containing 900 inhabitants, of which number, 106 are in the township of Allenton, 19 miles (W. by S.) from Alnwick. The living is a perpetual curacy, with that of Hallstone, in the archdeaconry of Northumberland, and diocese of Durham, endowed with £400 private benefaction, and £600 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Bishop of Durham. The church is dedicated to St. Michael. The river Coquet pursues a winding course through this parish, and joins the Alwine, from which latter the name of Allwinton is derived. A free school, in which twenty-six children are instructed, is endowed with about £28 per annum, arising from a donation of £350 by Mr. John Dixon, and some minor benefactions. Here was formerly an hospital belonging to the convent at Hallstone. On the south side of the Coquet are vestiges of an ancient structure, called Barrow Peel, to the west of which is Ridlee Cairn hill supposed to have been burial-places of the ancient Britons.

ALLER, a parish in the hundred of SOMERTON, county of SOMERSET, 6½ miles (W.) from Somerton, containing 454 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Wells, and diocese of Bath and Wells, rated in the king's books at £36.15., and in the patronage of the Master and Fellows of Emanuel College, Cambridge. The church is dedicated to St.

Andrew. At this place, Guthrum, the Danish chief, received baptism, under the sponsorship of Alfred the Great, after the famous victory obtained by that monarch over the Danes at Ethandune. Aller Moor was the scene of a battle between the royalists and the parliamentarians, in 1645. Dr. Ralph Cudworth, author of "The Intellectual System of the Universe," was born here, in 1617.

ALLERBY, or ALWARDBY, a joint township with Outerside, in the parish of ASPATRIA, ALLERDALE ward below Derwent, county of CUMBERLAND, 7 miles (N. N. W.) from Cockermouth. The population is returned with Outerside.

ALLERSTON, a parish in PICKERING lythe, North riding of the county of YORK, 4½ miles (E. by S.) from Pickering, containing 401 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, united to the vicarage of Ebberston, in the peculiar jurisdiction of the Dean of York.

ALLERTHORPE, a parish partly in the liberty of St. PETER of YORK, but chiefly in the Wilton-Beacon division of the wapentake of HARTHILL, East riding of the county of YORK, comprising the townships of Allertorpe and Waplington, and containing 151 inhabitants, of which number, 132 are in the township of Allertorpe, 1½ mile (S. W. by W.) from Pocklington. The living is a perpetual curacy, with the vicarage of Thornton annexed, in the peculiar jurisdiction and patronage of the Dean of York.

ALLERTON, a township in the parish of CHILDWALL, hundred of WEST DERBY, county palatine of LANCASTER, 5½ miles (S. E.) from Liverpool, containing 328 inhabitants. Adjoining the farm on which stands the famous Allerton Oak there is a supposed Druidical monument, called Calder Stones, in digging around which, about sixty years ago, urns of the coarsest clay, containing human bones, were found.

ALLERTON, a township in the parish of BRADFORD, wapentake of MORLEY, West riding of the county of YORK, 4 miles (W. N. W.) from Bradford, containing 1488 inhabitants.

ALLERTON (CHAPEL), a parish in the hundred of BEMPSTONE, county of SOMERSET, 4½ miles (S. W. by S.) from Axbridge, containing 335 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the peculiar jurisdiction and patronage of the Dean of Wells, rated in the king's books at £10.8.4.

ALLERTON (CHAPEL), a chapelry in the parish of St. PETER, within the liberty of the town of LEEDS, West riding of the county of YORK, 2½ miles (N. by E.) from Leeds, containing 1678 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry and diocese of York, endowed with £400 private benefaction, and £600 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Vicar of Leeds. Robert Parker, of Browsholme, founded here an hospital for ten poor widows, and endowed it with £50 per annum.

ALLERTON-BYWATER, a township in the parish of KIPPAX, lower division of the wapentake of SKYRACK, West riding of the county of YORK, 4½ miles (N. W.) from Pontefract, containing 329 inhabitants.

ALLERTON-MAULEVERER, a parish in the upper division of the wapentake of CLARO, West riding of the county of YORK, 5½ miles (E. by N.) from Knaresborough, comprising the townships of Allerton-Mauleverer with Hopperton, and Clareton, and containing 290 inhabitants, of which number, 276 are in the township of Allerton-Mauleverer with Hopperton. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Richmond, and diocese of Chester, and in the patronage of Lord Stourton. The church is dedicated to St. Martin. This place obtained its distinguishing name from a family, one of whom, Richard Mauleverer, in the reign of Henry II., founded here an Alien priory of Benedictine monks, the revenue of which was given by Henry VI. to King's College, Cambridge.

ALLERTON (NORTH), a parish in the wapentake of ALLERTONSHIRE, North riding of the county of YORK, comprising the borough and market town of North Allerton, the chapelries of Brompton, Deighton, and High Worsall, and the township of Romanby, and containing 4431 inhabitants, of which number, 2626 are in the town of North Allerton, 32 miles (N.W. by N.) from York, and 224 (N.N.W.) from London. This place, supposed to have been a Roman station, and subsequently a Saxon borough, is in Domesday-book called Alvestune and Alreton, the prefix having been applied to distinguish it from Allerton-Mauleverer. It was greatly injured, if not destroyed, by Beornredus, or Earnredus, who, in 769, having invaded the kingdom of Northumberland, with a view to usurp the throne, burnt the town of Catterick, about eight miles distant. William Rufus gave the town, with the lands adjacent, to the see of Durham, and, under the patronage of the bishops, it grew into importance, and became an episcopal residence. At Cowton Moor, about three miles from the town, and within the parish, the celebrated battle of the Standard was fought, in 1138, between the English and the Scots, in which the latter were defeated, with the loss of eleven thousand men: the spot on which the standard was erected is still called Standard Hill, and the holes into which the dead were thrown, the Scots' Pits. About 1174, Henry II. ordered the demolition of the episcopal palace, supposed to have been built by Geoffrey, Bishop of Durham, and which had been strongly fortified by Bishop Pudsey; traces of the foundation are still visible on the western side of the town. In 1318, the Scots plundered and burnt the town. During the civil war, Charles I., in one of his journeys to Scotland, lodged here in an old mansion, called the Porch-house; and in the rebellion of 1745, the English army, under the Duke of Cumberland, encamped on the Castle hills. The town is pleasantly situated in a valley, and consists chiefly of one spacious street, half a mile in length, partially paved, and containing some good houses. It has long given name to a district called Allertonshire, now constituting the wapentake. The principal branches of manufacture are those of linen and leather: the market is on Wednesday; and fairs are held on February 14th, September 5th and 6th, October 3rd and 4th, and the second Wednesday in the latter month. The borough first exercised the elective franchise in the 26th of Edward I., but made no subsequent return till 1640, since which time it has regularly sent two members to parliament: the right of election is vested in the proprietors of ancient burgage houses, about two hundred in number. The bailiff, who is appointed by letters patent from the Bishop of Durham, is the returning officer. The general quarter sessions for the North riding are held here, in the weeks after Christmas and

VOL. I.

Easter, and on the 11th of July and the 18th of October; and there is a weekly meeting of the county magistrates. The sessions-house is an elegant building, erected about 1790, annexed to which is a house of correction, on the plan of Mr. Howard, containing thirty cells. Westward from the sessions-house is the registrar's office for the North riding, where the Bishop of Durham holds his courts.

The living is a vicarage, in the peculiar jurisdiction and patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Durham, rated in the king's books at £17. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is supposed to have been built soon after the destruction of the town by the Scots, in 1318: it is a spacious cruciform structure, in the decorated style of English architecture, with a square tower rising from the centre, and adorned with pinnacles at the angles. There are places of worship for Independents and Wesleyan Methodists. The free grammar (now the parochial) school is of royal foundation, but the date thereof is uncertain: it has a small endowment, and an interest in five scholarships, founded by Bishop Cosins, at Peter House, Cambridge, in failure of applicants from the school at Durham; it has also a contingent interest in twelve exhibitions to Lincoln College, Oxford, founded by Lord Crewe: the school-house was rebuilt in 1777. Dr. William Palliser, Archbishop of Cashel; Dr. George Hickes, Dean of Worcester, and author of a Dictionary of the Northern Languages; Dr. Thomas Burnet, master of the Charter-house, London; Mr. Rymer, editor of the Fœdera; Dr. Radcliffe; and the Rev. John Kettlewell, were educated here. A National school for boys and girls, and a Sunday school, established in 1787, are supported by subscription. An hospital, or Maison de Dieu, was founded in 1476, by Richard de Moore, a draper in this town, for thirteen poor people; it has been rebuilt at the expense of the inhabitants, but the number of inmates is reduced to six. The Rev. John Kettlewell, of St. Andrew's, Holborn, London, bequeathed, in 1694, an estate in the township of Brompton, called Low Moor Farm, the proceeds of which are divided among the poor of North Allerton and Brompton. There are some remains of a monastery of Carmelites, founded by Thomas Hatfield, Bishop of Durham; and the site of St. James' hospital, about a mile from the town, is still visible. There are also vestiges of a military road leading from Alby, the Derventio of the Romans, through this town to Catterick. North Allerton, in the reign of Anne, gave the title of viscount to the Elector of Hanover, afterwards George I. Edmund Guest, Bishop of Salisbury, almoner to Queen Elizabeth, was born in this town.

ALLESLEY, a parish in the Kirkby division of the hundred of KNIGHTLOW, county of WARWICK, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N.W. by W.) from Coventry, containing 844 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Coventry, and diocese of Lichfield and Coventry, rated in the king's books at £17. 18. 9., and in the patronage of the Rev. William Bree. The church is dedicated to All Saints. There is a free school, towards the support of which Mrs. Flint, in 1705, gave by deed a small portion of land, and a house for the residence of the master. Vestiges of an ancient castle are discernible in the parish.

ALLESTREY, a parish in the hundred of MORLESTON and LITTCURCH, county of DERBY, 2 miles (N.)

from Derby, containing 361 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Derby, and diocese of Lichfield and Coventry, and in the patronage of J. Munday, Esq. The church, dedicated to St. Andrew, is an ancient structure with a tower, containing several monuments of the Munday family. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. Allestrey forms part of the duchy of Lancaster, and is within the jurisdiction of a court of pleas held at Tutbury every third Tuesday, for the recovery of debts under 40s.

ALLEXTON, a parish in the eastern division of the hundred of GOSCOTE, county of LEICESTER, 4 miles (W. by N.) from Uppingham, containing 74 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Leicester, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £6. 18. 4., and in the patronage of Col. Wilson. The church is dedicated to St. Peter. The Union canal to Derby crosses the river Soar at this place.

ALLHALLOWS, a parish in ALLERDALE ward below Derwent, county of CUMBERLAND, 6½ miles (S. W. by S.) from Wigton, containing 219 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Carlisle, endowed with £200 private benefaction, £400 royal bounty, and £200 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Bishop of Carlisle. This was anciently a chapelry in the parish of Aspatria: it is bounded on the south by the river Ellen. Here are quarries of freestone and limestone, and a vein of coal of inferior quality. A little southward of Whitehall is an intrenchment, twenty-eight yards square, surrounded by a ditch.

ALLHALLOWS, a parish in the hundred of Hoo, lathe of AYLESFORD, county of KENT, 9 miles (N. E.) from Rochester, containing 259 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Rochester, rated in the king's books at £8. 7. 11., endowed with £400 private benefaction, and £400 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Rochester. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. The river Thames bounds this parish on the north.

ALLINGTON, a parish in the hundred of GODDERTHORNE, Bridport division of the county of DORSET, ¾ of a mile (N. W.) from Bridport, containing 1139 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Dorset, and diocese of Bristol, endowed with £1200 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Rev. H. Fox. The church, dedicated to St. Swithin, has been lately rebuilt, and enlarged by an addition of six hundred sittings, of which two-thirds are free, the Incorporated Society for the enlargement of churches and chapels having granted £400 towards defraying the expense. There is no burial-ground; the inhabitants inter their dead at Bridport, to which this was formerly a chapelry. Great quantities of hemp and flax are sown in the vicinity: a fair, chiefly for cheese and pedlary, is held on July 22nd. Two closes of land, containing thirty acres, are vested in trustees for the benefit of the poor in the almshouses of this parish and Charmouth. An hospital for lepers, dedicated to St. Mary Magdalene, was founded here, which, at the dissolution, in 1553, was valued at £7. 8. 4.

ALLINGTON, a parish in the hundred of LARKFIELD, lathe of AYLESFORD, county of KENT, 1½ mile (N. N. W.) from Maidstone, containing 45 inhabitants.

The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Rochester, rated in the king's books at £6. 16. 8., endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Earl of Romney. The church is dedicated to St. Lawrence. Allington stands on the western side of the Medway, opposite Aylesford, and was formerly a market town. Sir Thomas Wyatt, a distinguished poet in the reign of Henry VIII., was born at Allington castle, the remains of which have been converted into a farm-house.

ALLINGTON, a parish in the hundred of AMESBURY, county of WILTS, 3½ miles (E. S. E.) from Amesbury, containing 64 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Salisbury, rated in the king's books at £14. 13. 4., and in the patronage of the Earl of Craven. Here is a free school with a small endowment.

ALLINGTON, a tything in the parish and hundred of CHIPPENHAM, county of WILTS, 2½ miles (N. W. by W.) from Chippenham, containing 110 inhabitants.

ALLINGTON, a tything in the parish of ALLCANNINGS, hundred of SWANBOROUGH, county of WILTS, 4 miles (E. N. E.) from Devizes, containing 132 inhabitants.

ALLINGTON (EAST), a parish in the hundred of STANBOROUGH, county of DEVON, 3½ miles (N. E. by N.) from Kingsbridge, containing 615 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Totness, and diocese of Exeter, rated in the king's books at £32. 2. 1., and in the patronage of William Fortescue, Esq. The church, dedicated to St. Andrew, contains a wooden screen, which, with the pulpit, is much enriched with carved work.

ALLINGTON (EAST), a chapelry in the parish of SEDGEBROOK, wapentake of WINNIBRIGGS and THREE, parts of KESTIVEN, county of LINCOLN. The population is returned with the parish.

ALLINGTON (WEST), a parish in the hundred of STANBOROUGH, county of DEVON, 1 mile (W. S. W.) from Kingsbridge, containing 778 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, with the perpetual curacies of South Huish, Marlborough, and South Milton annexed, in the archdeaconry of Totness, and diocese of Exeter, rated in the king's books at £62. 16. 10½., and in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Salisbury. The church is dedicated to All Saints. There is a small endowed charity school. Cider of a peculiarly fine quality is made here. Bowringsleigh, an old mansion in the Elizabethan style, is still in good preservation: a more ancient seat, belonging to the family of Bastard, has been converted into a farm-house.

ALLINGTON (WEST), a parish in the wapentake of WINNIBRIGGS and THREE, parts of KESTIVEN, county of LINCOLN, 4½ miles (N. W. by W.) from Grant-ham, containing 357 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £3. 13. 11½., and in the patronage of the Crown. The church is dedicated to the Holy Trinity.

ALLITHWAITE (LOWER), a township in the parish of CARTMEL, hundred of LONSDALE, north of the sands, county palatine of LANCASTER, 2 miles (S.) from Cartmel, containing 839 inhabitants.

ALLITHWAITE (UPPER), a township in the parish of CARTMEL, hundred of LONSDALE, north of the sands, county palatine of LANCASTER, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. E.) from Cartmel, containing 771 inhabitants.

ALLONBY, a chapelry in that part of the parish of BROMFIELD which is in ALLERDALE ward below Derwent, county of CUMBERLAND, 9 miles (N. N. W.) from Cockermouth, containing 709 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Carlisle, endowed with £400 private benefaction, £600 royal bounty, and £1000 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Vicar of Bromfield. The chapel, dedicated to Christ, was built at the expense of Dr. Thomlinson and some relatives, in 1744. There is a meeting-house for the Society of Friends. The village stands on the coast of Allonby bay, which opens to the Solway Firth and the Irish sea, and is much frequented as a bathing-place, the sands being extremely smooth and firm. It was noted for a herring fishery, but this has failed, owing to the herrings having deserted the neighbouring sea; a few of the inhabitants are, however, still occupied in fishing. A school, in which ten children are instructed gratuitously, was endowed, in 1755, by Mrs. Thomlinson, relict of Dr. Thomlinson, with £100, since laid out in land producing £7. 10. per annum. Six cottages, forming the wings of a dwelling-house erected by Thomas Richardson, Esq., of Stamford Hill, London, a native of this place, are appropriated as rent-free residences to as many poor families. A court baron is held annually. Captain Joseph Huddart, F.R.S., an eminent naval engineer and hydrographer, who died in 1826, was born here, in 1741.

ALLOSTOCK, a township in that part of the parish of GREAT BUDWORTH which is in the hundred of NORTHWICH, county palatine of CHESTER, 5 miles (S. by W.) from Nether Knutsford, containing 461 inhabitants. There is a place of worship for Unitarians.

ALLSTONEFIELD, a parish in the northern division of the hundred of TOTMONSLOW, county of STAFFORD, $7\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. N. W.) from Ashbourn, comprising the chapelries of Upper Elkstone, Longnor, Quarford, and Warslow, and the townships of Lower Elkstone, Fairfield-Head, Heathy-Lee, and Hollinsclough, and containing 5169 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, with the perpetual curacy of Warslow annexed, in the archdeaconry of Stafford, and diocese of Lichfield and Coventry, rated in the king's books at £8. 11. 4., endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £900 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of Sir George Crewe, Bart. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a large structure in the early style of English architecture, with a tower ornamented with pinnacles and battlements: the pulpit, &c., were presented by Cotton, the poet, who resided here. Allstonefield forms the northern extremity of the county, being bounded by Cheshire and Derbyshire, from which it is separated by the river Dove. It belongs to the duchy of Lancaster, and is within the jurisdiction of a court of pleas held at Tutbury every third Tuesday, for the recovery of debts under 40s. Here is a small free school, founded by German Pole, in 1726.

ALLTON, a joint township with Idridgehay, in that part of the parish of WIRKSWORTH which is in the hundred of APPLETREE, county of DERBY, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S.) from Wirksworth. The population is returned with Idridgehay.

ALMELEY, a parish partly in the hundred of WOLPHY, but chiefly in the hundred of STRETFORD, county of HEREFORD, $5\frac{1}{4}$ miles (W.) from Weobley, containing, with the townships of Hopley's Green and Logaston, 699 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Hereford, rated in the king's books at £6. 17. 11., and in the patronage of the Bishop of Hereford. The church is dedicated to St. Mary: at a short distance from it are two tumuli. The petty sessions for the hundred are occasionally held here.

ALMER, a parish in the hundred of LOOSEBARROW, Shaston (East) division of the county of DORSET, $5\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. S. E.) from Blandford-Forum, containing, with the hamlet of Mapperton, 188 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Dorset, and diocese of Bristol, rated in the king's books at £13. 5. 8., and in the patronage of R. E. D. Grosvenor, Esq. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a small edifice, rebuilt by Gen. Erle.

ALMINGTON, a township in that part of the parish of DRAYTON in HALES which is in the northern division of the hundred of FIREHILL, county of STAFFORD, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (E. by N.) from Drayton in Hales, containing 260 inhabitants.

ALMINGTON, a joint township with Stone-Delph, in that part of the parish of TAMWORTH which is in the Tamworth division of the hundred of HELMINGFORD, county of WARWICK, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E.) from Tamworth, containing, with Stone-Delph, 257 inhabitants.

ALMODINGTON, a hamlet (formerly a parish) in the parish of EARNLEY, hundred of MANHOOD, rape of CHICHESTER, county of SUSSEX, 6 miles (S. W. by S.) from Chichester. The living, a rectory, was consolidated, in 1524, with that of Earnley, with which parish the population is returned. The chapel is demolished.

ALMONDBURY, a parish in the upper division of the wapentake of AGBRIGG, West riding of the county of YORK, comprising the chapelries of South Crossland, Farnley-Tyas, Honley, Linthwaite, Lockwood, and Meltham, a portion of the chapelry of Marsden, and the townships of Almondbury, Austonley, Holme, Lingarths, Nether Thong, and Upper Thong, and containing 23,979 inhabitants, of which number, 5679 are in the township of Almondbury, $1\frac{1}{4}$ mile (S. E.) from Huddersfield. The living is a vicarage, within the jurisdiction of the peculiar court of the lord of the manor, rated in the king's books at £20. 7. 11., and in the patronage of the Governors of Clitheroe school. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is in that character of the later style of English architecture which prevails in the northern counties. New churches have been erected at Crossland, Linthwaite, and Nether Thong. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. This is supposed to have been the Cambodunum of Antoninus: here was a royal palace belonging to the Anglo-Saxon monarchs, and near its site is a hill, upon which are vestiges of a rampart and the remains of a fortification. There are numerous manufactories for fancy goods and woollen cloth in the parish. A free grammar school was founded by letters patent of James I., the annual income of which amounts to about £76, arising from lands and rent-charges demised by Robert Nettleton and other benefactors. In 1724, Israel Wormall bequeathed land, the produce of which he directed to be applied towards instructing and apprenticing poor children of this place.

ALMONDSBURY, a parish comprising the tything of Almondsbury, in the lower division of the hundred of BERKELEY, and the tythings of Hempton with Patchway, Over, and Lower Tockington, in the lower division of the hundred of LANGLEY and SWINEHEAD, county of GLOUCESTER, and containing 1408 inhabitants, of which number, 477 are in the tything of Almondsbury, $4\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. by W.) from Thornbury. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the peculiar jurisdiction and patronage of the Bishop of Bristol, rated in the king's books at £20. The church, situated in that part of the parish which is in the hundred of Berkeley, is dedicated to St. Mary: it is a handsome cruciform structure, in the early English style, with a tower and spire at the intersection. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. The village is situated at the foot of a ridge of limestone rocks, near the small river Boyd, which falls into the lower Avon: the views from the heights are remarkably grand and extensive, embracing the whole æstuary of the Severn, and the opposite coast of Wales. Here is a free school with a small endowment.

ALMSFORD, a parish in the hundred of CATSASH, county of SOMERSET, $\frac{3}{4}$ of a mile (N.) from Castle-Cary, containing 300 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Wells, and diocese of Bath and Wells, rated in the king's books at £7. 12. 1., and in the patronage of J. Woodford, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Andrew.

ALNE, a parish partly in the liberty of St. PETER of YORK, East riding, but chiefly in the wapentake of BULMER, North riding, of the county of YORK, comprising the townships of Aldwork, Alne, Flawith, Tholthorp, Tollerton, and Youlton, and containing 1418 inhabitants, of which number, 386 are in the township of Alne, $4\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. S. W.) from Easingwold. The living is a discharged vicarage, within the jurisdiction of the peculiar court of Alne and Tollerton, rated in the king's books at £10, and in the patronage of R. Bethell, Esq. The church is a handsome structure, dedicated to St. Mary. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists.

ALNE (GREAT), a chapelry in the parish of KINWARTON, Alcester division of the hundred of BARLICHWAY, county of WARWICK, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. E. by E.) from Alcester, containing 317 inhabitants. The chapel is dedicated to St. Mary Magdalene.

ALNHAM, a parish in the northern division of COQUETDALE ward, county of NORTHUMBERLAND, comprising the townships of Alnham, Prendick, Screnwood, and Unthank, and containing 269 inhabitants, of which number, 143 are in the township of Alnham, 14 miles (W.) from Alnwick. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Northumberland, and diocese of Durham, rated in the king's books at £3. 17. 1., endowed with £400 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Duke of Northumberland. The church is dedicated to St. Michael. On a hill, about a mile westward from the village, there is a semicircular encampment, defended by a high double rampart and deep trench, within which is a range of uncemented stones; and in the area, about one hundred yards in diameter, the foundations of buildings are visible.

ALNWICK, a market town and parish in the eastern division of COQUETDALE ward, county of NORTH-

UMBERLAND, 34 miles (N. by W.) from Newcastle upon Tyne, and 319 (N. by W.) from London, on the great north road, containing 5927 inhabitants. This place derives its name from its situation near the river Alne. In 1093, it was besieged by Malcolm III., King of Scotland, and bravely defended by Mowbray, Earl of Northumberland. Malcolm, with his son and heir, Prince Edward, were slain during the siege, which event is commemorated by a cross, erected about a mile from the town, called Malcolm's Cross, rebuilt in 1774 by the Duchess of Northumberland, a lineal descendant of the Scottish monarch. In 1135, the town was taken by David, King of Scotland; and, in 1174, William, King of Scotland, with eighty thousand men, laid siege to it, but was defeated and captured by Ralph de Glanville, who sent him prisoner to London, whence he was afterwards ransomed by his subjects for £100,000. In 1215, Alnwick was nearly reduced to ashes by King John; but it appears to have been speedily rebuilt, for, about five years afterwards, Gualo, the pope's legate, summoned a council of the Scottish bishops to be held here. In 1328, it was again besieged by the Scots, under Robert Bruce, their king, but without success. In 1411, the castle (supposed to have been originally erected by the Saxons, on the site of a Roman fortress, and which was, at the Conquest, the baronial residence of the then Earl of Northumberland) was embattled, and the town surrounded with a strong wall, to protect it from the predatory incursions of the Scots, by whom, in 1448, it was burnt, in revenge for the burning of Dumfries by the English. After the battle of Hexham, in 1463, the castle, which was in the interest of the house of Lancaster, was summoned by the Earl of Warwick; but the garrison, though unable to sustain a protracted siege, retained possession till they were relieved by Sir George Douglas, who, at the head of a considerable force, afforded them an opportunity of retiring unmolested. Alnwick abbey was founded, in 1147, by Eustace Fitz-John, who endowed it for Premonstratensian canons: the abbots were summoned to some of the parliaments in the reigns of Edwards I. and II.; its revenue, at the dissolution, was £194. 7.: only the gateway remains, which has been fitted up as a lodge to the castle. Here were also an hospital, founded by some of the Percy family, and dedicated to St. Lawrence, and a chapel, dedicated to St. Thomas.

Alnwick is situated on the irregular declivity of an eminence rising from the river Alne, over which, at the northern extremity of the town, is a neat stone bridge of three arches: the streets are spacious, well paved, and lighted with gas, under an act obtained in 1822; the houses, built of stone, are chiefly modern, and many of them elegant; and the inhabitants are amply supplied with water from cisterns and reservoirs, and by pumps erected by the corporation in various parts of the town: assemblies occasionally take place. A subscription library was established in 1783, and a scientific and mechanics' institute in 1824. The castle, now the magnificent residence of the Duke of Northumberland, is a stately structure, comprising two spacious wards, with lofty towers and exploratory turrets: it has been repaired with a due regard to its ancient style, and fitted up with the most sumptuous grandeur. The town walls were strengthened by four square and massive gateway towers, of which Bondgate is the only one remaining, and is now used as a prison. The trade and manufactures are inconsiderable: the parish contains coal, limestone, freestone, whinstone, and marble. The market is on Saturday: fairs are held on the 12th of May, the last Monday in July, the first Tuesday in October, the 28th of that month, and the last Saturday before Christmas-day; there are also statute fairs on the first Saturday in March and November. On the eve of each fair the inhabitants of the adjacent townships send deputies to attend the bailiff in the ceremony of proclamation; after which they keep watch and ward in the several quarters of the town for the remainder of the night, by which service they are exempt from toll within the borough for the next twelve months.

The corporation, which is a prescriptive body, consists of a bailiff, nominated by the Duke of Northumberland, as constable of the castle, four chamberlains, and twenty-four common council-men: the chamberlains are chosen from among the common council, and the latter from among the freemen of the several incorporated companies. The freedom is inherited by the eldest sons of freemen, or acquired by servitude. Each candidate, on taking up his freedom, is, by the provisions of King John's charter, subjected to the ludicrous ceremony of passing through a miry pool, thence called the "Freeman's Well." The officers of the corporation possess no magisterial authority, the town being within the jurisdiction of the county magistrates, who meet every alternate week: the quarter sessions for the county are held here in turn with Hexham, Newcastle, and Morpeth; the county court is held monthly, and courts leet and baron at Easter and Michaelmas, by the Duke of Northumberland, as lord of the manor: a manorial court is held also for the township of Canon-gate. The members of parliament and coroners for the county are elected here. The town hall is a handsome stone building surmounted by a square tower, erected in 1731, and commodiously arranged for the transaction of the public business: it is situated on the northern side of the market-place, a spacious area in the centre of the town, on the western side of which stands the market-house, a fine building in the early style of English architecture, containing seven spacious apartments, under which are the shambles, erected in 1827. The house of correction, near the Green Bat, was built in 1807. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Northumberland, and diocese of Durham, and in the patronage of the Duke of Northumberland. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a large building with a neat tower: the chancel was repaired and embellished, in 1781, by the Duke of Northumberland: in a niche in the south aisle are three recumbent figures in stone. There are places of worship for Antiburghers, Burghers, Independents, Primitive and Wesleyan Methodists, Presbyterians, Unitarians, and Roman Catholics. The free school, near the West-gate, for preparing the sons of freemen for the mathematical school, is principally supported by the corporation; the mathematical school, and a school for the daughters of freemen, are supported by subscription. A National school for two hundred boys was founded, in 1810, by the Duke of Northumberland, in commemoration of George III. having completed the fiftieth year of his reign; and a school for clothing and educating fifty poor girls has been instituted by the Duchess of Northumberland:

there are also several Sunday schools. A dispensary was established in 1815, and a savings bank in the following year. In the vicinity are two encampments, supposed to be of Danish origin; and, about the year 1726, a considerable number of military weapons, which probably belonged to the ancient Britons, was found in Hulne park. Alnwick gives the inferior title of baron to the Earl of Beverley.

ALPHAMSTONE, a parish in the hundred of HINCKFORD, county of ESSEX, 6 miles (N. E. by E.) from Halstead, containing 244 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Middlesex, and diocese of London, rated in the king's books at £11, and in the patronage of the Crown.

ALPHETON, a parish in the hundred of BABERGH, county of SUFFOLK, 6½ miles (N. by E.) from Sudbury, containing 264 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Sudbury, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £10. 1. 8., and in the patronage of the Rev. T. G. Dickinson.

ALPHINGTON, a parish in the hundred of WONFORD, county of DEVON, 1½ mile (S.) from Exeter, containing 1070 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Exeter, rated in the king's books at £34. 6. 8., and in the patronage of the Rev. R. Ellicombe. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, has a circular Norman font, with intersecting arches and scroll ornaments. Fairs for cattle are held here on the first Wednesdays after June 20th and Michaelmas-day. The river Exe and the Exeter canal pass through the parish, in directions parallel with each other. The lord of the manor had anciently the power of inflicting capital punishment.

ALPINGTON, a parish in the hundred of LODDON, county of NORFOLK, 6 miles (S. E.) from Norwich, containing, with Yelverton, 169 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, with that of Yelverton united, in the archdeaconry of Norfolk, and diocese of Norwich, and in the patronage of the Crown.

ALPRAHAM, a township in that part of the parish of BUNBURY which is in the first division of the hundred of EDDISBURY, county palatine of CHESTER, 3½ miles (S. E. by E.) from Tarporley, containing 409 inhabitants. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists.

ALRESFORD, a parish in the hundred of TENDRING, county of ESSEX, 6½ miles (S. E. by E.) from Colchester, containing 270 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Colchester, and diocese of London, rated in the king's books at £8, and in the patronage of the Rev. T. Newman. The church is dedicated to St. Peter.

ALRESFORD (NEW), a market town and chapelry in the parish of OLD ALRESFORD, liberty of ALRESFORD, Alton (North) division of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, 6 miles (N. E. by E.) from Winchester, and 57 (S. W. by W.) from London, on the high road to Winchester, containing 1129 inhabitants. It derives its name from its situation near a ford on the river Arle. The manor was given to the church of Winchester by Cenwalh, King of the West Saxons, after his baptism by Bishop Birinus. About 1220, Godfrey de Lucy, Bishop of Winchester, restored the market, then fallen into disuse. On May-day, 1690, the town was destroyed by fire, previously to which it was so prosperous, that there was not an individual requiring parochial relief. In 1710, a similar calamity occurred. Alresford pond is a fine piece of water, through which runs the river Itchen. The northern embankment is formed by a causeway, nearly five hundred yards in length, which constituted part of the main road to London previously to 1753, when the present one was made through Bishop's Sutton. This work was accomplished by Bishop de Lucy, under a grant from King John, with a view to the improvement of his grounds, and to increase the depth of the river Itchen, which was formerly navigable to Southampton water, though of late it has ceased to be so higher than Winchester. As a recompense for this arduous undertaking, the bishop obtained, for himself and his successors, the entire royalty of the river from the reservoir to the sea. The market is on Thursday; and fairs are held on Holy Thursday, the last Thursday in July and November, and the Thursday next after Old Michaelmas-day, almost exclusively for sheep. Alresford was incorporated at a very early period, and returned one representative to parliament in the 23rd of Edward I. The corporation consists of a bailiff, appointed by the Bishop of Winchester, and eight burgesses, who, by virtue of a lease from the bishop, receive the tolls of the market, but exercise no magisterial authority. A court leet is held at Michaelmas, when the bailiff is chosen; and the county magistrates hold a petty session weekly, for the division of Alton. This place is within the jurisdiction of the Cheyney Court held at Winchester every Thursday, for the recovery of debts to any amount. There is a place of worship for Independents. H. Perrin, Esq. founded a school for nineteen boys, sons of poor tradesmen in the town, and the neighbouring villages of Old Alresford, Sutton, and Tichbourne; it is endowed with a good house for the master, and fifty-two acres of land, now let for £100 per annum. At Bramdean, about three miles distant, a tessellated pavement was discovered about five years ago, one part of which represents the wrestling match between Hercules and Antæus. Among the seats in the neighbourhood are those of Lord Rodney, Sir Henry Tichbourne, Bart., and Alexander Baring, Esq., which last, called the Grange, is a beautiful copy of the Parthenon at Athens.

ALRESFORD (OLD), a parish in the hundred of FAWLEY, Fawley division of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, $\frac{1}{2}$ of a mile (N.) from New Alresford, containing 445 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, with the perpetual curacy of Medsted annexed, in the peculiar jurisdiction of the Incumbent, rated in the king's books at £49. 12. 8 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of the Bishop of Winchester. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. The river Itchen runs through this parish. Old Alresford is within the jurisdiction of the Cheyney Court held at Winchester every Thursday, for the recovery of debts to any amount. Admiral Lord Rodney occupied a mansion in the neighbourhood.

ALREWAS, a parish in the northern division of the hundred of OFFLOW, county of STAFFORD, 5 miles (N.E. by N.) from Lichfield, containing, with the hamlets of Fradley and Orgreave, 1492 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the peculiar jurisdiction of the Prebendary of Alrewas and Weeford in the Cathedral Church of Lichfield, rated in the king's books at £5. 6. 8., and in the patronage of the Chancellor in that Cathedral. The church is dedicated to All Saints. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. The parish is bounded by the Trent on the north, and by the Tame on the east; and the Grand Trunk and Coventry canals pass through it, the former to its junction with the Trent at this place. Courts leet and baron for the manor are held twice a year: the custom of Borough English prevails here. A National school has been established.

ALREWAS-HAYES, an extra-parochial liberty, in the northern division of the hundred of OFFLOW, county of STAFFORD, 5 $\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. N. E.) from Lichfield, containing 74 inhabitants.

ALSAGER, a chapelry in that part of the parish of BARTHOMLEY which is in the hundred of NANTWICH, county palatine of CHESTER, 5 $\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. E. by S.) from Sandbach, containing 359 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Chester, and in the patronage of the Lord of the Manor. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. A school, for the education of children of both sexes, was founded and endowed by Mary, Judith, and Margaret Alsager, who also built and endowed the chapel.

ALSOP le DALE, a chapelry in that part of the parish of ASHBOURN which is in the hundred of WIRKSWORTH, county of DERBY, 5 $\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. by W.) from Ashbourn. The population is returned with the township of Eaton. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Derby, and diocese of Lichfield and Coventry, and in the patronage of the inhabitant freeholders. The chapel, dedicated to St. Michael, is of Norman architecture, with many modern alterations. Alsop is in the honour of Tutbury, duchy of Lancaster, and within the jurisdiction of a court of pleas held at Tutbury every third Tuesday, for the recovery of debts under 40s.

ALSTON, or ALSTON-MOOR, a market town and parish in LEATH ward, county of CUMBERLAND, 29 miles (E. S. E.) from Carlisle, and 287 (N. N. W.) from London, containing, with the chapelry of Garrigill, 5699 inhabitants. The town is situated on the declivity of a steep hill, in a narrow valley, near the confluence of the rivers Nent and South Tyne, over each of which is a neat stone bridge. The houses, which are irregularly built, are chiefly of stone, roofed with slate, and the inhabitants are supplied with water conveyed by pipes from an excellent spring, about half a mile distant, into four punts, or cisterns, conveniently placed in different parts of the town. A subscription library was established in 1821, in commemoration of the coronation of George IV.; and races are held on Easter Monday and Tuesday. An excellent new line of road has lately been made, under the superintendence of Mr. M^r Adam, from Hexham to Penrith, through Alston, which is shorter by several miles than that by way of Carlisle. In several parts are beautiful views of the surrounding country, particularly from Hartside, which embraces the counties of Cumberland and Westmorland, including the lake of Ulswater, and the mountains of the lake district, Solway Frith, and the adjacent Scottish shore. This district, which is enclosed on the west by the mountains Cross-fell and Hartside, and on all sides by high lands, is equally remarkable for its sterility of agricultural produce, and its abundance of mineral wealth. The lead mines, in which the inhabitants are chiefly employed, are very extensive and productive; there are not less than thirty-eight in the parish, and the quantity of lead produced in the year 1830 was about five thousand tons, which is considerably less than the average quantity for several years preceding. The ore contains a proportion of silver, averaging from eight to ten ounces per ton; and one of the mines, opened at Yadmos in 1828, has produced ore containing ninety-six ounces of silver in each ton. Copper-ore has also been found in the same vein with the lead, and in many instances the same mine has been worked for copper ore of excellent quality, and lead-ore, which is rich in silver. The grand aqueduct level, called "Nent Force," was cut by the trustees of Greenwich Hospital, under whom the estate is held, pursuant to an act which transferred these estates from the family of James, third Earl of Derwentwater, who was beheaded for high-treason in the reign of George I.; this subterraneous canal is five miles in length, from its mouth near the town to the shaft of the mine; boats and guides are kept in constant readiness to conduct those who may wish to explore it. In the mines are several extensive caverns splendidly decorated with fluor-spar, shot into crystals of every form and hue; and where the yellow copper-ore and pyrites are intermingled, nothing can exceed the brilliancy with which the prismatic colours are reflected. Of these, Tutman's hole has been explored to the distance of a mile from the entrance; and in that at Dun fell, on the side of Alston Moor, the chambers and windings are so intricate, that visitors have been glad to avail themselves of some clue to their return. Among other minerals found here are pyrites of iron, containing small portions of gold, tessellated ore, zinc, phosphate and sulphate of lead, cobalt, &c. The crow coal, found on the moor, at a small depth below the surface, contains pyrites in large proportion; it burns with little flame, but emits an intense heat, and, mixed with clay, is made into fire-balls. There are two large smelting furnaces, and several machines worked by water for crushing and washing the ore. The principal manufactures are those of shot, sewing thread, and flannel, which are extensively carried on; and there is also a public brewery on a large scale. The market is on Saturday: fairs are held on the last Thursday in May, Friday before the last day of September, and the first Thursday in November. Two of the county magistrates hold a petty session at the Swan Inn on the first Friday in every month, and courts leet and baron are held in the months next after Easter and Michaelmas.

The living is a discharged vicarage, within the jurisdiction of the Consistorial Court of Durham, rated in the king's books at £7. 13., endowed with £600 private benefaction, £800 royal bounty, and £1000 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Governors of Greenwich Hospital for two turns, and of William Jackson, Esq. for one. The church, dedicated to St. Augustine, was rebuilt in 1770. A chapel of ease is situated at Garrigill, a populous village four miles south-east of the town. There are places of worship for the Society of Friends, Independents, and Primitive and Wesleyan Methodists. The grammar school was rebuilt by subscription in 1828, and is endowed with £26 per annum.

No scholars are gratuitously instructed, but the master, in consideration of the endowment, is limited to a certain scale of charges for boys attending it. There is a similar school at Garrigill, endowed with £7. 4. 1. per annum; and a Lancasterian school for two hundred children was erected in 1811, and is supported by subscription. At Nent Head, a large populous village on the eastern border of the parish, where a customary market is held on Thursday, a National school was established by the London Lead Company, in 1820, and is partly supported by them, and partly by the Governors of Greenwich Hospital. On Gildersdale fell is a stagnant pool, covered with mud several inches thick, which is used by the neighbouring people as paint: it produces colours resembling yellow ochre and Spanish brown, but has not been analysed. The Roman road called Maidenway, traces of which are distinctly visible, crosses the western part of the parish; and on Hall hill, a little below the bridge over the Tyne, are the foundations of an ancient fortress, surrounded by a moat.

ALSTON, a joint township with Hothersall, in that part of the parish of RIBCHESTER which is in the hundred of AMOUNDERNESS, county palatine of LANCASTER, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N.E.) from Preston, containing, with Hothersall, 948 inhabitants.

ALSTONE, a hamlet in the parish and hundred of CHELTENHAM, county of GLOUCESTER, $\frac{3}{4}$ of a mile (N. W. by W.) from Cheltenham, with which town the population is returned. Here is a chalybeate saline spa, for an account of which see CHELTENHAM.

ALSTONE, a chapelry in the parish of OVERBURY, middle division of the hundred of OSWALDSLOW, county of WORCESTER, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. by S.) from Tewkesbury, containing 79 inhabitants. The chapel is dedicated to St. Margaret.

ALTCAR, a parish in the hundred of WEST DERBY, county palatine of LANCASTER, 7 miles (W. by S.) from Ormskirk, containing 499 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Chester, endowed with £600 royal bounty, and £1200 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Earl of Sefton. The church is dedicated to St. Michael. The small river Alt runs through the parish. Here is a school, with a small endowment by the Earl of Sefton.

ALTERNON, a parish in the hundred of LES-NEWTN, county of CORNWALL, $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. S. W.) from Launceston, containing 885 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Cornwall, and diocese of Exeter, rated in the king's books at £18. 5., and in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Exeter. The church is dedicated to St. Nunn. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists.

ALTHAM, a chapelry in that part of the parish of WHALLEY which is in the higher division of the hundred of BLACKBURN, county palatine of LANCASTER, 5 miles (W.) from Burnley, containing 439 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Chester, endowed with £10 per annum private benefaction, £400 royal bounty, and £800 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of Earl Howe. The chapel is dedicated to St. James. Coal is obtained in the vicinity.

ALTHORNE, a parish in the hundred of DENGIE, county of ESSEX, 4 miles (N. W.) from Burnham, containing 352 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, united to the rectory of Creeksea in 1811, in the archdeaconry of Essex, and diocese of London, rated in the king's books at £14, and endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty. The church is dedicated to St. Andrew. The estuary of the river Crouch is in this parish, in which there are very strong embankments, which are about nine feet high, intended to protect the low lands from inundation, constructed by labourers from Holland, whose descendants are still resident here.

ALTHORP, a parish in the western division of the wapentake of MANLEY, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, 11 miles (W. by N.) from Glandford-Bridge, comprising the chapelry of Amcotts, and the township of Keadby, and containing 877 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Stow, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £25, endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £400 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Crown. The church is dedicated to St. Oswald.

ALTOFTS, a township in the parish of NORMANTON, lower division of the wapentake of AGRIC, West riding of the county of YORK, 3½ miles (N. E. by E.) from Wakefield, containing 404 inhabitants.

ALTON, a market town and parish in the hundred of ALTON, Alton (North) division of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, 30 miles (N. E.) from Southampton, and 47 (S. W. by W.) from London, containing 2499 inhabitants. The name, a contraction of Old Town, is descriptive of its great antiquity, having been a royal demesne in the reign of Alfred: it sent one member to parliament in the 23rd of Edward I. In 1643, the town was occupied by a detachment of the royal army, commanded by Sir Ralph Hopton, who was soon after defeated by Sir William Waller. It consists of three principal streets, partially paved by subscription, and lighted, and is pleasantly situated on the river Wey, which turns a silk-mill. The manufacture of bombazines, once of considerable extent, has decayed: the hop-plantations are extensive, and there are two large breweries in the town. The market, principally for corn, is on Saturday; and fairs are held on the Saturday before May 1st, and September 29th, for horses and cattle. Alton is within the jurisdiction of the county magistrates, who hold petty sessions here for the division of Alton (North). Constables and other officers are chosen at the court leet of the lord of the manor. The town hall, part of which is used as a National school-house, stands in the market-place; and a court for the recovery of debts under 40s. is held in it every third week. The living is a vicarage, with the perpetual curacy of Binsted annexed, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Winchester, rated in the king's books at £15, and in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Winchester. The church, dedicated to St. Lawrence, is a spacious structure, principally in the later style of English architecture, but with some earlier portions: it has a square embattled tower surmounted by a spire. There are places of worship for the Society of Friends, Independents, and Presbyterians. A grammar school was founded by John Egger for twenty-five boys: there are about two hundred children of both sexes in the National school. At Holybourn there is a charity school for forty boys and twenty girls. John Pitts, the biographer, and William Curtis, the botanist, were natives of this town.

ALTON-BARNES, a parish in the hundred of SWANBOROUGH, county of WILTS, 7 miles (E.) from Devizes, containing 110 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Wilts, and diocese of Salisbury, rated in the king's books at £6. 18. 11½, and in the patronage of the Warden and Fellows of New College, Oxford. The church is dedicated to St. Mary.

ALTON-PANCRAS, a parish and liberty in the Cerne subdivision of the county of DORSET, 8½ miles (N.) from Dorchester, containing 207 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the peculiar jurisdiction of the Dean of Salisbury, rated in the king's books at £9, and in the patronage of the Crown. The church is dedicated to St. Andrew.

ALTON-PRIORS, a chapelry in that part of the parish of OVERTON which is in the hundred of ELSTON and EVERLEY, county of WILTS, 7 miles (E. by N.) from Devizes, containing, with the tything of Stowell, 166 inhabitants. The chapel is dedicated to All Saints.

ALTRINCHAM, a market town and chapelry in the parish of BOWDON, hundred of BUCKLOW, county palatine of CHESTER, 7 miles (N. by E.) from Nether Knutsford, and 179½ (N. W. by N.) from London, containing 2302 inhabitants. The town is situated on Bowdon Downs, and though small, contains several respectable dwelling-houses, the salu-brity of the air rendering it a place of general resort for invalids from Manchester: it is watched and lighted by subscription, and is characterised throughout by cleanliness and neatness. The trade principally consists in the spinning of yarn, the making of bobbins for cotton and worsted spinners, and the weaving of cotton by hand-loom for the manufacturers at Manchester and other adjacent towns. The Duke of Bridgewater's canal from Manchester to Runcorn passes through the town, and affords a facility of conveyance for coal. Early potatoes are cultivated here to a great extent for the Manchester market. The market days are Tuesday and Saturday, the latter being only for butchers' meat: the fairs, chiefly for the sale of live stock, are held on April 29th, August 5th, and November 22nd; to the two last are attached courts of pie-powder. Altrincham was made a free borough in the reign of Edward I., by charter of Hamon de Massey, lord of the barony of Dunham-Massey, whereby the burgesses were empowered to have a guild merchant, and to choose a prepositus, or bailiff; but the only privilege they now possess is that of electing a mayor at a court leet held in autumn, when a jury of burgesses present three of their own body to the steward, who appoints one to the office, which is merely nominal, and the duty of which extends only to the opening of the fairs, the town being wholly within the jurisdiction of the county magistrates. Pleas were formerly held in the lord's court, but they have of late been discontinued. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Chester, endowed with £1000 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Earl of Stamford and Warrington. The chapel, dedicated to St. George, is a plain brick building, erected by subscription in 1799. There are two places of worship for Methodists, and one for Unitarians. The Jubilee school, built in 1810, is supported by subscription.

ALVANLEY, a chapelry in the parish of FRODSHAM, second division of the hundred of EDDISBURY, county palatine of CHESTER, 3 miles (S. S. W.) from Frodsham, containing 284 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Chester, and in the patronage of J. Arden, Esq. The chapel is dedicated to St. Mary: from 1787 till within these few years the performance of divine service was discontinued in it, in consequence of the smallness of the minister's income. Alvanley gives the title of baron to the Arden family.

ALVASTON, a township in the parish and hundred of NANTWICH, county palatine of CHESTER, 2½ miles (N. E.) from Nantwich, containing 37 inhabitants. Races are held annually in this township.

ALVASTON, a chapelry in that part of the parish of ST. MICHAEL, DERBY, which is in the hundred of MORLESTON and LITCHURCH, county of DERBY, 3½ miles (S. E. by E.) from Derby, containing 399 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to that of Boulton, in the archdeaconry of Derby, and diocese of Lichfield and Coventry, endowed with £400 royal bounty. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. A Sunday school is supported chiefly from the rental of property left by sundry persons for charitable purposes. The river Derwent and the Derby canal pass through the parish.

ALVECHURCH, a parish, forming a detached portion of the middle division of the hundred of OSWALDSLOW, locally in the upper division of the hundred of Halfshire, county of WORCESTER, 4½ miles (E. N. E.) from Bromsgrove, containing 1413 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the peculiar jurisdiction of the Incumbent, rated in the king's books at £24. 16. 8., and in the patronage of the Bishop of Worcester. The church, dedicated to St. Lawrence, has Norman pillars; but the chancel displays the early English style, and the tower is more modern. The Bishops of Worcester had a palace here so early as the reign of Henry II., which, after the sale of the manor by the parliament, in 1648, was suffered to fall to decay, and has now entirely disappeared. An hospital for nine persons was incorporated by Queen Elizabeth. The Birmingham and Worcester canal runs through the parish. Fairs for cattle and sheep are held on the 22nd of April and the 10th of August. In 1742, Dr. Worth bequeathed £138. 2. 2., now producing £16 per annum, for the establishment of a free school. The Roman Iknield-street passed through Alvechurch, in its course from Alcester towards Lichfield. The learned Dr. Hickes, author of the Thesaurus Septentrionalium Linguarum, held the rectory of this parish.

ALVELEY, a parish comprising the liberty of Romsley, within the liberty of the borough of BRIDGENORTH, and the township of King's Nordley, in the hundred of STOTTESDEN, county of SALOP, 6½ miles (S. S. E.) from Bridgenorth, containing 975 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, within the jurisdiction of the court of the royal peculiar of Bridgenorth, endowed with £200 private benefaction, £600 royal bounty, and £1000 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of T. Whitmore, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. Alveley was one of the five prebends in the royal free chapel of the castle of Bridgenorth, having been valued, in the reign of Henry III., at sixty marks, and is still reputed and rated as such in the Office of the First Fruits. A free school was endowed, in 1616, by John Grove, who also founded almshouses for decayed labourers: the school is free to all poor children of the parish, and the master has a salary of £20 per annum, and the use of the school-house.

ALVERDISCOTT, a parish in the hundred of FREMINGTON, county of DEVON, 4¼ miles (E. by S.) from Bideford, containing 334 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Barnstaple, and diocese of Exeter, rated in the king's books at £13. 3. 11½., and in the patronage of J. Rowe, Esq. The church is dedicated to All Saints.

ALVERSTOKE, a parish in the liberties of ALVERSTOKE and GOSPORT, Portsdown division of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, 1½ mile (W. S. W.) from Gosport, containing, with the town of Gosport, 10,972 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the peculiar jurisdiction of the Incumbent, rated in the king's books at £21. 6. 0½., and in the patronage of the Bishop of Winchester. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. A new chapel is in progress of erection by the commissioners appointed under the late act for building additional churches and chapels. Alverstoke is within the jurisdiction of the Cheyney Court held at Winchester every Thursday, for the recovery of debts to any amount.

ALVERTHORPE, a chapelry in the parish of WAKEFIELD, lower division of the wapentake of AGBRIGG, West riding of the county of YORK, 1½ mile (W. N. W.) from Wakefield, containing, with the township of Thornes, 4448 inhabitants. A new chapel, in the later style of English architecture, containing one thousand five hundred and ninety sittings, of which eight hundred and thirty-two are free, was completed in 1825, at the expense of £7828, defrayed by a grant from the parliamentary commissioners. Here are three almshouses.

ALVEESCOTT, a parish in the hundred of BAMP-
TON, county of OXFORD, 5 miles (S. S. E.) from Burford, containing 357 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford, rated in the king's books at £8. 16. 8., and in the patronage of — Brown, Esq. Goddard Carter, Esq., in 1723, left a rent-charge of £10, directing one-half to be applied in educating poor children, and the remainder in apprenticing them.

ALVEDISTON, a parish in the hundred of CHALK, county of WILTS, 7¾ miles (E. by N.) from Shaftesbury, containing 224 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, with that of Broad-Chalk consolidated, united to the vicarage of Bower-Chalk, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Salisbury. The church is dedicated to St. Mary.

ALVESTON, a parish partly in the lower, but chiefly in the upper, division of the hundred of LANGLEY and SWINEHEAD, county of GLOUCESTER, 3 miles (S. by E.) from Thornbury, containing 657 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage with that of Olveston, in the peculiar jurisdiction of the Bishop of Bristol. The church is a small edifice, with a low tower, situated at some distance from the village. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists.

ALVESTON, a parish in the Snitterfield division of the hundred of BARLICHWAY, county of WARWICK, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. N. E.) from Stratford, containing 630 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Worcester, rated in the king's books at £6, and in the patronage of the Rector of Hampton-Lucy. The church is dedicated to St. James.

ALVETON, a parish in the southern division of the hundred of TORMONSLOW, county of STAFFORD, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. by S.) from Cheadle, comprising the chapelry of Cotton, and the townships of Denston and Farley, and containing 2170 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Stafford, and diocese of Lichfield and Coventry, rated in the king's books at £5. 16. 5 $\frac{1}{2}$., endowed with £200 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Earl of Shrewsbury. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, displays a mixture of the Norman and modern styles of architecture. There are places of worship for Calvinists and Wesleyan Methodists. The village is situated in a beautiful and romantic district, on the banks of the river Churnet, which here flows through a fertile vale. The Caldon canal passes through it, its course for some miles being parallel with that of the river, which it here crosses by means of an aqueduct. Near the side of the river is a wire-mill; and on the summit of a rock, three hundred feet above its bed, are the ruins of Alveton castle, which, in the reign of Henry II., belonged to the family of de Verdon: the property is now in the possession of the Earl of Shrewsbury, whose mansion, with its fine park and pleasure grounds, is situated on the opposite bank of the river. The remains of the castle consist of some of the outer walls, and one of the towers, overgrown with ivy; on the side opposite to the river it was defended by an intrenchment. On the summit of an adjacent eminence is a lofty tower, commanding extensive and varied prospects of the windings of the Churnet. Courts leet and baron are occasionally held here. Anthony Wall, in 1721, founded and endowed a school for the instruction of twelve boys, which is now open to all children of the parish; the schoolroom has been built on an enlarged plan by the Earl of Shrewsbury. At Bunbury in this parish, are the remains of a very extensive fortress, of an irregular form, ascribed to Ceolred, King of Mercia, about 715: it is defended on three sides by a double vallum, and on the fourth by a steep declivity.

ALVINGHAM, a parish in the Marsh division of the hundred of LOUTH-ESKE, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, 4 miles (N. E.) from Louth, containing 264 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, with that of Cockerington St. Mary annexed, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Lincoln, endowed with £1000 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Bishop of Lincoln. The church is dedicated to St. Adelwold. A priory of Gilbertine nuns and canons, dedicated to the Virgin Mary and St. Adelwold, was founded here in the reign of Henry II., which at the dissolution was valued at £141. 15. per annum.

ALVINGTON, a parish in the hundred of BLIDESLOE, county of GLOUCESTER, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. W.) from Blackeney, containing 272 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, united to the rectory of Wollastone, in the archdeaconry of Hereford, and diocese of Gloucester.

ALWALTON, a parish in the hundred of NORMAN-CROSS, county of HUNTINGDON, 5 miles (N. N. W.) from Stilton, containing 257 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Huntingdon, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £3. 5. 10., and in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Peterborough. The church, dedicated to St. Andrew, exhibits in the body of the building a singular combination of Norman and early English architecture; the chancel is chiefly in the decorated style, and there are some peculiarities in the windows, shafts, mouldings, and general details.

ALWINGTON, a parish in the hundred of SHEBBEAR, county of DEVON, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. W. by W.) from Bideford, containing 386 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Barnstaple, and diocese of Exeter, rated in the king's books at £17. 4. 9 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of Richard Pine Coffin, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Andrew. In Yeo Vale, so called from being intersected by the river Yeo, are the remains of an ancient chapel. Here are almshouses for three poor persons, endowed, in 1696, by R. Coffin, Esq.

ALWOODLEY, a township in that part of the parish of HAREWOOD which is in the upper division of the wapentake of SKYRACK, West riding of the county of YORK, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N.) from Leeds, containing 142 inhabitants.

AMBERLEY, a chapelry in the parish of MARDEN, hundred of BROXASH, county of HEREFORD, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. N. E.) from Hereford, containing 34 inhabitants.

AMBERLEY, a parish in the hundred of WEST EASWRITH, rape of ARUNDEL, county of SUSSEX, 5 miles (N. N. E.) from Arundel, containing, with the hamlet of Rockham, 548 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, with that of Houghton united, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Chichester, rated in the king's books at £7. 5. 7 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of the Bishop of Chichester. The church has a nave of Norman, and a chancel of early English, architecture, separated by a Norman arch much enriched. The river Arun runs through this parish: on its banks are considerable remains of an ancient castle, which belonged to the Bishops of Chichester, now occupied as a farm-house.

AMBERSHAM (NORTH), a tything in the parish of STEEP, hundred of EAST MEON, Alton (South) division of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, though locally in the hundred of Easebourne, rape of Chichester, county of SUSSEX, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. N. E.) from Midhurst, containing 134 inhabitants. This place is within the jurisdiction of the Cheyney-Court held at Winchester every Thursday, for the recovery of debts to any amount.

AMBERSHAM (SOUTH), a tything in the parish of STEEP, hundred of EAST MEON, Alton (South) division of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, though locally in the hundred of Easebourne, rape of Chichester, county of SUSSEX, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. by N.) from Midhurst, containing 175 inhabitants. This tything is within the jurisdiction of the Cheyney Court held at Winchester every Thursday, for the recovery of debts to any amount.

AMBLE, a township in that part of the parish of WARKWORTH which is in the eastern division of MORPETH ward, county of NORTHUMBERLAND, 9 miles (S.E.) from Alnwick, containing 197 inhabitants. There are valuable and extensive mines of coal in this township. The village is pleasantly situated on an eminence near the mouth of the river Coquet, and commands an extensive view of the sea: it was anciently of much greater importance, as is evident from the discovery of circular foundations of houses, of unhewn and uncemented stones, of British origin, and of Roman coins; a paved causeway was also discovered, a few years since, extending in a direction towards the old bed of the Coquet. Here was anciently a monastery, subordinate to Tynemouth priory, near the ruins of which several human bones were found a few years ago.

AMBLECOAT, a hamlet in that part of the parish of OLD SWINFORD which is in the southern division of the hundred of SEISDON, county of STAFFORD, $\frac{1}{2}$ a mile (N.) from Stourbridge, containing 1157 inhabitants.

AMBLESIDE, a market town and parochial chapelry, partly in the parish of WINDERMERE, but chiefly in the parish of GRASMERE, KENDAL ward, county of WESTMORLAND, 25 miles (W. S. W.) from Appleby, and 274 (N. W. by N.) from London, containing 838 inhabitants. The name, anciently written Hamelside, is probably derived from the Saxon Hamol, signifying a sheltered habitation. The town is situated near the site of a Roman station of considerable extent, supposed by Horsley to have been the Dictis of the Notitia: the earthworks of the fortress remain, and various Roman relics and foundations of buildings have been discovered. It stands on the acclivity of a steep eminence near the northern extremity of the lake Windermere, in a district pre-eminently distinguished for the beauty of its scenery, and consists chiefly of one street, lighted with oil, but not paved; the houses, though detached and irregular, are well built. There are a few manufactories for linsey-woolsey. The market, granted in 1650 to the celebrated Countess of Pembroke, is on Wednesday: fairs are held on Whit-Wednesday and the 13th and 29th of October, to which a court of pie-powder is attached: the market-house was built about the year 1796, on the site of the former. The inhabitants received a charter in the reign of Charles II., under the authority of which they elect a mayor annually on Christmas-eve, but he does not possess magisterial authority, the town being entirely within the jurisdiction of the county magistrates, who hold a petty session monthly. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Richmond, and diocese of Chester, endowed with £200 private benefaction, £400 royal bounty, and £600 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of Lady Fleming. The chapel, situated in that part of the town which is in the parish of Grasmere, was rebuilt in 1812, and exhibits some portions of ancient architecture, with many modern insertions: it was made parochial by the Bishop of Chester, in 1675. The free grammar school was founded and endowed by John Kelsick, in 1721; the annual income is about £127, which, deducting £20 for taxes, is paid to the master, who has also a house rent-free. Two Sunday schools are supported by subscription. A little below the town is the beautiful waterfall called Stockgill Force. Bernard Gilpin, surnamed "The Northern Apostle," was born at Kentmere, and Judge Wilson at Troutbeck, near this town.

AMBROSDEN, a parish in the hundred of BULLINGTON, county of OXFORD, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. E. by S.) from Bicester, comprising the chapelries of Arncott and Blackthorn, and containing 843 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford, rated in the king's books at £11. 17., endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of Sir G. P. Turner, Bart. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is stated to have been built in the latter part of the reign of Edward I., on the site of the original Saxon, or Norman, edifice, the northern entrance to which still remains. Four churchwardens are annually appointed for this parish, two by the vicar, and two by the parishioners. Bishop Kennet, who formerly held the vicarage, supposes the name to be derived from Ambrosius Aurelius, the celebrated British chief, who encamped here during the siege of Alchester by the Saxons.

AMCOTTS, a chapelry in the parish of ALTHORP, western division of the wapentake of MANLEY, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, $11\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. S. E.) from Glandford-Bridge, containing 346 inhabitants. The chapel is dedicated to St. Thomas à Becket. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists.

AMERSHAM, or AGMONDESHAM, a borough, market town, and parish, in the hundred of BURNHAM, county of BUCKINGHAM, 33 miles (S. E. by S.) from Buckingham, and $25\frac{1}{2}$ (W. N. W.) from London, containing 2612 inhabitants. In the reign of Henry V. several of the inhabitants were burnt at the stake for professing the tenets of the Lollards; and in that of Mary, this was again the scene of religious persecution, many individuals having suffered a similar fate for their adherence to the principles of the Reformation. The town is situated in a pleasant valley near the river Colne, surrounded by wood-crowned hills, and consists principally of one street, not lighted, but well paved: there is a plentiful supply of water. Cotton and black lace is manufactured here; many females are employed in plating straw, and wooden chairs are made for exportation. The market is on Tuesday: fairs are held on Whit-Monday and the 19th of September. A constable and other officers are appointed at the court leet of the lord of the manor. The town hall, standing in the centre of the town, is a handsome brick edifice, resting on piazzas, erected by Sir William Drake: the lower part is appropriated to the use of the market; the upper part, which is surmounted by a lantern turret, is used for transacting the public business, and holding parliamentary elections. The town, which is a borough by prescription, sent burgesses to parliament from the 28th of Edward I. until the 2nd of Edward II., but made no return until the 21st of James I., since which time it has continued to send two members to parliament. The right of election is vested in the inhabitant householders paying scot and lot: the constable is the returning officer. The poet Waller, and the celebrated Algernon Sydney, represented this borough.

The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Buckingham, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £48. 16. 1½., and in the patronage of Thomas Tyrwhitt Drake, Esq. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a spacious edifice of brick, coated with stucco; the chancel and an adjoining mausoleum contain several interesting monuments. There are two places of worship for Particular Baptists, and one for the Society of Friends. The free grammar school was founded, in the reign of Elizabeth, by Dr. Robert Chaloner, canon of Windsor, who endowed it with £25 per annum; he also founded three scholarships at Christ Church College, Oxford, for boys of Amersham and Goldsborough, or Knaresborough, in Yorkshire. A Sunday school, originally supported by subscription, was endowed by William Drake, jun., Esq.; and an almshouse for six aged widows was endowed, in 1669, by Sir William Drake, Bart.

AMESBURY, a parish (formerly a market town) in the hundred of AMESBURY, county of WILTS, 7 miles (N.) from Salisbury, and 78 (W. S. W.) from London, containing 810 inhabitants. This place, anciently called Ambresbury, derives its name from Aurelius Ambrosius, a descendant of the Romans, who is said to have assumed the purple in Britain towards the decline of the Roman empire, and who headed the Britons in several attempts to repel their Saxon invaders. A monastery for three hundred monks is stated to have been founded here by Ambrois, a British monk, or, more probably, by Ambrosius, which was destroyed by Gurthurn, or Gurmundus, a Saxon chief. After the conversion of the Saxons to Christianity, a synod was held here, in the reign of King Edgar, to adjust the differences which existed between the regular and the secular clergy, which had been previously discussed in an assembly held at Calne. About 980, Elfrida, widow of the same king, founded here a nunnery of the Benedictine order, which she dedicated to St. Mary and St. Melorius, a Cornish saint, in expiation, it is supposed, of the murder of Edward, her step son, at Corfe Castle. In 1177, the abbess and nuns were expelled, on the ground of incontinence; and Henry II. made it a cell to the foreign abbey of Fentevault. Queen Eleanor, widow of Henry III., assumed the veil in this convent, where she died in 1291. It was at length made denizen; and, at the dissolution, its revenue was valued at £558. 10. 2. The mansion called the Abbey, which now occupies the site of the nunnery, was, after the French revolution, at the close of the last century, appropriated for several years to the use of a society of nuns from Louvaine in Flanders, who afterwards removed into Dorsetshire. The town is situated in a small valley, on the bank of the Upper Avon, and consists of two streets: it is neither paved nor lighted, but is well supplied with water. The market, formerly held on Friday, has been discontinued: fairs are held on the 17th of May, 21st of June, and 21st of December. Constables and other officers are appointed at the court leet of the lord of the manor.

The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Wilts, and diocese of Salisbury, endowed with £400 private benefaction, and £700 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Dean and Canons of Windsor. The church, which was formerly conventual, is a very ancient building, probably of Saxon architecture; it is dedicated to St. Mary and St. Melorius, and has recently been completely repaired: it is warmed by a pair of very handsome stoves, which cost £189, and were presented by Sir Edmund Antrobus, Bart. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. An English school for twenty boys was founded and endowed, in 1677, by Mr. John Rose; and a school for teaching fifty children to read was endowed with an estate left by Mr. Spratt: a charity school for clothing and instructing fifteen boys and fifteen girls, and a National school, are supported by subscription. A fund is also appropriated to the apprenticing of children. Westward from the river there is an ancient encampment, with a vallum and deep fosse, occupying an area of forty acres, commonly attributed to Vespasian, but undoubtedly of British origin: the road from Amesbury to Warminster is cut through its rampart. Within two miles is Stonehenge, a remarkable and well-known-relic of British antiquity.

AMOTHERBY, a chapelry in the parish of APPLETON le STREET, wapentake of RYEDALE, North riding of the county of YORK, 3 miles (N.W. by W.) from New Malton, containing 249 inhabitants. A school is endowed with land producing about £20 per annum, in which forty boys are educated, but only six of them are free scholars.

AMPLEFORTH, or AMPLEFORD, a parish partly in the liberty of ST. PETER of YORK, East riding, and partly in the wapentake of BIRDFOURTH, but chiefly in the wapentake of RYEDALE, North riding, of the county of YORK, comprising the townships of Ampleforth and Kirk-Oswald-quarter, and containing 582 inhabitants, of which number, 214 are in the township of Ampleforth, in the last-named division of the county, 4½ miles (S.W. by S.) from Helmsley. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the peculiar jurisdiction and patronage of the Prebendary of Ampleforth in the Cathedral Church of York, rated in the king's books at £4. 6. 5½. The church is dedicated to St. Hilda. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists.

AMPNEY (ST. MARY), or ASHBROOK, a parish in the hundred of CROWTHORNE and MINETY, county of GLOUCESTER, 3½ miles (E.) from Cirencester, containing 130 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Gloucester, endowed with £400 private benefaction, £400 royal bounty, and £200 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Crown. The church is small, exhibiting remains of early English architecture.

AMPNEY (ST. PETER), or EASINGTON, a parish in the hundred of CROWTHORNE and MINETY, county of GLOUCESTER, 4½ miles (E. by S.) from Cirencester, containing 177 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Gloucester, endowed with £1600 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Bishop of Gloucester.

AMPNEY-CRUCIS, a parish in the hundred of CROWTHORNE and MINETY, county of GLOUCESTER, 3½ miles (E.) from Cirencester, containing 590 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Gloucester, rated in the king's books at £6. 9. 0½., and in the patronage of the Crown. The church, dedicated to the Holy Rood, has an embattled tower, and some portions of ancient architecture. Here is a charity school.

AMPNEY-DOWN, a parish in the hundred of CROWTHORNE and MINETY, county of GLOUCESTER, 4 miles (S. W. by W.) from Fairford, containing 365 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Gloucester, rated in the king's books at £10. 5. 8., endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Dean and Canons of Christ Church, Oxford. The church, dedicated to All Saints, has a tower and spire, and is chiefly in the early English style, having been built by the Knights Templars, to whom the living was given by Edward I.

AMPORT, a parish in the hundred of ANDOVER, Andover division of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, 4½ miles (W. by S.) from Andover, containing, with the tythings of Cholderton and Sarson, 646 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, with the perpetual curacy of Appleshaw annexed, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Winchester, rated in the king's books at £25. 7. 11., and in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Chichester. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. In 1812, a school-house was erected here by Mrs. Sheppard, to which the Rev. Thomas Sheppard, D.D., added a bequest of £20 a year, for the education of poor children. There is an almshouse for six poor persons.

AMPTHILL, a market town and parish in the hundred of REDBORNESTOKE, county of BEDFORD, 7 miles (S. by W.) from Bedford, and 45 (N. W. by N.) from London, containing 1527 inhabitants. In the reign of Henry VI., Sir John Cornwall, created Lord Fanhope, built a castle on the manor of Ampthill, which, about the year 1530, came into the possession of the crown, and was made the head of an honour by act of parliament. Catherine of Arragon resided here while the business of the divorce was pending, where she received the summons to attend the commissioners at Dunstable, which she refused to obey. In memory of this, the Earl of Ossory, in 1770, erected on the site of the castle a handsome column, with an appropriate inscription by Horace Walpole, Earl of Orford. The modern seat is chiefly remarkable for the number of very ancient oaks which ornament the park. The town, pleasantly situated between two hills, is irregularly built, paved with pebbles, and amply supplied with water; it has been of late years considerably improved by the removal of old buildings, and the erection of a handsome market-house. The market is on Thursday: fairs are held on the 4th of May and 30th of November, for cattle. The county magistrates hold here petty sessions for the hundred; and a court for the honour of Ampthill is held in the moot-house, an ancient building, under the lord high steward, at which constables and officers are appointed.

The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Bedford, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £10. 6. 8., endowed with £300 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of Lord Holland. The church, dedicated to St. Andrew, is a handsome cruciform structure, partaking of the decorated and later styles of English architecture, with a square embattled tower rising from the centre. There are places of worship for the Society of Friends and Wesleyan Methodists. A charity school, for twenty boys and twenty-four girls, was endowed by Mrs. Sarah Emery, in 1691, with lands producing £30 per annum; and a rent-charge of £5, given by Mr. George Watson, in 1740, is appropriated to the instruction of sixteen poor children. About a mile from the town is an hospital, founded by John Cross, in 1690, for a reader, twelve poor men, and four poor women: the reader has £15 per annum, and the others £10; they must be unmarried. The Vice-chancellor of the University of Oxford, and the Bishop of that diocese, are visitors. The interest arising from a legacy of £700, left by Mr. Arthur Whichelner, in 1687, for apprenticing poor children, is shared by this parish conjointly with the parishes of Maulden, Milbrook, and Ridgemont.

AMPTON, a parish in the hundred of THEDEWESTRY, county of SUFFOLK, 5½ miles (N. by E.) from Bury St. Edmund's, containing 117 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Sudbury, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £5. 2. 1., and in the patronage of Lord Calthorpe. The church is dedicated to St. Peter. A school is endowed with £5 per annum, the gift of — Edwards, for the instruction of five children. An hospital, for clothing, maintaining and educating six boys, for seven years, is supported by the produce of some land bequeathed by James Calthorpe, in 1705; and there is also an almshouse for four poor women.

AMWELL (GREAT), a parish in the hundred and county of HERTFORD, 1½ mile (S. E. by S.) from Ware, containing 1110 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Middlesex, and diocese of London, rated in the king's books at £6, endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of R. C. Elwes, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. John the Baptist. In this parish is the East India College, founded in 1806, for the education of young men intended for the civil service of the Hon. East India Company in India: it will admit one hundred and five students, who are under the superintendence of a principal and several professors. On a hill above the church is an ancient mound, the remains of a fortification; and in Barrow field, on the road to Hertford, is a large barrow. Great Amwell has been the residence of some celebrated literary characters, among whom were, Izaak Walton, the noted angler; Mr. Scott, author of several poems and tracts, who built a curious grotto, containing several apartments, which still exists; and Mr. Hoole, the distinguished translator of Tasso, and biographer of Mr. Scott. The remains of Warner, the historian, were interred in the churchyard.

AMWELL (LITTLE), a liberty in that part of the parish of ALL SAINTS, HERTFORD, which is in the hundred of HERTFORD, county of HERTFORD, 1½ mile (S. E. by S.) from Ware, containing 256 inhabitants. Here is a chapel of ease to the vicarage of All Saints. The New River, which supplies so considerable a part of the metropolis with water, has its source in a spring that rises in this liberty, called Emma's Well; of which it is supposed, the name of the place is a contraction.

ANCASTER, a parish in the wapentake of LOVEDEN, parts of KESTIVEN, county of LINCOLN, 6½ miles (N. E.) from Grantham, containing 439 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £6. 13. 4., endowed with £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Rev. J. Jowett. The church, dedicated to St. Martin, has a tower surmounted by a spire; the arches on the north side of the nave are of Norman, and those on the south of early English, architecture, while other parts exhibit a later style. Ancaster is supposed to occupy the site of the Roman station Corisennia: it stands on the line of the ancient Ermin-street, and various Roman coins and other relics have been found in the vicinity.

ANCROFT, a parish in ISLANDSHIRE, county palatine of DURHAM, though locally to the north of the county of Northumberland, adjoining Berwick upon Tweed, containing 1378 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Durham, endowed with £200 private benefaction, £400 royal bounty, and £800 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Durham. The church, which is a very ancient edifice, was formerly a chapel of ease to the perpetual curacy of Holy Island. The village appears to have been formerly of much greater extent than it is at present, from numerous foundations of houses having been discovered in a field adjoining. A schoolroom has lately been erected, which is conducted on the Madras system. The parish contains the villages of Ancroft, Cheswick, and Greensis. There is a large brewery at Greensis, in the vicinity of which coal is obtained: there is also a colliery at Scremerston, which village was destroyed by the Scots in 1386. The estate belonged to the Earl of Derwentwater, on whose attainder it was forfeited to the Crown, and now constitutes part of the possessions of Greenwich hospital. Haggerston House was destroyed by fire in 1618, with the exception of one of the towers, still remaining, in which Edward II. received homage from Thomas, Earl of Lancaster, for the earldom of Lincoln, in 1311: it has been rebuilt, with considerable additions and embellishments, and is situated in a spacious park.

ANDERBY, a parish in the Marsh division of the hundred of CALCEWORTH, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. by S.) from Alford, containing 226 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, with that of Cumberworth united, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £13. 10. $2\frac{1}{2}$., endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the President and Fellows of Magdalene College, Cambridge. The church is dedicated to St. Andrew.

ANDERSTON, or ANDERSON, a parish in the northern division of the hundred of COOMBS-DITCH, Blandford (North) division of the county of DORSET, 6 miles (S.) from Blandford-Forum, containing 78 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the peculiar jurisdiction of the Dean of Salisbury, rated in the king's books at £6. 19. 1., and in the patronage of L. D. G. Tregonwell, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Michael.

ANDERTON, a township in that part of the parish of GREAT BUDWORTH which is in the hundred of BUCKLOW, county palatine of CHESTER, $1\frac{1}{4}$ mile (N. W. by N.) from Northwich, containing 210 inhabitants. On the northern bank of the Weaver, in its course through this township, is an almost uninterrupted line of salt-works: the Grand Trunk canal passes through it.

ANDERTON, a township in the parish of STAN-DISH, hundred of LEYLAND, county palatine of LANCASTER, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. E. by S.) from Chorley, containing 432 inhabitants.

ANDOVER, a borough, market town, and parish, having exclusive jurisdiction, locally in the hundred of Andover, Andover division of the county of SOUTH-AMPTON, 26 miles (N. by W.) from Southampton, and 64 (W. S. W.) from London, containing, with the chapelry of Foxcote, 4219 inhabitants. Andover, or, according to the charter, seal, and official documents, Andever, is a corruption of the Saxon Andeafara, which signifies the passage of the Ande, denoting the proximity of the town to the small river Ande, or Anton. In the church at this place Anlaf, King of Norway, in 994, received the sacrament of confirmation, under the sponsorship of King Ethelred, promising that he would never more come in a hostile manner to England, which engagement he religiously performed. The town, situated on the border of the Wiltshire downs, and near the edge of an extensive tract of woodland, forming the north-west portion of the county, is neat, airy, and well built: it consists principally of three long streets, not lighted, but well paved under an act obtained in 1825, and is plentifully supplied with water. There is a small theatre; and during Weyhill fair assemblies are held in the town hall. The manufacture of silk has, of late, entirely superseded that of shalloons, which was formerly carried on to a great extent; and the construction of a canal from this town, through Stockbridge, to Southampton Water, has, by the increased facility of conveyance, materially improved its trade, particularly in corn, malt, and timber; of the last a vast quantity is forwarded from Harewood Forest, for the supply of Portsmouth dockyard. The principal market is on Saturday, and there is a smaller one on Wednesday. The fairs are on Mid-Lent Saturday and Old May-day, for horses, cattle, cheese, and leather; on the 16th of November for sheep, and on the following day for horses, hops, cheese, &c.

Three miles west of Andover, and within the out-hundred belonging to the town, is Weyhill, where an annual fair is held, which, although originating in a revel anciently kept on the Sunday before Michaelmas-day, has gradually become the largest and best attended in England; merchants and manufacturers from every part of the kingdom assembling here for the transaction of business. It is held on October 10th and six following days, by charter of Queen Elizabeth, confirmed by Charles II. The first day is noted for the sale of sheep, of which the number sold has frequently exceeded one hundred and seventy thousand; on the second, the farmers hire their servants, after which hops, cheese, horses (particularly cart colts), cloth &c., are exposed for sale; during the first three days the bailiff of Andover holds a court of pie-powder, and receives twopence from each booth, in acknowledgment of his jurisdiction. An additional fair, principally for sheep, was instituted in 1829, and is held on the 1st of August.

The town received its first charter of incorporation from King John; but that under which it is now governed was granted by Elizabeth. The government is vested in a high steward, recorder, town clerk, twelve approved men, and twelve capital burgesses. A bailiff and two magistrates, having exclusive jurisdiction, are annually chosen, by the members of the corporation generally, from among the "approved men:" the bailiff appoints two serjeants at mace to attend him. Courts of session for the borough are held quarterly; and there is a court of record for debts and damages under £40, held every Monday, under an act passed in the 41st of Elizabeth, at which the bailiff and steward, or his deputy, preside. The town hall was erected in 1825, at an expense of £7000, towards defraying which each of the then members for the borough, Sir J. W. Pollen, Bart., and T. A. Smith, Esq., presented £1000. It is a handsome and spacious building of stone, surmounted by a cupola: on the ground-floor is the market house, over which are a council-room for transacting the business of the corporation, and a hall for holding the quarter sessions. The borough sent representatives to all the parliaments of Edward I., but made no return after the first of Edward II. till the 27th of Elizabeth, since which period it has continued to send two members to parliament: the right of election is vested in the corporation; the bailiff is the returning officer.

The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Winchester, rated in the king's books at £17. 4. 3½., and in the patronage of the Warden and Fellows of Winchester College. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is an ancient building with a fine Norman doorway at the west end; the chancel is separated from the nave by the belfry. There are places of worship for Baptists, the Society of Friends, Independents, and Wesleyan Methodists. The grammar school, in which ten boys are educated, each paying two guineas per annum, was founded and endowed, in 1569, by John Hanson, Esq., whose benefaction was subsequently increased by Richard Kemis: the master, who receives £20 per annum, resides in the house, and is allowed to take private pupils: the school-house was built by the corporation, on land given by Richard Blake, Esq., and is kept in repair at their expense. In 1719, John Pollen, Esq., one of the representatives of the borough, erected a school-house, and endowed it with £10 per annum, for educating twenty poor children. A National school, in which two hundred and fifty children are educated, is supported by subscription. An hospital for eight poor men was founded by John Pollen, Esq.; and six endowed almshouses for poor women were erected with funds bequeathed by Catherine Hanson, who also gave an acre of ground, planted with trees, to be appropriated as a walk for the recreation of the inhabitants. The Roman road from Winchester to Cirencester passed near Andover, and is yet visible in Harewood coppice; and, besides two or three small encampments near the town, there is a larger one, about a mile to the south-west, on the summit of Bury hill. Some beautiful specimens of Roman pavement have recently been discovered in the neighbourhood. Andover gives the inferior title of viscount to the Earl of Suffolk.

ANGERSLEIGH, a parish in the hundred of TAUNTON and TAUNTON-DEAN, county of SOMERSET, 4½ miles (S. S. W.) from Taunton, containing 64 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Taunton, and diocese of Bath and Wells, rated in the king's books at £4. 19. 4½., endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of T. Southwood, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Michael.

ANGERTON (HIGH), a township in that part of the parish of HARTBURN which is in the western division of MORPETH ward, county of NORTHUMBERLAND, 7 miles (W.) from Morpeth, containing 87 inhabitants.

ANGERTON (LOW), a township in that part of the parish of HARTBURN which is in the western division of MORPETH ward, county of NORTHUMBERLAND, 7½ miles (W. by S.) from Morpeth, containing 75 inhabitants.

ANGLEZARKE, a township in the parish of BOLTON, hundred of SALFORD, county palatine of LANCASTER, 4½ miles (E. S. E.) from Chorley, containing 215 inhabitants. Lead mines are worked in this township, in which carbonate of barytes was first discovered.

ANGMERING, a parish in the hundred of POLING, rape of ARUNDEL, county of SUSSEX, 3½ miles (N. E. by E.) from Little Hampton, containing 897 inhabitants. The living comprises the rectory of West Angmering, with the vicarage of East Angmering, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Chichester, rated jointly in the king's books at £21. 9. 8., and in the patronage of Lord de la Zouche. The church is dedicated to St. Peter. A charity school was founded by William Older, in 1679, and endowed with certain houses and thirty acres of land, at East Angmering, which was formerly a distinct parish.

ANGRAM, a township in the parish of LONG MARSTON, ainsty of the city, and East riding of the county, of YORK, 5 miles (N. E. by N.) from Tadcaster, containing 66 inhabitants. In 1705, Edward Randall bequeathed £200 to the poor of Marston, Hutton, and Angram, the produce of which is applied to the instruction of poor children.

ANGRAM-GRANGE, a township in the parish of COXWOLD, wapentake of BIRDFORTH, North riding of the county of YORK, 4½ miles (N.) from Easingwold, containing 29 inhabitants.

ANICK, a township in the parish of St. JOHN LEE, southern division of TINDALE ward, county of NORTHUMBERLAND, 1½ mile (N. E. by E.) from Hexham, containing 166 inhabitants. At Hexham Bridge End, in this township, is a large brewery.

ANICK-GRANGE, a township in the parish of St. JOHN LEE, southern division of TINDALE ward, county of NORTHUMBERLAND, 1½ mile (E. N. E.) from Hexham, containing 43 inhabitants.

ANLABY, a township partly in the parish of HESSLE, but chiefly in the parish of KIRK-ELLA, in the county of the town of KINGSTON upon HULL, East riding of the county of YORK, 3½ miles (W.) from Kingston upon Hull, containing 307 inhabitants. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists.

ANMER, a parish in the Lynn division of the hundred of FREEBRIDGE, county of NORFOLK, 5½ miles (N. E. by E.) from Castle-Rising, containing 122 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £9. 0. 1. James Coldham, Esq. was patron in 1816. The church is dedicated to St. Mary.

ANNE (ST.), or BRIERS, a chapelry in the parish of HALIFAX, wapentake of MORLEY, West riding of the county of YORK, 3 miles (E. S. E.) from Halifax, with which the population is returned. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry and diocese of York, endowed with £400 private benefaction, £600 royal bounty, and £2100 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Vicar of Halifax.

ANNESLEY, a parish in the northern division of the wapentake of BROXTON, county of NOTTINGHAM, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. S. W.) from Mansfield, containing, with the hamlet of Felly, 397 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Nottingham, and diocese of York, endowed with £600 royal bounty, and in the patronage of J. Musters, Esq. The church is dedicated to All Saints. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists.

ANSLEY, a parish in the Atherstone division of the hundred of HEMLINGFORD, county of WARWICK, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. by N.) from Nuneaton, containing 720 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Coventry, and diocese of Lichfield and Coventry, rated in the king's books at £6. 6. 8., and in the patronage of the Crown. The church is dedicated to St. Lawrence. The Oxford canal passes through the village: there are some remains of an ancient castle.

ANSLOW, or ANNESLEY, a township in the parish of ROLLESTON, northern division of the hundred of OFFLOW, county of STAFFORD, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W. by W.) from Burton upon Trent, containing 270 inhabitants. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists.

ANSTEY, a parish in the county of the city of COVENTRY, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. E.) from Coventry, containing 205 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Coventry, and diocese of Lichfield and Coventry, and in the patronage of the Crown. In 1719, the Rev. John Million left property for founding and endowing a free school for the education of poor children of Anstey and Skilton; of this benefaction there remains but £2 per annum, arising from the lease of a school-house, originally granted for five hundred years.

ANSTEY, a parish in the hundred of EDWINSTREE, county of HERTFORD, 3 miles (S. E.) from Barkway, containing 440 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Middlesex, and diocese of London, rated in the king's books at £21. 13. 4., and in the patronage of the Master and Fellows of Christ's College, Cambridge. The church is a cruciform edifice, with a central tower, and is said to have been built from the ruins of a castle erected by Eustace, Earl of Boulogne, soon after the Conquest, traces of which are still visible.

ANSTEY, a chapelry in the parish of THURCASTON, western division of the hundred of GOSCOTE, county of LEICESTER, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W.) from Leicester, containing 784 inhabitants. The chapel is dedicated to St. Mary. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists.

ANSTEY, a parish in the hundred of DUNWORTH, county of WILTS, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. E. by S.) from Hindon, containing 327 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Salisbury, and in the patronage of Lord Arundel. The church, dedicated to St. James, is a very ancient structure. Here was a preceptory of the Knights Hospitallers, founded by Walter de Turberville, in the reign of John; the revenue of which at the dissolution was £81. 8. 5.; its remains have been converted into a farm-house. Dr. Richard Zouch, an eminent civilian, and judge of the court of Admiralty in the reign of Charles I., was a native of this place.

ANSTEY (EAST), a parish in the hundred of SOUTH MOLTON, county of DEVON, 3 miles (W. S. W.) from Dulverton, containing 171 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Barnstaple, and diocese of Exeter, rated in the king's books at £11, and in the patronage of the Mayor and Corporation of Exeter. The church is dedicated to St. Michael.

ANSTEY (WEST), a parish in the hundred of SOUTH MOLTON, county of DEVON, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W.) from Dulverton, containing 220 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Barnstaple, and diocese of Exeter, rated in the king's books at £10. 16. 8., and in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Exeter. The church is dedicated to St. Petrock. Here is an unendowed almshouse for the reception of the aged and infirm poor.

ANSTEY-PASTURES, an extra-parochial liberty, in the western division of the hundred of GOSCOTE, county of LEICESTER, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W.) from Leicester, containing 11 inhabitants.

ANSTON (NORTH and SOUTH), a parish in the southern division of the wapentake of STRAFFORD and TICKHILL, West riding of the county of YORK, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. N. W.) from Worksop, containing 776 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to the prebend of Laughton en le Morthen, in the peculiar jurisdiction of the Chancellor in the Cathedral Church of York, endowed with £600 royal bounty, and £1400 parliamentary grant. The church is dedicated to St. James. Nails and starch are manufactured in this parish, and there is some business done in malt. Here is a small endowed school.

ANTHONY (ST.) in MENEAGE, a parish in the hundred of KERRIER, county of CORNWALL, 6 miles (S. by W.) from Falmouth, containing 330 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the peculiar jurisdiction of the Bishop of Exeter, rated in the king's books at £4. 15. 10., and in the patronage of the Crown. Here are two ancient intrenchments, Great and Little Dinas, the latter of which became the site of a small fort, which was occupied by the royalists, during the civil war, for the defence of Helford harbour, and was captured by Sir Thomas Fairfax, in March 1646. At St. Anthony was formerly a cell to the priory of Tywardreth, in the same county. In 1743, Anthony Hosken left a small endowment, to provide food, clothes, books, and instruction for poor children of this parish.

ANTHONY (ST.) in ROSELAND, a parish in the western division of the hundred of POWDER, county of CORNWALL, $9\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. W. by S.) from Tregony, containing 179 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Cornwall, and diocese of Exeter, and in the patronage of the Earl of Falmouth. Here was a priory of Augustine canons, subordinate to that of Plympton.

ANTHONY (WEST), a parish in the southern division of the hundred of EAST, county of CORNWALL, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. E.) from St. Germans, containing 2642 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Cornwall, and diocese of Exeter, rated in the king's books at £12. 17. 8½., and in the patronage of the Crown. The church is dedicated to St. James. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. Ten poor children are instructed with the interest of £300 left for that purpose.

APPLEBY, a borough and market town, having separate jurisdiction, locally in East ward, county of WESTMORLAND, of which it is the chief town, 374 miles (N.N.W.) from London, containing 824 inhabitants. This place is thought, but on uncertain grounds, to have been a Roman station. Camden, from a similarity of name, erroneously calls it Aballaba; and Horsley considers it to have been the Roman Galacum. A Roman road passed near it from Langton, on the east, to Redlands Bank on the north-west; and some Roman antiquities are stated to have been discovered in the vicinity. Appleby has long been the head of a barony, sometimes called the barony of Westmorland; the rest of the county, which forms the barony of Kendal, having been anciently included in Lancashire and Yorkshire. It was granted by the Conqueror to Ranulph de Meschines, whose son Ranulph, having in his mother's right succeeded to the earldom of Chester, gave it to his sister, the wife of Robert d' Estrivers; and having been in the possession of the families of Engain and Morville, it was seized by the crown, in consequence of a member of the latter family being concerned in the murder of Thomas à Becket. King John granted it, together with the "Sheriffwick and rent of the county of Westmorland," to Robert de Veteripont, lord of Curvaville in Normandy, whose grandson Robert joining the confederated barons, in the reign of Henry III., it was forfeited to the Crown, but was restored to the two younger daughters of Robert, and subsequently, by marriage, came into the possession of the illustrious family of Clifford, and was ultimately transferred, by marriage, to Lord Tufton, afterwards Earl of Thanet, whose descendants have ever since enjoyed it, with all its rights and dignities. The town was anciently of much greater magnitude than it is at present, as is evident from the situation of a township called Burrals (Borough Walls), a mile distant, and from the discovery of old foundations at the distance of more than two miles, to which the town and its suburbs formerly extended. An ancient record, about the period of the reign of Edward I., makes mention of a sheriff of Applebyshire; from which it appears that the town gave name to one of those districts into which Edward the Confessor divided the earldom of Northumberland. It retained its importance from the time of the Romans until the year 1176, when William, King of Scotland, surprised the castle, and destroyed the town; but from this calamity it had so far recovered in the reign of Henry III., that a court of exchequer was established in it. A Carmelite monastery was founded at Battle-Barrow, in the parish of St. Michael, in 1281, by the Lords Vesey, Clifford, and Percy; the site is now occupied by a neat modern mansion, called the Friary. In the year 1388, the town was again totally laid waste by the Scots, from the effects of which it never afterwards recovered: so that, in the reign of Philip and Mary, it was found necessary to reduce the ancient fee-farm rent, due to the Crown, from twenty marks to two. In 1598, it was nearly depopulated by the plague, and its market was consequently removed to Gilsaughlin, a village five miles distant. At the commencement of the parliamentary war, the castle was garrisoned for the king by the Countess of Pembroke, and continued in his interest until after the battle of Marston-Moor, when all the northern fortresses fell into the possession of the parliament.

The town is pleasantly situated on the river Eden, by which it is almost surrounded, and consists of one spacious street, intersected at right angles by three smaller, and terminated at one extremity by the castle, and at the other by the church of St. Lawrence: at each end also there is a handsome stone obelisk, or cross. An ancient stone bridge of two arches connects the suburb of Bongate with the borough, from which it is otherwise separated by the river. The town is well paved and amply supplied with water. The castle stands on a steep and richly wooded eminence rising from the river: it suffered much in the wars with Scotland, especially in the reigns of Richard II. and Henry IV. Of the original structure, said to be of Roman foundation, only a detached portion, called Caesar's Tower, and a small part of the south-east end, remain; the greater part of it was rebuilt by Lord Clifford, in the reign of Henry VI. It is now occupied by the steward of the Earl of Thanet, the present proprietor, who is hereditary sheriff of the county; and has been, from time immemorial, the temporary residence of the judges travelling the northern circuit, who are entertained here at his expense. The market is on Saturday; and fairs are held on the Saturday before Whit-Sunday, for cattle; on Whit-Monday, for linen cloth and the hiring of servants; the second Wednesday in June; and the 21st of August, for woollen cloth, cheese, horses, and cattle. The market-house, or the cloisters, is a handsome structure near the church, rebuilt by the corporation in 1811, in the early style of English architecture, after a design by Mr. Smirke. Appleby, which is a borough by prescription, received a charter of incorporation from Henry I., with privileges equal to those of York, which was renewed by Henry II., King John, and Henry III., and subsequently confirmed by Edward I. Under this charter the government is vested in a mayor, recorder, twelve aldermen, and sixteen common council-men, assisted by a town clerk, two chamberlains, a sword-bearer, and a serjeant at mace. The mayor, who is elected annually by the common council-men, is a justice of the peace, though exercising only limited jurisdiction. The borough has sent members to parliament since the 23rd of Edward I.: the right of election is vested in the holders of burgage tenements, in number about two hundred; the mayor is the returning officer. The town hall is a large ancient edifice in the principal street. The assizes for the county are held in the shire hall, adjoining the gaol, erected in 1771; and the general quarter sessions are held alternately at Appleby and Kendal, the Easter and Michaelmas at the former, and the Epiphany and Midsummer at the latter. The county gaol has been recently adapted to the radiating plan, in conformity with the provisions of the late gaol act.

Appleby is situated in the parishes of St. Lawrence and St. Michael, that portion of it which is in the latter being named Bongate. The livings of both these parishes are vicarages, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Carlisle; that of St. Lawrence is rated in the king's books at £9. 5. 2½., and in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Carlisle; and that of St. Michael is rated at £20. 13. 9., and in the patronage of the Bishop of Carlisle. The church of St. Lawrence is an ancient structure, partly in the decorated, and partly in the later, style of English architecture; it contains the remains of Anne, the celebrated Countess of Pembroke, Dorset, and Montgomery, who died in 1675, and of her mother, the Countess of Cumberland, to the memory of each of whom there is a splendid marble monument. The church of St. Michael is situated about three quarters of a mile south-east of the town. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. The free grammar school, founded by the burghers, existed long before the dissolution of religious houses, but was established on its present foundation in the 16th of Elizabeth, when the management was vested in ten governors, who are a corporate body. The endowment, arising from different sources, is about £200 per annum: it has five exhibitions, of £8 per annum each, to Queen's College, Oxford, founded by Thomas, Earl of Thanet, in 1720, and is entitled to send candidates for one of Lady Elizabeth Hastings' exhibitions to the same college. Dr. Bedel, Bishop of Kilmore; Dr. Barlow, Bishop of Lincoln; Drs. Smith and Waugh, Bishops of Carlisle; and Dr. Langhorne, the translator of Plutarch; were educated in this school. St. Anne's Hospital, for thirteen aged widows, was founded and endowed, in 1653, by Anne, Countess of Pembroke; the revenue arising from lands is about £490, and it has a considerable funded property; the building, which is quadrangular, comprises thirteen distinct habitations and a neat chapel: the chaplain and sisters are appointed by the Earl of Thanet, as heir of the Countess, who left also various lands at Temple-Sowerby, in this parish, for repairing the church, school-house, town hall, and bridge. In the neighbourhood were two ancient hospitals for lepers, dedicated respectively to St. Leonard and St. Nicholas; the estate of the latter was applied by the countess towards the endowment of her almshouse: there was also a chapel at the western end of the stone bridge of St. Lawrence. Thomas de Appleby, Bishop of Carlisle; and Roger de Appleby, Bishop of Ossory; were natives of this town.

APPLEDORE, a parish in the hundred of BLACKBOURNE, lathe of SCRAY, county of KENT, 6 miles (S. E. by S.) from Tenterden, containing 559 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, with the perpetual curacy of Ebony annexed, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Canterbury, rated in the king's books at £21, and in the patronage of the Archbishop of Canterbury. The church, which is dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul, exhibits some portions of decorated English architecture.

APPLEDRAM, a parish in the hundred of Box and Stockbridge, rape of CHICHESTER, county of SUSSEX, 1½ mile (S. W.) from Chichester, containing 133 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Chichester, rated in the king's books at £14, endowed with £600 royal bounty, and £200 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Chichester. The church, which is in the early style of English architecture, with a shingled tower, is dedicated to St. Mary: the south aisle is separated from the nave by three pointed arches springing from circular columns, and a stone on the north side bears an inscription with the date 1394. The parish is bounded on the west by the harbour of Chichester.

APPLEFORD, a chapelry in the parish of SUTTON-COURTNEY, hundred of Ock, county of BERKS, 3½ miles (S. E.) from Abingdon, containing 161 inhabitants. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. Richard Micklethwaite, in 1745, gave land for the instruction of five children, to which bequest an addition of £50 was made by John Micklethwaite, in 1752.

ARDSLEY (EAST), a parish in the lower division of the wapentake of AGBRIGG, West riding of the county of YORK, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W. by N.) from Wakefield, containing 832 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry and diocese of York, endowed with £10 per annum private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Earl of Cardigan. The neighbourhood abounds with coal, and some of the mines have been worked upwards of a century. Here is a small endowed free school.

ARDSLEY (WEST), a parish in the lower division of the wapentake of AGBRIGG, West riding of the county of YORK, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W.) from Wakefield, containing 1515 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry and diocese of York, endowed with £10 per annum private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Earl of Cardigan. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. This parish was anciently called Woodkirk: it contains extensive coal mines, and the manufacture of stuffs and woollen goods is carried on. In 1745, Richard Micklethwaite bequeathed land, the produce of which was to be applied to the instruction of three poor children; and, in 1752, John Micklethwaite left £50, directing the interest to be applied to a similar purpose. Here are almshouses for three widows. An old mansion, once the seat of Sir John Topcliffe, Lord Chief Justice in the reigns of Henry VII. and Henry VIII., has been converted into a farm-house.

ARDWICK, a chapelry in the parish of MANCHESTER, hundred of SALFORD, county palatine of LANCASTER, 1 mile (S. E. by E.) from Manchester, containing 3545 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Chester, and in the patronage of the Warden and Fellows of the Collegiate Church of Manchester. The chapel is dedicated to St. Thomas. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. Owing to its proximity to Manchester, Ardwick participates extensively in the trade of that place.

ARELY-KING'S, or LOWER ARELY, a parish in the upper division of the hundred of DODDINGTON, county of WORCESTER, $\frac{1}{4}$ of a mile (S. W. by W.) from Stourport, containing 358 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Worcester, rated in the king's books at £9, and in the patronage of the Rector of Martley. The church, which is situated on an eminence, whence there is a remarkably fine and extensive prospect, is dedicated to St. Bartholomew. In the burial-ground is a rude sepulchral monument, composed of oblong square stones, piled on each other, and bearing a quaint rhyming distich, importing that a person named Sir Harry lies interred beneath it. Who Sir Harry was, has not been satisfactorily ascertained; but an affecting story is related of an individual who was driven into seclusion here, from the loss of an only female child, that was drowned by falling from his arms, as he held her at a window, into a moat beneath, and who is supposed to have been interred here. At Redstone Ferry, on the river Severn, which forms a boundary of this parish, is a very high rock, in the side of which was excavated a hermitage, consisting of a chapel with an altar and some apartments: over the altar was painted a figure of an archbishop saying mass; in 1736, several human bodies, supposed to have been those of the hermits, were discovered. Layamon, author of a poetical Chronicle of British History, from Brute to Cadwallader, who states himself to have been a priest residing at Erenlege on the Severn, and who lived in the latter part of the twelfth century, is said to have been born here.

ARELY (UPPER), a parish in the southern division of the hundred of SEISDON, county of STAFFORD, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W. by W.) from Kidderminster, containing 715 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the peculiar jurisdiction of the Dean and Chapter of Lichfield, and in the patronage of the Earl of Mountnorris. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is situated on an eminence commanding a fine prospect. The village occupies a romantic situation near the side of the river Severn.

ARGAM, a parish in the wapentake of DICKERING, East riding of the county of YORK, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W.) from Bridlington, containing 35 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, united to the perpetual curacy of Bridlington, in the archdeaconry of the East riding, and diocese of York, rated in the king's books at £4. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, is desecrated.

ARKENDALE, a chapelry in that part of the parish of KNARESBOROUGH which is in the lower division of the wapentake of CLARO, West riding of the county of YORK, 4 miles (N. E.) from Knaresborough, containing 285 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, within the jurisdiction of the peculiar court of the honour of Knaresborough, endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £800 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Vicar of Knaresborough. The chapel is dedicated to St. Bartholomew. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists.

ARKENGARTH-DALE, a parish in the western division of the wapentake of GILLING, North riding of the county of YORK, 12 miles (W. by N.) from Richmond, containing 1512 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, within the peculiar jurisdiction of the manorial court of Arkengarth-Dale, New Forest, and Hope, endowed with £200 private benefaction, £600 royal bounty, and £1000 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Earl of Lonsdale. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a small neat stone structure, rebuilt in 1820. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists, lately erected by subscription. A free school was built by the late George Brown, Esq., lord of the manor, who endowed it with £60 per annum, payable out of the manor, for the free instruction of all children of the Dale; the master has also a house and a small piece of land rent-free. The Dale is about eight miles in length, and contains several villages and hamlets: the inhabitants are engaged in the lead mines, which are extremely productive, some of them having been worked so early as the reign of King John.

ARKESDEN, a parish in the hundred of UTTLESFORD, county of ESSEX, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. W. by W.) from Saffron-Walden, containing 415 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Colchester, and diocese of London, rated in the king's books at £13. 6. 8., and in the patronage of John Wolfe, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Mary.

ARKHOLME, a chapelry in the parish of MELLING, hundred of LONSDALE, south of the sands, county palatine of LANCASTER, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. S. W.) from Kirkby-Lonsdale, containing, with the hamlet of Cawood, 357 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Richmond, and diocese of Chester, endowed with £600 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Vicar of Melling.

ARKSEY, a parish in the northern division of the wapentake of STRAFFORTH and TICKHILL, West riding of the county of YORK, 3 miles (N. by E.) from Doncaster, containing, with the township of Bentley, 1171 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of York, rated in the king's books at £12. 17. 6., and in the patronage of Sir William Bryan Cooke, Bart. The church is dedicated to All Saints. Here is a free grammar school, erected in pursuance of the will of Sir George Cooke, with an endowment of £40 per annum, left by Sir Bryan Cooke. An hospital for twelve poor inhabitants is endowed with £120 per annum.

ARLECDON, a parish in ALLERDALE ward above Darwent, county of CUMBERLAND, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. N. E.) from Whitehaven, comprising the townships of High and Low Frizington and Whillymoor, and containing 478 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the peculiar jurisdiction and patronage of the Bishop of Chester, endowed with £200 private benefaction, £400 royal bounty, and £200 parliamentary grant. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, has been rebuilt, and was consecrated August 25th, 1829. Fairs for cattle are held on April 24th, the first Friday in June, and September 17th. Coal, iron-ore, limestone, and freestone, are found in the parish. On an estate called Cringlegill is a chalybeate spring, the water of which is stated to possess similar properties to that of Harrogate.

ARLESCOTE, a township in the parish of WAR-MINGTON, Burton-Dasset division of the hundred of KINGTON, county of WARWICK, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. S. E.) from Kington. The population is returned with the parish.

ARLESTON, a joint liberty with Synfin, in that part of the parish of BARROW which is in the hundred of APPLETREE, though locally in the hundred of Repton and Gresley, county of DERBY, $4\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. by W.) from Derby. The population is returned with Synfin. This liberty is in the honour of Tutbury, duchy of Lancaster, and within the jurisdiction of a court of pleas held at Tutbury every third Tuesday, for the recovery of debts under 40s.

ARLEY, a parish in the Kirby division of the hundred of KNIGHTLOW, county of WARWICK, 6 miles (E. by N.) from Coleshill, containing 267 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the peculiar jurisdiction of the Dean and Chapter of Lichfield, rated in the king's books at £9. 0. 7., and in the patronage of the Rev. R. Vaughton. The church is dedicated to St. Wilfrid. A free school is endowed with land, producing £10 per annum, left by William Avesey.

ARLINGHAM, a parish in the upper division of the hundred of BERKELEY, county of GLOUCESTER, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (S. E. by E.) from Newnham, containing 715 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Gloucester, rated in the king's books at £19. 7. 8 $\frac{1}{2}$. Mrs. Rogers was patroness in 1814. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. Arlingham is situated on a nook of land, formed by a curvature of the river Severn, by which the parish is bounded on three sides. Mrs. Mary Yate, in 1765, endowed a school for boys and girls with a rent-charge of £40, of which she directed that £20 should be paid to the master, and £10 to the mistress, the remainder to be laid out in purchasing books: she also gave an additional rent-charge of £40 for the benefit of the poor.

ARLINGTON, a parish in the hundred of SHERWILL, county of DEVON, $6\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. E. by N.) from Barnstaple, containing 177 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Exeter, rated in the king's books at £13. 18. 1 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of J. P. B. Chichester, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. James.

ARLINGTON, a tything in that part of the parish of BIBURY which is in the hundred of BRIGHTWELL'S BARROW, county of GLOUCESTER, $4\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. W.) from Fairford, containing 317 inhabitants.

ARLINGTON, a parish in the hundred of LONGBRIDGE, rape of PEVENSEY, county of SUSSEX, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. S. W.) from Haylsham, containing 614 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, to which that of Willingdon is annexed, in the archdeaconry of Lewes, and diocese of Chichester, rated in the king's books at £10. 6. 11., and in the patronage of the Prebendary of Woodhorne in the Cathedral Church of Chichester. The church is dedicated to St. Pancras. A priory of Black canons, in honour of the Holy Trinity, was founded here by Gilbert de Aguila, in the beginning of the reign of Henry III., the revenue of which, at the dissolution, was estimated at £191. 19. 3.

ARLSEY, a parish in the hundred of CLIFTON, county of BEDFORD, $4\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. W. by W.) from Baldock, containing 562 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, to which the rectory of Astwick was united in 1764, in the archdeaconry of Bedford, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £8, and in the patronage of R. Houston, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Peter. This place is recorded in Domesday-book as a market town, and its market, in 1270, was confirmed to Stephen Edworth, then lord of the manor, to be held on Wednesday, with a fair on the festival of St. Peter and St. Paul, both of which have been long discontinued. At Etonbury, near the road to Baldock, is an ancient intrenchment, the site of the castle of the manor.

ARMATHWAITE, a chapelry in the parish of HESKET in the FOREST, LEATH ward, county of CUMBERLAND, 5 miles (N. W.) from Kirk-Oswald. The population is returned with the parish. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Carlisle, endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £400 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Carlisle. The chapel was rebuilt by Richard Skelton, Esq., in 1668, having for some time previously been used as a shed for cattle. Armathwaite is a neat village, beautifully situated on the western bank of the Eden, over which is a good stone bridge of four arches. The castle, a handsome modern edifice, occupies a rocky elevation, at the foot of which flows the Eden, the site of an ancient fortress; and, in the reign of Henry VIII., was, with the estate, the property of John Skelton, the poet-laureat. A Benedictine nunnery was founded here by William II., the revenue of which, at the dissolution, was £18. 18. 8.: it stood in the parish of Ainstable, on a spot now occupied by a modern mansion, which retains the name of "Nunnery," amid scenery of a variegated and pleasing description: some trifling relics are still visible.

ARMIN, a chapelry in that part of the parish of SNAITH which is in the lower division of the wapentake of OSGOLDCROSS, West riding of the county of YORK, 3 miles (S. W. by S.) from Howden, containing 570 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, within the jurisdiction of the peculiar court of Snaith, endowed with £600 private benefaction, £600 royal bounty, and £1000 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of N. Yarbrough, Esq. The chapel is dedicated to St. David.

ARMINGHALL, a parish in the hundred of HENSTAD, county of NORFOLK, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. E. by S.) from Norwich, containing 115 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the peculiar jurisdiction and patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Norwich, endowed with £400 royal bounty, and £200 parliamentary grant. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. Here is a school, with an endowment of £5 per annum. The old hall, or manor-house, has a very rich and curious porch.

ARMITAGE, a joint parish with Handsacre, in the southern division of the hundred of OFFLOW, county of STAFFORD, $2\frac{1}{4}$ miles (E. S. E.) from Rugeley, containing, with Handsacre, 793 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the peculiar jurisdiction and patronage of the Prebendary of Handsacre and Armitage in the Cathedral Church of Lichfield, endowed with £400 royal bounty, and £1400 parliamentary grant. The church is dedicated to St. John. There is a place of worship for Calvinists. Some earthenware is manufactured in the parish.

ARMLEY, a chapelry in the parish of ST. PETER, within the liberty of the borough of LEEDS, West riding of the county of YORK, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. by N.) from Leeds, containing 4273 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry and diocese of York, endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Vicar of Leeds. The chapel, dedicated to St. Bartholomew, was built about the year 1630. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. The village is pleasantly situated on the south side of the river Aire, and is principally inhabited by persons occupied in the clothing business: in addition to the fulling-mills, there are cotton and corn mills on the banks of the river. The Leeds and Liverpool canal passes through the chapelry, in a parallel direction to the river, and skirts some elevations, called the Red and White War hills, where intrenchments, attributed to the Danes, were destroyed in its formation.

ARMSCOTT, a hamlet in the parish of TREDDINGTON, upper division of the hundred of OSWALDSLOW, county of WORCESTER, lying in a detached portion surrounded by Warwickshire, 3 miles (N. by W.) from Shipston upon Stour, containing 131 inhabitants.

ARMSTON, a hamlet in the parish and hundred of POLEBROOK, county of NORTHAMPTON, $2\frac{1}{4}$ miles (E. S. E.) from Oundle, containing 23 inhabitants.

ARMTHORPE, a parish in the southern division of the wapentake of STRAFFORTH and TICKHILL, West riding of the county of YORK, 4 miles (E. N. E.) from Doncaster, containing 359 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of York, rated in the king's books at £8. 18. 9., and in the patronage of the Crown. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. Here is a school, to which, in 1689, Ann Holmes bequeathed a rent-charge of £2. 10., for teaching six children and apprenticing poor boys, which endowment has been augmented with land given by Sir George Cooke, Bart.

ARNCLIFFE, a parish comprising the township of Buckden in the eastern division, and the chapelry of Halton Gill, and the townships of Arncliffe, West Halton, Hawksworth, and Litton, in the western division, of the wapentake of STAINCLIFFE and EWCROSS, West riding of the county of YORK, and containing 1063 inhabitants, of which number, 189 are in the township of Arncliffe, $10\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. E.) from Settle. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of York, rated in the king's books at £13. 6. 8., endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Master and Fellows of University College, Oxford. The church is dedicated to St. Oswald. The village is pleasantly situated near the river Wharf: the scenery in the vicinity is highly picturesque.

ARNCLIFFE (INGLEBY), a parish in the western division of the liberty of LANGBAURGH, North riding of the county of YORK, 7 miles (S. W. by W.) from Stokesley, containing 331 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Cleveland, and diocese of York, endowed with £800 royal bounty, and £400 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of Bryan Abbes, Esq. The church, dedicated to St. Andrew, is a small ancient edifice.

ARNCOTT, a chapelry in the parish of AMBROSDEN, hundred of BULLINGTON, though locally in the hundred of Ploughley, county of OXFORD, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles

(S. E. by S.) from Bicester, containing 270 inhabitants.

ARNE, a chapelry in the parish of the HOLY TRINITY, WAREHAM, hundred of HASILOR, Blandford (South) division of the county of DORSET, 4 miles (E. by N.) from Wareham, containing 134 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Dorset, and diocese of Bristol, and in the patronage of the Rector of Wareham. The chapel is dedicated to St. Nicholas. The village stands on the shore of Poole harbour, between Wareham and Brownsey island. On the summit of an eminence connected with a bank of gravel or pebbles, extending north-eastward into the harbour, there is a large barrow, which has been used as a beacon.

ARNESBY, a parish in the hundred of GUTHLAXTON, county of LEICESTER, $8\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. by E.) from Leicester, containing 459 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Leicester, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £5. 16. 8., endowed with £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of J. S. Langden, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Peter. There is a place of worship for Particular Baptists. A small endowment has been bequeathed for the education of poor children.

ARNOLD, a parish in the northern division of the wapentake of BROXTON, county of NOTTINGHAM, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. by E.) from Nottingham, containing 3572 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Nottingham, and diocese of York, rated in the king's books at £7. 17. 8., and in the patronage of the Duke of Devonshire. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, and situated to the north of the village, is a large edifice in the later style of English architecture, with a tower: on a tablet in the interior are recorded various charitable bequests, amounting to about £150 per annum. There are places of worship for General and Particular Baptists and Primitive and Wesleyan Methodists. The village occupies a large plot of ground, the houses being, for the most part, detached: the inhabitants are principally employed in the manufacture of lace and hosiery for the Nottingham market. In the neighbourhood are a few mills for spinning cotton and worsted yarn. A fair for the sale of live stock is held on the first Wednesday after September 19th. A school for the instruction of poor children is endowed with £22. 18. per annum, the produce of benefactions by Daniel Chadwick and others.

ARRAM, a joint township with Atwick and Skirlington, in the parish of ATWICK, northern division of the wapentake of HOLDERNESS, East riding of the county of YORK, $11\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. E.) from Beverley. The population is returned with Atwick.

ARRETON, a parish in the liberty of EAST MEDINA, Isle of Wight division of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, 3 miles (S. E.) from Newport, containing 1757 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Winchester, rated in the king's books at £21, and in the patronage of J. Fleming, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. George. In 1688, John Mann, Esq. left a rent-charge of £46 for maintaining, educating, and apprenticing poor orphans and others belonging to this parish.

ARRINGTON, a parish in the hundred of WETHERLEY, county of CAMBRIDGE, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. S. E.) from Caxton, containing 194 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Ely, rated in the king's books at £7. 6. 3., endowed with £200 royal bounty, and £200 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Master and Fellows of Trinity College, Cambridge. The church is dedicated to St. Nicholas.

ARROW, a township in the parish of WOODCHURCH, lower division of the hundred of WIRRAL, county palatine of CHESTER, 6½ miles (N. by W.) from Great Neston, containing 72 inhabitants.

ARROW, a parish comprising the hamlet of Ragley in the Alcester division, and the hamlet of Oversley in the Stratford division, of the hundred of BARLICHWAY, county of WARWICK, 1 mile (S. W.) from Alcester, and containing 501 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Worcester, rated in the king's books at £10. 10. 7½., and in the patronage of the Marquis of Hertford. The church, dedicated to the Holy Trinity, is an ancient structure, but the tower was rebuilt about 1760.

ARROWTHORNE, a township partly in the parish of HORNBY, but chiefly in that of BROMPTON-PATRICK, eastern division of the wapentake of HANG, North riding of the county of YORK, 5 miles (S. W. by S.) from Catterick, containing 64 inhabitants.

ARTINGTON, a township in the parish of ADDLE, upper division of the wapentake of SKYRACK, West riding of the county of YORK, 4½ miles (E.) from Otley, containing 329 inhabitants. A convent of Cluniac nuns was founded here, in the twelfth century, by Piers de Ardington, which was valued, at the dissolution, at £19: the site is occupied by a farm-house, now called the "Nunnery." There is an endowment of £3 per annum for the education of poor children.

ARTHINGWORTH, a parish in the hundred of ROTHWELL, county of NORTHAMPTON, 4½ miles (S. by E.) from Market-Harborough, containing, with the extra-parochial liberty of Barford, 219 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Northampton, and diocese of Peterborough, rated in the king's books at £12. 2. 8½., and in the patronage of L. Rokeby, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Andrew. A school here is endowed with land producing £24 per annum.

ARTHURET, a parish in ESKDALE ward, county of CUMBERLAND, ¼ of a mile (S.) from Longtown, comprising the townships of Brackenhill, Lineside, Longtown, and Netherby, and containing 2953 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Carlisle, rated in the king's books at £3. 2. 1., and in the patronage of Sir J. Graham, Bart. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, was rebuilt in 1609, with the exception of the tower, which was not completed till 1690. In the churchyard is a rude cross, with a pierced capital, near which were interred the remains of Archibald Armstrong, court jester to James I. and Charles I., who was a native of this parish. Arthuret is situated on the border of Scotland; and at the chapel of Solom, a small oratory, which anciently stood near the spot called the Chapel Flish, commissioners from England and Scotland met, in 1343, to settle the boundaries of the respective countries. On Solom Moss, the Scots, under Oliver Sinclair, were defeated by Sir Thomas Wharton, Lord Warden of the English Marches, in 1543. The parish was formerly much larger than it is at present, the adjoining parish of Kirk-Andrews having been separated from it in the reign of Charles I.: it includes part of the ancient parish of Easton; there are quarries of white and red freestone within its limits. A school, in which eight children are educated, was founded by Lady Widdrington, in 1754, and endowed with property producing £40 per annum.

ARTILLERY-GROUND (OLD), a liberty in the FINSBURY division of the hundred of OSSULSTONE, county of MIDDLESEX, containing 1487 inhabitants.

ARTINGTON, a tything in that part of the parish of ST. NICHOLAS, GUILDFORD, which is in the first division of the hundred of GODALMING, county of SURREY, 1 mile (S. by W.) from Guildford, containing 489 inhabitants.

ARUNDEL, a borough, market town, and parish, having exclusive jurisdiction, locally in the hundred and rape of Arundel, county of SUSSEX, 10 miles (E. by N.) from Chichester, and 55 (S. by W.) from London, containing 2511 inhabitants. This place, which derives its name from its situation in a dale watered by the river Arun, is first noticed in the will of Alfred, who bequeathed the castle and few adjacent residences to his nephew Athelm. The castle, rebuilt by Roger de Montgomery, at the time of the Conquest, was, in the reign of Henry I., besieged and taken from his son, Robert de Belesme, who had rebelled against his sovereign. In 1397, a conspiracy to dethrone Richard II., and to murder the lords of his council, was organised here by the Earl of Arundel, the Archbishop of Canterbury, the Duke of Gloucester, and others, but was discovered before it could be carried into execution. During the parliamentary war, the possession of the castle was considered an important object by the contending parties, and it consequently sustained frequent assaults: in one of these sieges, the learned Chillingworth, who had joined the royal army, was taken prisoner, and confined in the episcopal palace at Chichester, where he died. In consequence of the dilapidation which it thus sustained, it lay for some time neglected, and some parts mouldered into ruin; but it was restored by the late Duke of Norfolk, and is now one of the most splendid baronial mansions in the kingdom. It confers on its possessor the title of earl without creation, a feudal right, which was adjudged by parliament, in the 11th of Henry VI., to an ancestor of the present Duke of Norfolk, and is the only place, with the exception of the castle of Abergavenny, in Monmouthshire, which enjoys this distinction. The town, which is pleasantly situated on rising ground, is divided into two parts by the river Arun, here navigable for vessels of three hundred tons' burden, over which is a neat stone bridge of three arches. It is much frequented as a bathing-place, being within a distance of four miles from the sea, from which ships drawing sixteen feet water can enter the port. The houses are in general well built, and many of them are modern and of handsome appearance; the streets are well paved, and the inhabitants plentifully supplied with excellent water. The theatre, which is opened occasionally, is a neat building: the environs afford pleasant promenades, and the higher grounds in the vicinity extensive prospects. The trade is principally in timber, coal, and corn; and the port also affords a facility of intercourse between London and the Mediterranean, enabling the fruit ships from the latter to perform two voyages in the season. A canal, connecting the Arun with the Thames, affords a medium of conveyance to every part of the kingdom. The market is on Tuesday, chiefly for corn, the returns of the sale of which are considerable, and on every alternate Tuesday is a large cattle market. The fairs are held May 14th, September 25th, and December 17th, chiefly for cattle and pedlary; but since the cattle markets were established they have been but little attended.

Arundel, which is a borough by prescription, was incorporated by charter of Elizabeth: the government is vested in a mayor, steward, and twelve burgesses, assisted by other officers. The mayor exercises exclusive magisterial jurisdiction within the borough, and presides at a court for the recovery of debts under 40s., held every three weeks: petty sessions are also held here. A town hall, on an elegant plan, is about to be erected by the Duke of Norfolk. The borough has continued to return two members to parliament since the time of Edward I.: the right of election is vested in the inhabitants paying scot and lot, in number four hundred: the mayor is the returning officer. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Chichester, rated in the king's books at £5. 0. 10., and in the patronage of the Duke of Norfolk. The church, dedicated to the Holy Trinity, and formerly collegiate, is a very ancient and spacious cruciform structure, chiefly in the later style of English architecture, with a low tower rising from the centre. In the north aisle of the chancel, which is in a very dilapidated state, are some ancient monuments: there are also a stone pulpit and some screen-work very finely executed. Inconsiderable remains of an hospital, dedicated to the Holy Trinity, and of a convent of Black friars, founded in the reign of Edward II., are discernible. On the Causeway hill is a chalybeate spring.

ARVANS (ST.), a parish partly in the upper division of the hundred of RAGLAND, but chiefly in the upper division of the hundred of CALDICOTT, county of MONMOUTH, $2\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. W. by N.) from Chepstow, containing, with the hamlet of Portcasseg, 307 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Llandaff, endowed with £600 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Duke of Beaufort. Here are remains of two ancient chapels, dedicated respectively to St. Kingsmark and St. Lawrence. The parish is bounded on the north-east by the river Wye.

ARYHOLME, a joint township with Hawthorpe, in that part of the parish of HOVINGHAM which is in the wapentake of RYEDALE, North riding of the county of YORK, $7\frac{1}{4}$ miles (W.) from New Malton, containing 33 inhabitants.

ASBY, a parish in EAST ward, county of WEST-MORLAND, $4\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. by W.) from Appleby, comprising the townships of Asby-Coatsforth, Little Asby, and Asby-Winderwath, and containing 421 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Carlisle, rated in the king's books at £23. 13. 4., and in the patronage of Sir F. F. Vane, Bart. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a small ancient edifice. A chapel, dedicated to St. Leonard, formerly stood at Little Asby. The parish is bounded on the south by Crosby-Garret and Orton fells, and is intersected by numerous rivulets, on the margin of one of which, in a hollow called Asby Gill, is Pate Hole, a remarkable cavern, one thousand yards in depth, through which runs a small stream. Near Little Asby is a small lake, called Sunbiggin tarn. Limestone abounds in the parish, and a copper mine has been lately opened, and is successfully worked. The village of Great Asby is partly situated in the township of Asby-Coatsforth, and partly in that of Asby-Winderwath. A school-house was built in 1688, by George Smith, merchant taylor, and citizen of London, to which Dr. Thomas Smith, Bishop of Carlisle, a native of this parish, gave the sum of £100: the annual income now amounts to about £60. In 1812, an almshouse was founded for four poor widows, each of whom has an annuity of £6, and two rooms for residence. The parsonage-house occupies the site of an ancient nunnery, the chapel and prison of which remain, the latter being used as a cellar and coal-house. Near the church is St. Helen's well, supposed to have been a bath belonging to the convent; the water is reputed to be efficacious in healing sore eyes and inveterate wounds.

ASCOTE (CHAPEL), an extra-parochial liberty, in the Southam division of the hundred of KNIGHTLOW, county of WARWICK, 2 miles (N. W. by N.) from Southam, containing 12 inhabitants.

ASCOTT, a parish in the hundred of CHADLINGTON, county of OXFORD, $5\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. E. by N.) from Burford, containing 409 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford, endowed with £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Vicar of Shipton. The church is dedicated to the Holy Trinity. There are places of worship for Particular Baptists and Wesleyan Methodists.

ASCOTT, a hamlet in that part of the parish of GREAT MILTON which is in the hundred of THAME, county of OXFORD, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N.) from Bensington, containing 45 inhabitants.

ASENBY, a township in that part of the parish of TOPCLIFFE which is in the wapentake of HALLIKELD, North riding of the county of YORK, $5\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N.) from Boroughbridge, containing 230 inhabitants.

ASGARBY, a parish in the wapentake of ASWARDHURN, parts of KESTIVEN, county of LINCOLN, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E.) from Sleaford, containing 55 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, to which that of Kirkby le Thorpe was united in 1737, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £10. 14. $4\frac{1}{2}$., endowed with £1000 royal bounty, and £200 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Marquis of Bristol. The church, dedicated to St. Andrew, exhibits the later style of English architecture, and has a lofty tower surmounted by a fine crocketed spire.

ASGARBY, a parish in the western division of the soke of BOLINGBROKE, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, $5\frac{1}{4}$ miles (W. by N.) from Spilsby, containing 77 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the peculiar jurisdiction of the Dean and Chapter of Lincoln, and in the patronage of the Prebendary of Asgarby in the Cathedral Church of Lincoln. In 1667, Henry Pell bequeathed a rent-charge of £10 for the instruction of poor children of Asgarby, Howell, and Eveden, in the charity school at Ewerby.

ASH, a hamlet in the parish of SUTTON on the HILL, hundred of APPLETREE, county of DERBY, 8 miles (W.S.W.) from Derby, containing 47 inhabitants.

ASH, a hamlet in the parish of THROWLEY, hundred of WONFORD, county of DEVON, $7\frac{1}{4}$ miles (E.S.E.) from Oakhampton. The population is returned with the parish. John Churchill, Duke of Marlborough, the celebrated statesman and general, was born here, in 1650.

ASH, county of DURHAM.—See ESH.

ASH, a parish in the hundred of AXTON, DARTFORD, and WILMINGTON, lathe of SUTTON at HONE, county of KENT, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. by W.) from Wrotham, containing 505 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Rochester, rated in the king's books at £9. 18. 4., and in the patronage of M. Lambard, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul. In 1735, the Rev. Samuel Attwood bequeathed a rent-charge of £22. 10., and, in 1811, James Lance gave one of £10. 10., towards the endowment of a free school, which is now united to a school on the Madras system. Girls are educated at a separate school, supported by voluntary contribution.

ASH, a parish comprising the chapelry of Frimley, in the first division of the hundred of GODLEY, and the tything of Normanby in the first division of the hundred of WOKING, county of SURREY, 5 miles (N.E. by E.) from Farnham, containing 1867 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Surrey, and diocese of Winchester, rated in the king's books at £15. 18. 11 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of the Warden and Fellows of Winchester College. The church is dedicated to St. Peter. The Basingstoke canal crosses the northern part of the parish.

ASH (GREAT), a township in that part of the parish of WHITCHURCH which is in the Whitchurch division of the hundred of BRADFORD (North), county of SALOP, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S.E. by E.) from Whitchurch, with which the population is returned.

ASH (LITTLE), a township in that part of the parish of WHITCHURCH which is in the Whitchurch division of the hundred of BRADFORD (North), county of SALOP, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S.E. by E.) from Whitchurch, with which the population is returned.

ASH, near SANDWICH, a parish in the hundred of WINGHAM, lathe of ST. AUGUSTINE, county of KENT, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles (W. by N.) from Sandwich, containing 2020 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Canterbury, endowed with £600 private benefaction, and £1500 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Archbishop of Canterbury. The church is dedicated to St. Nicholas. The hamlet of Richborough, including the ruins of the fortress called Richborough Castle, in this parish, lies near the site of one of the Portus Rutupenses of the Romans. The existing remains occupy the brow of a hill, about a mile north-westward from Sandwich; they were originally bounded on the eastern side by the sea, and the other three sides were defended by walls enclosing an area of nearly five acres. A portion of the walls, about two hundred feet in length, from ten to thirty feet in height, and twelve in thickness, is still standing, and forms one of the most remarkable relics of antiquity which this country affords. Fairs are held on Lady-day and Michaelmas-day. The navigable river Stour passes along the northern boundary of the parish, and is crossed by two ferries. A school is endowed with £75 per annum, left by Eleanor and Anne Cartwright, for the education of twenty-five boys and twenty-five girls: it is under the management of trustees, the master receiving £25, and the mistress £17, per annum, the remainder being expended in books and repairs: the school-room was built by Elizabeth Godfrey, on condition that ten boys and ten girls should be added to the original number.

ASH-BOCKING, a parish in the hundred of BOSMERE and CLAYDON, county of SUFFOLK, 6 miles (E. by S.) from Needham-Market, containing 248 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Suffolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £9. 18. 6 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of the Crown. The church is dedicated to All Saints.

ASH-PRIORS, a parish forming, with those of Bishop's Lydeard, Fitzhead, and Wiveliscombe, one of the two unconnected portions which constitute the western division of the hundred of KINGSBURY, county of SOMERSET, 6 miles (N.W. by W.) from Taunton, containing 201 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Taunton, and diocese of Bath and Wells, endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £800 royal bounty, and in the patronage of Sir T. B. Lethbridge, Bart.

ASHAMSTEAD, a chapelry in the parish of BASSILDON, hundred of MORETON, county of BERKS, 6 miles (S.E. by E.) from East Ilsley, containing 337 inhabitants. The chapel is dedicated to St. Clement.

ASHAMSTEAD, a chapelry in the parish and hundred of LEWKNOR, county of OXFORD, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N.W.) from Great Marlow. The population is returned with the parish. The chapel is dedicated to St. Mary de More.

ASHBOURN, a parish comprising the market town of Ashbourn, the chapelry of Alsop le Dale, the township of Eaton, and the liberties of Newton-Grange, and Offcoat with Underwood, in the hundred of WIRKSWORTH, the townships of Hulland and Hulland-Ward-Intacks, and the hamlets of Hulland-Ward, Sturston, and Yeldersley, in the hundred of APPLETREE, and the chapelry of Clifton, and the hamlet of Compton, in that of MORLESTON and LITCHURCH, county of DERBY, and containing 4708 inhabitants, of which number, 2188 are in the town of Ashbourn, $13\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N.W. by W.) from Derby, and 140 (N.W. by N.) from London. This place, which at the time of the Conquest was held in royal demesne, is in Domesday-book called Esseburn. In 1644, a battle was fought here between the royalists and the parliamentarians, in which the former were defeated with considerable loss. Charles I. was at Ashbourn during the battle, and again, in 1645, on his march to Doncaster, at the head of thirty thousand men, when he attended divine service at the church. Charles Edward Stuart, accompanied by the Dukes of Athol and Perth, on their return from Derby in 1745, remained for one night in the town, taking forcible possession of the manor house, from which they expelled Sir Brooke Boothby and his family. On Sir Brooke's return, he found the names of the officers written in chalk upon the doors of the apartments which they had severally occupied: of these inscriptions, which were overlaid with white paint, some are preserved, and the bed-room in which the Pretender slept is still shewn.

The town is beautifully situated in a deep vale, on the eastern bank of the river Dove, over which there is a bridge of stone: the houses are principally built of red brick, and roofed with slate; the streets are partly paved, and the inhabitants are well supplied with water. The entrance from London is highly picturesque, commanding a fine view of the beautiful vale on the left, and of Ashbourn Hall, the seat of Sir William Boothby, Bart., on the right: the vicinity abounds with pleasing and richly varied scenery. The reading and news-rooms, and the libraries are respectably supported. The manufacture of cotton and tambour lace is carried on to a considerable extent, and a great quantity of cheese and malt is sent to the metropolis and other towns; but the principal support of the town is derived from its markets and numerous fairs. The market is on Saturday: fairs are held on the first Tuesday in January, and February the 13th for horses and cattle; the second Monday in March, for horses, cattle, and cheese; April 3rd, May 21st, and July 5th for horses, cattle, and wool; August 16th and September 20th, for horses and cattle; the third Monday in September, for horses, cattle, and cheese; and November 29th, for horses. Ashbourn is in the honour of Tutbury, duchy of Lancaster, and within the jurisdiction of a court of pleas held at Tutbury every third Tuesday, for the recovery of debts under 40s. Courts leet and baron are held annually under the lord of the manor, at which constables and other officers for the town are appointed. The house of correction was capable of containing forty prisoners, but as it would not admit of their classification they are now sent to Derby, and the building has been converted into a poor-house.

The living is a discharged vicarage, with the perpetual curacy of Mappleton united, in the archdeaconry of Derby, and diocese of Lichfield and Coventry, rated in the king's books at £5. 4. 7., endowed with £600 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Dean of Lincoln. The church, dedicated to St. Oswald, is a spacious cruciform edifice, having a central tower surmounted by a lofty and highly ornamented octagonal spire: it was erected in 1240, by Hugh de Patishull, Bishop of Coventry, and displays the early English style, intermixed with decorations of a later period: the northern part of the chancel, appropriated as a sepulchral chapel to the Boothby family, contains, among others, an exquisitely finished monument, from the chisel of Banks, to the memory of Penelope, only child of Sir Brooke Boothby, who died at the age of five years, which is said to have suggested to Chantrey the design of his celebrated monument in Lichfield cathedral. There are places of worship for Baptists, Wesleyan Methodists, and those in the late Countess of Huntingdon's Connexion, which last was built by Mr. John Cooper, in 1800, who endowed it with £42 per annum. The free grammar school was founded, in 1585, under a charter of Queen Elizabeth, and endowed with estates purchased by the inhabitants, now producing £210 per annum, two-thirds of which, with a house and garden, are given to the master, and the remainder, with a house, to the usher: the management is vested in three governors and twelve assistants. The English school was founded in 1710, and endowed with £10 per annum, by Mr. Spalden, for the instruction of thirty boys, till they should be fit to enter the grammar school: he also endowed a school for thirty girls under twelve years of age, the mistress of which has £10 per annum. Almshouses for four widows of Protestant clergymen, and ten almshouses in the churchyard, for poor persons of the parish, were founded and endowed by the same benevolent individual. Eight almshouses were founded by Mr. R. Owfield, in 1610, the completion and endowment of which was effected by the subsequent benefaction of various individuals; six by Mr. Pegg, in 1668, to which Mr. Jeremiah Pole bequeathed an estate; and six by Mr. John Cooper, which he endowed with £63 per annum, for poor people attending Lady Huntingdon's chapel, all which have subsequently received divers benefactions. In the neighbourhood formerly stood a chapel, dedicated to St. Mary, which, previously to its being taken down, several years ago, was used as a malt-house.

Dovedale, in the adjoining parish of Tiesington, abounds with pleasingly picturesque and strikingly romantic scenery: the entrance is progressively marked with features of simple beauty, impressive grandeur, and terrific awe. Thorpe Cloud on the right, and a towering pile of massive rocks on the left, form natural ramparts of majestic elevation, between which the river Dove winds through the vale with varied course, sometimes rushing with tumultuous effort along the bases of stupendous cliffs, its stream darkened by the threatening precipices which impend above it, and at others expanding into a smooth and placid surface, reflecting, with softened beauty and milder lustre, the luxuriant verdure of its wood-crowned banks. At various intervals, rude masses of grotesque form, which have been fancifully denominated my Lady's Chair, Dovedale Castle, the Church, the Twelve Apostles, the Lion's Head, the Sugar Loaves, and the Lover's Leap, rise in succession throughout this enchanting dale, in which the simpler and the sublimer beauties of nature, in all their variety, are richly and strikingly combined.

ASHBRITTLE, a parish in the hundred of MILVERTON, county of SOMERSET, 6½ miles (W.) from Wellington, containing 579 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Taunton, and diocese of Bath and Wells, rated in the king's books at £19. 3. 11½., and in the patronage of J. Quick, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. John the Baptist.

ASHBURNHAM, a parish in the hundred of FOXEARLE, rape of HASTINGS, county of SUSSEX, 4½ miles (W. by S.) from Battle, containing 768 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, with the rectory of Penhurst annexed, in the archdeaconry of Lewes, and diocese of Chichester, rated in the king's books at £8. 13. 4., and in the patronage of the Earl of Ashburnham. The church is dedicated to St. James. A lectureship was founded in this parish, in 1631, by R. Bateman, Esq., Chamberlain of London, and others, with an endowment of £40 per annum, for two sermons; it is in the patronage of the Co-Heiresses of the late Sir Hugh Bateman, the last surviving trustee.

Seal and Arms.

ASHBURTON, a borough, market town, and parish, in the southern division of the hundred of TEIGNBRIDGE, county of DEVON, 19 miles (S.W.) from Exeter, and 192 (W. by S.) from London, on the road to Plymouth, containing 3403 inhabitants. This town, anciently called Aisbertone, in the time of Edward the Confessor belonged to Brietric, and at the Conquest to Jukel de Totnais: it was subsequently annexed to the see of Exeter, and, in 1310, Bishop Stapylton obtained for it a grant of a market and two fairs. In 1672, Mr. John Ford procured another market, chiefly for wool, and yarn spun in Cornwall, which has long been discontinued. It was made a stannary town by charter of Edward III., in 1328, being then noted for the mines of tin and copper which abounded in the neighbourhood. Ashburton, in the parliamentary war, having been previously occupied by the royal troops under Lord Wentworth, was taken by Sir Thomas Fairfax, on his march westward, in January 1654. The town, situated about a mile and a half from the river Dart, consists principally of one street of considerable length; the houses are built of brick and roofed with slate, which latter is obtained from quarries in the vicinity. The inhabitants are well supplied with water; the river Yeo, a rapid stream, runs through the town, and turns several mills. There is a book society; and card and dancing assemblies, and music meetings, are frequently held in a handsome suite of rooms at the Lion Inn. The manufacture of serge for the East India Company is carried on to a very great extent, the annual returns being stated to exceed £100,000; there are some mills for fulling cloth and for the spinning of yarn, and, in addition to the slate-quarries, mines of tin and copper are still worked in the neighbourhood. The market is on Saturday; and fairs are held on the first Thursdays in March and June, the 10th of August, and the 11th of November, which last is a great sheep fair. Ashburton is a borough by prescription: a portreeve, bailiff, constable, and subordinate officers are appointed annually at a court leet held by the steward of the manor, but they have no magisterial authority: a stannary court is held occasionally. The borough made two returns to parliament, in the 26th of Edward I. and the 8th of Henry IV., but none subsequently until 1640, when the franchise was restored by the last parliament of Charles I., since which time it has regularly returned two members: the right of election is vested in the inhabitant freeholders; the portreeve is the returning officer.

The living is a vicarage, with the perpetual curacies of Bickington and Buckland in the Moor annexed, in the peculiar jurisdiction and patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Exeter, rated in the king's books at £38. 8. 11½. The church, dedicated to St. Andrew, was formerly collegiate: it is a venerable and spacious cruciform structure, in the later style of English architecture, with a square tower rising from the centre. There are places of worship for Particular Baptists, Independents, and Wesleyan Methodists. The free grammar school was founded, in the 36th of Elizabeth, by William Blundell, Esq., and endowed with lands, a portion of which belonged to the dissolved chantry of St. Lawrence, a fine ancient building, with a tower and a small spire, now appropriated to the use of the school, for parliamentary elections for the borough, and for other public meetings; the original endowment has been augmented by subsequent benefactions, and the management is vested in trustees chosen from among the inhabitants. The free school, in which one hundred children are educated, was endowed, in 1754, by Lord Middleton and John Harris, Esq., then representatives for the borough, in gratitude for the liberality of their constituents. There is also a school for ten poor girls, established in 1805, by Miss Mary Dunning. Inconsiderable vestiges of a chapel, which belonged to the abbot of Buckfastleigh, are still discernible in the walls of Parham House. John Dunning, Baron Ashburton, the celebrated lawyer, was born here, October 18th, 1731: he died August 18th, 1783, and was interred in the church. Dr. Ireland, Dean of Westminster, and the late Mr. Gifford, editor of the Quarterly Review, were also natives of Ashburton.

ASHBURY, a parish in the hundred of SHRIVENHAM, county of BERKS, 6½ miles (N.W. by W.) from Lambourn, containing, with the chapelry of Chapelwick, and the tythings of Idstone and Odstone, 683 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Berks, and diocese of Salisbury, rated in the king's books at £11. 8. 1½., and in the patronage of the Rector, who presents one of three candidates nominated by the President and Fellows of Magdalene College, Oxford; the rectory is a sinecure, rated at £30. 12. 6., and in the patronage of the Bishop of Bath and Wells. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. The Roman road, called the Ikniel-way, passes near the village: and in the parish there is an intrenchment, called Alfred's Camp, near which are two barrows. Here are also a tumulus and cromlech, popularly called "Wayland Smith," with which a tradition, introduced by Sir Walter Scott in his romance of "Kenilworth," is connected.

ASHBURY, a parish in the hundred of BLACK TORRINGTON, county of DEVON, 5½ miles (S.W. by W.) from Hatherleigh, containing 74 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Totness, and diocese of Exeter, rated in the king's books at £5. 13. 4., and in the patronage of the Crown. The church is dedicated to St. Mary.

ASHBY, a parish in the wapentake of BRADLEY-HAVERSTOE, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, 6½ miles (S. by W.) from Great Grimsby, containing, with the hamlet of Fenby, 191 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £14. 10. 10., and in the patronage of the Crown. The church is dedicated to St. Peter.

ASHBY, a parish in the Wold division of the wapentake of CANDLESHOE, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, 2½ miles (E. by N.) from Spilsby, containing 140 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £7. 10. 2½., and in the patronage of Robert Fowler, D.D., Bishop of Ossory. The church is dedicated to St. Helen.

ASHBY, a township in that part of the parish of BOTTESFORD, which is in the eastern division of the wapentake of MANLEY, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, 6½ miles (W. by S.) from Glandford-Bridge, containing 284 inhabitants. In 1705, Stephen Caistor bequeathed a house to be used as a school-house for the children in the township.

ASHBY, a parish in the western division of the hundred of FLEGG, county of NORFOLK, 2½ miles (N.) from Acle, containing, with the parish of Oby, 72 inhabitants. The living is a rectory with Oby, united to that of Thirne, in the archdeaconry of Norfolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £10. The church is dedicated to St. Mary.

ASHBY, a parish in the hundred of LODDON, county of NORFOLK, 8 miles (S. E.) from Norwich, containing 234 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, united to that of Hillington, in the archdeaconry of Norfolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £6. The church is dedicated to St. Mary.

ASHBY, a parish in the hundred of MUTFORD and LOTHINGLAND, county of SUFFOLK, 6 miles (N. W.) from Lowestoft, containing 34 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Suffolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £6, and in the patronage of the Rev. George Anguish. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a small thatched building, having a tower circular at the base, and octangular above, with battlements and embrasures.

ASHBY (CANONS), a parish in the hundred of GREENS-NORTON, county of NORTHAMPTON, 8 miles (W. by N.) from Towcester, containing, with the chapelry of Adstone, 203 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Northampton, and diocese of Peterborough, and in the patronage of Sir J. Dryden, Bart. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. Here was anciently a priory of Black canons, founded about the time of John, the revenue of which, at the dissolution, was £127. 19.

ASHBY (CASTLE), a parish in the hundred of WYMERSLEY, county of NORTHAMPTON, 7¼ miles (E. by S.) from Northampton, containing 128 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Northampton, and diocese of Peterborough, rated in the king's books at £17. 9. 7., and in the patronage of the Marquis of Northampton. The church is dedicated to St. Mary Magdalene. The castle, formerly the princely mansion of the Comptons, Earls of Northampton, is situated near the northern extremity of Yardley Chase, through which is a wide avenue extending above three miles from the south front; it is built in the form of a quadrangle, having on the south side a screen of two stories, from a design by Inigo Jones, and at the north-east and south-west angles, two lofty octangular towers.

ASHBY (COLD), a parish in the hundred of GUILSBOROUGH, county of NORTHAMPTON, 11½ miles (N. W. by N.) from Northampton, containing 375 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Northampton, and diocese of Peterborough, rated in the king's books at £6. 0. 5., and in the patronage of the Rev. W. Mousley. The church is dedicated to St. Denis.

Here is a free school for poor children, endowed with £18 per annum, being a rent-charge left by William Wickes, in 1710, and £2. 10., a moiety of the rental of a piece of land devised by Richard Ward, in 1736. Richard Knolles, the historian of the Turkish Empire, was born here, in 1540.

ASHBY de la LAUNDE, a parish in the wapentake of FLAXWELL, parts of KESTIVEN, county of LINCOLN, 6¼ miles (N. by W.) from Sleaford, containing 155 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £6. 8. 4., endowed with £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of Neville King, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Hybald.

ASHBY (ST. LEDGER'S), a parish in the hundred of FAWSLEY, county of NORTHAMPTON, 3½ miles (N.) from Daventry, containing 272 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Northampton, and diocese of Peterborough, rated in the king's books at £6. 13. 4., and in the patronage of J. Ashley, Esq. The church, dedicated to St. Mary and St. Leodgare, is in the later style of English architecture, and contains a richly ornamented screen and rood-loft, and in the windows are some portions of ancient stained glass. The parish is bounded on the east by the Watling-street.

ASHBY (MAGNA), a parish in the hundred of GUTHLAXTON, county of LEICESTER, 4 miles (N. by E.) from Lutterworth, containing 280 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Leicester, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £7. 8. 11½., and in the patronage of the Earl of Aylesford. The church is dedicated to St. Mary.

ASHBY (PARVA), a parish in the hundred of GUTHLAXTON, county of LEICESTER, 3 miles (N. N. W.) from Lutterworth, containing 176 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Leicester, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £5. 7. 6., and in the patronage of the Crown. The church is dedicated to St. Peter. Ashby Parva is in the honour of Tutbury, duchy of Lancaster, and within the jurisdiction of a court of pleas held at Tutbury every third Tuesday, for the recovery of debts under 40s.

ASHBY (WEST), a parish in the soke of HORNCASTLE, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, 1¼ mile (N.) from Horncastle, containing 378 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Lincoln, endowed with £400 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Bishop of Carlisle. The church is dedicated to All Saints.

ASHBY de la ZOUCH, a market town and parish in the western division of the hundred of GOSCOTE, county of LEICESTER, 18 miles (N. W. by W.) from Leicester, and 115 (N. W. by N.) from London, containing, with the chapelry of Blackfordby, and the extra-parochial liberty of Alton Grange, 4227 inhabitants. The name appears to be derived from the Saxon Asc, an ash, and bye, a habitation: it received the adjunct, by which it is distinguished from other towns of the same name, from the family of La Zouch, in whose possession it continued from the latter part of the twelfth to the close of the fourteenth century. Sir William Hastings, created Baron Hastings by Edward IV., who was beheaded by Richard III., built a strong castle here in the reign of the former monarch, in which Mary, Queen of Scots, while in the custody of the Earl of Huntingdon, was for some time kept in confinement: in this castle Anne, consort of James I., and her son, Prince Henry, were magnificently entertained by the Earl of Huntingdon, on their journey from York to London, in 1603. At the commencement of the parliamentary war, the Earl of Huntingdon was one of the first that appeared in arms for the king in Leicestershire. Ashby castle was garrisoned for his Majesty by the earl's second son, Col. Henry Hastings, who was made general of the king's forces in the midland counties, and, for his services to the royal cause, was, in 1643, created Baron Loughborough. The king was here, on his march to and from Leicester, in May and June 1645. After sustaining a siege of several months from the army under Sir Henry Fairfax, Lord Loughborough surrendered the castle to Col. Needham, in February 1646, on honourable terms, the garrison being allowed to march out with all the honours of war. This castle was one of the fortresses demolished by order of a committee of the House of Commons, about the end of the year 1649; portions of the walls of the hall, the chapel, and the kitchen, are still remaining, and form an extensive and interesting mass of ruins.

The town, a great part of which was destroyed by fire in 1753, is pleasantly situated on the banks of the small river Gilwisthaw, at the north-western extremity of the county, and consists principally of one very spacious street, with two smaller streets extending in a parallel direction, containing several substantial and well-built houses: there are many excellent springs in the neighbourhood, but the town is very indifferently supplied with water. The Ivanhoe baths, a splendid building erected within the last six years, in the Doric order of architecture, are supplied from the neighbouring collieries with water, strongly impregnated with muriate of soda, containing, by ten or twelve degrees, a greater proportion of salt than sea water, and efficacious in mitigating the pain of rheumatism; the baths are conveniently and elegantly fitted up for the use of invalids. There are lodging-houses, a handsome hotel, a neat theatre, and other sources of attraction, requisite in a place of fashionable resort. A small mineral spring, called Griffydham, the water of which possesses highly medicinal properties, rises at a short distance from the town. The manufacture of the coarser kinds of hosiery is carried on here: bricks are made to a considerable extent; and in the neighbouring wolds, which abound with ironstone, a furnace for smelting the ore has been recently erected. A canal passes within three miles south-westward of the town, with which it is connected by a rail-road, and, after continuing a course of more than thirty miles, unimpeded by a single lock, forms a junction with the Coventry canal. The market is on Saturday: fairs are held on Shrove-Monday, Easter-Tuesday, Whit-Tuesday, the last Monday in September, and the 10th of November, for horses and cattle: this is stated to be the best market for strong horses in England. The town is in the honour of Tutbury, duchy of Lancaster, and within the jurisdiction of a court of pleas held at Tutbury every third Tuesday, for the recovery of debts under 40s.: a constable and two head-boroughs are appointed at the court leet of the lord of the manor.

The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Leicester, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £14. 10. 4., endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Marquis of Hastings. The church, dedicated to St. Helen, is a spacious structure in the decorated style of English architecture, and contains, among many others, a handsome monument to the memory of Francis, Earl of Huntingdon, and his Countess. There are places of worship for Baptists, those in the Connexion of the late Countess of Huntingdon, Independents and Wesleyan Methodists. The free grammar school was founded, in 1567, by Henry, Earl of Huntingdon, and others, and endowed with one hundred and twenty houses and seventy-five acres of land: it has, jointly with the school at Derby, ten exhibitions of £10 each per annum, to Emmanuel College, Cambridge, founded by Francis Ash, merchant and citizen of London, a native of this town, with preference to the founder's relations. The Blue-coat school, for twenty-six boys, was founded in 1669, and endowed with £25 per annum, by Isaac Dawson; and a Green-coat school was founded and endowed by Alderman Newton of Leicester. The Rev. Simeon Ash, a native of this town, gave £50 per annum, directing that £10 thereof should be appropriated to the apprenticing of two boys yearly in some corporate town, and that the remainder should be distributed among the poor. A great number of Roman coins has been found here within the last seven years. Bishop Hall, an eminent divine and satirist, and Dr. John Bainbridge, a celebrated astronomer and mathematician, were born at this town, the former in 1574, and the latter in 1582.

ASHBY-FOLVILLE, a parish in the eastern division of the hundred of GOSCOTE, county of LEICESTER, 6 miles (S. W. by S.) from Melton-Mowbray, containing, with the chapelry of Barsby, 405 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Leicester, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £9, and in the patronage of the Rev. J. Brown. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. Here is an hospital, founded by the Carrington family.

ASHBY-MEARS, a parish in the hundred of HAMFORDSHOE, county of NORTHAMPTON, 3½ miles (W. by S.) from Wellingborough, containing 442 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Northampton, and diocese of Peterborough, rated in the king's books at £4. 13. 9., and in the patronage of Sir J. Langham, Bart. The church is dedicated to All Saints.

ASHBY-PUERORUM, a parish in the hundred of HILL, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, 4½ miles (E. N. E.) from Horncastle, containing, with the hamlet of Stainsby, and the extra-parochial liberty of Holbeck, 117 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £6. 3. 2., endowed with £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Lincoln. The church is dedicated to St. Andrew.

ASCHHURCH, a parish in the lower division of the hundred of TEWKESBURY, county of GLOUCESTER, 2½ miles (E. N. E.) from Tewkesbury, comprising the tythings of Aston upon Carron, Fiddington with Natton, Northway with Newton, and Pamington, and containing 643 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Gloucester, endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Rev. William Hopton. The church consists of a nave, chancel, and north aisle, with a tower at the west end, chiefly displaying the later English style, but having on the south side a Norman porch. The Carrant, a stream tributary to the Avon, flows through the parish, also a branch of the Cheltenham spring.

ASHCOMBE, a parish in the hundred of EXMISTON, county of DEVON, 3 miles (E.) from Chudleigh, containing 283 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Exeter, rated in the king's books at £18, and in the patronage of the Crown. Here are two charity schools, one of which has an endowment of £3 per annum, and the other is supported by subscription.

ASHCOTT, a parish in the hundred of WHITLEY, county of SOMERSET, 5 miles (W. S. W.) from Glastonbury, containing 712 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to the vicarage of Shapwick, in the archdeaconry of Wells, and diocese of Bath and Wells. The church is dedicated to All Saints. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. A fair for cattle is held on the 9th of January. In 1737, Richard Miles bequeathed a sum of money, since vested in land now producing £70 per annum, which is distributed among the poor of the parish.

ASHDON, a parish in the hundred of FRESHWELL, county of ESSEX, 3½ miles (N. E. by E.) from Saffron-Walden, containing, with the hamlet of Bartlow-End, 1014 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Colchester, and diocese of London, rated in the king's books at £28. 3. 4., and in the patronage of the Master and Fellows of Caius College, Cambridge. The church, dedicated to All Saints, has been repaired and new pewed within the last twenty years: at the east end of the south aisle is a building termed the Old Chancel. There are four large barrows, commonly called Bartlow Hills, in this parish, one of which, on being opened, was found to contain stone coffins and a number of iron chains similar to the curb of a bridle: they are supposed to be sepulchral monuments of the Danish chiefs killed at the battle of Assandune, or Ashdon, in which Edmund Ironside was defeated by Canute in 1016; but the more reputable historians refer this event to Ashingdon. Here is a charity school, with an endowment of £3 per annum.

ASHE, a parish in the hundred of OVERTON, Kingsclere division of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, 5½ miles (E. N. E.) from Whitchurch, containing 114 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Winchester, rated in the king's books at £9. 11. 5½., and in the patronage of Wither Bramston, Esq. The church is dedicated to the Holy Trinity. The river Test has its source in this parish.

ASHELDHAM, a parish in the hundred of DEN-GIE, county of ESSEX, 5 miles (S. S. W.) from Bradwell, containing 156 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Essex, and diocese of London, rated in the king's books at £16. 13. 4., and in the patronage of the Bishop of London. The church is dedicated to St. Lawrence.

ASHELWORTH, a parish in the upper division of the hundred of BERKELEY, though locally in the hundred of Dudstone and King's Barton, county of GLOUCESTER, 5½ miles (N. by W.) from Gloucester, containing 498 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Gloucester, rated in the king's books at £10. 2. 11., and in the patronage of the Bishop of Bristol. The church, dedicated to St. Andrew, consists of a nave, south aisle, and two chancels, with a tower and spire, chiefly in the later English style. Several parts of the manor-house, which stands near the church, display considerable antiquity; and the parsonage, now a farm-house, affords a peculiarly fine specimen of wood work. The navigable river Severn skirts the parish on the south-east. The Sunday school has an endowment of £3 per annum, but is chiefly supported by subscription.

ASHEN, a parish in the hundred of HINCKFORD, county of ESSEX, 2½ miles (S. W. by S.) from Clare, containing 293 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Middlesex, and diocese of London, rated in the king's books at £8, and in the patronage of the King, as Duke of Lancaster. According to Bishop Tanner, here was a priory of Augustine friars in the 17th of Edward II.

ASHENDON, a parish in the hundred of ASHENDON, county of BUCKINGHAM, 6½ miles (N.) from Thame, containing 339 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Buckingham, and diocese of Lincoln, endowed with £8 per annum private benefaction, and £600 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Dean and Canons of Christ Church, Oxford. The church is dedicated to St. Mary.

ASHFIELD, a parish in the hundred of THREDLING, county of SUFFOLK, 6 miles (W. by S.) from Framlingham, containing, with the chapelry of Thorpe, 309 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Suffolk, and diocese of Norwich, endowed with £800 royal bounty, and in the patronage of Lord Henniker. The church is dedicated to St. Mary.

ASHFIELD (GREAT), a parish in the hundred of BLACKBOURN, county of SUFFOLK, 5 miles (E. S. E.) from Ixworth, containing 345 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Suffolk, and diocese of Norwich, endowed with £1400 royal bounty, and in the patronage of Lord Thurlow, whose ancestor, the Lord Chancellor Thurlow, was born here, in 1732. The church is dedicated to All Saints.

ASHFORD, a chapelry in the parish of BAKEWELL, hundred of HIGH PEAK, county of DERBY, 2 miles (N. W. by W.) from Bakewell, containing 728 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the peculiar jurisdiction of the Dean and Chapter of Lichfield, endowed with £200 private benefaction, £800 royal bounty, and £200 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Vicar of Bakewell. The chapel, dedicated to the Holy Trinity, was built in 1947. There is a place of worship for General Baptists; another, originally founded by the Nonconformist divine, William Bagshaw, styled "the Apostle of the Peak," has been subsequently used by different sects. The village lies in a vale watered by the river Wye, over which are three stone bridges. Mills for sawing and polishing marble, being the first established for that purpose in England, were erected on its banks in 1786, and are supplied from the celebrated quarries of black marble in the vicinity. Ashford is in the honour of Tutbury, duchy of Lancaster, and within the jurisdiction of a court of pleas held at Tutbury every third Tuesday, for the recovery of debts under 40s. A school for poor children was founded by William Harris, in 1631, and endowed with £6. 13. 4. per annum, to which Thomas Roose and the Rev. Samuel Evatt added £1 per annum each. Edward Plantagenet, Earl of Kent, resided in a mansion near the church, of which there are no vestiges, except the moat that surrounded it.

ASHFORD, a parish in the hundred of BRAUNTON, county of DEVON, 2 miles (N.W.) from Barnstaple, containing 98 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Barnstaple, and diocese of Exeter, rated in the king's books at £8. 13. 9., endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Crown. The church is dedicated to St. Peter. The navigable river Torr passes on the south side of the parish.

ASHFORD, a market town and parish in the hundred of CHART and LONGBRIDGE, lathe of SCRAY, county of KENT, 20 miles (S.E. by E.) from Maidstone, and 54 (E.S.E.) from London, containing 2773 inhabitants. This place, originally Ass-cheford, rose from the ruins of Great Chart, an ancient market town, which gave name to the hundred, and was destroyed during the Danish wars. The town, which is a liberty of itself, is situated on an eminence rising from the northern bank of the small river Stour, over which there is a bridge of one arch; the houses are modern and well built, and the principal street, which is nearly half a mile long, is lighted. A suite of assembly-rooms has recently been erected on the site of the ancient manor and market house in which assemblies occasionally take place: there are two subscription libraries, and races are held annually for one day. The only branch of manufacture is that of linen, which is carried on to a small extent. The market is on Tuesday and Saturday, and there is a cattle market on the first and third Tuesday in every month: fairs are held on May 17th, September 9th, and October 24th, for general merchandise, and in the first week in August for wool. A court leet is held annually, at which a constable, borough-holder, and other officers are appointed.

The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Canterbury, rated in the king's books at £18. 4. 2., and in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Rochester. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, and formerly collegiate, is a spacious and handsome cruciform structure, in the later style of English architecture, with a lofty and elegant tower rising from the centre, and having at the southern entrance a fine Norman arch: it was rebuilt, in the reign of Edward IV., by Sir John Fogge, Knt., who erected the beautiful tower, and founded the college for a master, two chaplains, and two secular clerks. In a small chapel adjoining the south-western transept are three sumptuous monuments of variegated marble, to the memory of the Smyths of Westenhanger, and one to the Duchess of Athol. There are places of worship for particular Baptists, the Society of Friends, those in the Connexion of the late Countess of Huntingdon, and Wesleyan Methodists. The free grammar school was founded, in 1636, by Sir Norton Knatchbull, who endowed it with £30 per annum, and vested the appointment of a master in his own family. A National school for ninety boys, and another for sixty girls, are supported by subscription, and by a bequest in land, producing £35 per annum, from Dr. Turner, in 1702. A mineral spring was discovered, a few years ago, in a field called Sparrows Gardens. Robert Glover an industrious antiquary of the sixteenth century; his nephew, Thomas Miller, eminent as a herald and genealogist; and Dr. John Wallis, the celebrated mathematician, were natives of this place. Ashford confers the inferior title of baron on the family of Keppel, Earls of Albemarle.

ASHFORD, a parish in the hundred of SPELTHORNE, county of MIDDLESEX, 3 miles (E.) from Staines, containing 331 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to the vicarage of Staines, in the archdeaconry of Middlesex, and diocese of London. The church is dedicated to St. Michael.

ASHFORD-BOWDLER, a parish in the hundred of MUNSLOW, county of SALOP, 2½ miles (S. by E.) from Ludlow, containing 89 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Salop, and diocese of Hereford, endowed with £200 private benefaction, £200 royal bounty, and £200 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of R. H. Green, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Andrew.

ASHFORD-CARBONELL, a parish partly in the hundred of MUNSLOW, but chiefly in the hundred of STOTTESDEN, county of SALOP, 3¼ miles (S.S.E.) from Ludlow, containing 316 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to the rectory of Little Hereford, in the peculiar jurisdiction of the Chancellor in the Cathedral Church of Hereford, endowed with £800 royal bounty.

ASHFORDBY, or ASFORDBY, a parish in the eastern division of the hundred of GOSCOTE, county of LEICESTER, 3 miles (W.) from Melton-Mowbray, containing 424 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Leicester, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £15. 11. 8., and in the patronage of the Rev. Andrew Burnaby. The church is dedicated to All Saints. This place communicates with the Leicester and Melton-Mowbray Navigation by means of the river Wreak, over which here is a bridge. In 1769, Morris Cam bequeathed £100 towards the support of a school for poor children.

ASH-HOLM, a township in the parish of LAMBLEY, western division of TYNDALE ward, county of NORTHUMBERLAND, 19½ miles (W. by S.) from Hexham, containing 122 inhabitants. Here is a good millstone quarry.

ASHILL, a parish in the hundred of WAYLAND, county of NORFOLK, 3¼ miles (N.W.) from Watton, containing 579 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £19. 13. 6½., and in the patronage of the Rev. B. Edwards. The church, dedicated to St. Nicholas, is chiefly in the later style of English architecture, and has a tower built of flint. A National school was established here in 1821.

ASHILL, a parish in the hundred of ABDICK and BULSTONE, county of SOMERSET, 3½ miles (N.W.) from Ilminster, containing 378 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the peculiar jurisdiction and patronage of the Prebendary of Ashill in the Cathedral Church of Wells, rated in the king's books at £6. 0. 10., and endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. Thomas de Multon, lord of the manor in the reign of Edward II., obtained a charter for a market on Wednesday, and fairs on the festivals of the Virgin Mary and St. Simon and St. Jude. A chalybeate spring, to which a bath has been annexed, said to be serviceable in scorbutic complaints, rises within the parish.

ASHINGDON, a parish in the hundred of ROCHFORD, county of ESSEX, $2\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. by W.) from Rochford, containing 97 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Essex, and diocese of London, rated in the king's books at £8. 13. 4., and in the patronage of Josiah Nottidge, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Andrew. Here is a school, with an endowment of £2 per annum, for the education of poor children. This place is thought to have been the scene of the battle of Assandune, in which Canute the Dane vanquished the Saxons under Edmund Ironside.

ASHINGTON, a township in the parish of BOTHALL, eastern division of MORPETH ward, county of NORTHUMBERLAND, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. by N.) from Morpeth. The population is returned with Sheepwash. The river Wansbeck is navigable for keels and small boats as far as Sheepwash, where it is crossed by a bridge.

ASHINGTON, a parish in the hundred of STONE, county of SOMERSET, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. S. E.) from Ilchester, containing 81 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Wells, and diocese of Bath and Wells, rated in the king's books at £6. 3. 4., endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of Mrs. Williams. The church is dedicated to St. Vincent. There is a provision for the education of five poor boys of this parish at the school of Marston Magna.

ASHINGTON, a parish in the hundred of WEST GRINSTEAD, rape of BRAMBER, county of SUSSEX, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W.) from Steyning, containing, with the chapelry of Buncton, 229 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Chichester, rated in the king's books at £8. 5., and in the patronage of the Rev. R. Clough and others. The church is dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul.

ASHLEY, a parish in the hundred of CHEVELEY, county of CAMBRIDGE, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles (E. by S.) from Newmarket, containing, with the parish of Silverley, 351 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, with the vicarage of Silverley annexed, in the archdeaconry of Sudbury, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £8, and in the patronage of the Earl of Guilford. The church is dedicated to St. Mary.

ASHLEY, a township in the parish of BOWDON, hundred of BUCKLOW, county palatine of CHESTER, 5 miles (N. N. E.) from Nether Knutsford, containing 392 inhabitants. Ashley Hall, the ancient manorial mansion, is remarkable for containing eleven original portraits of the same number of gentlemen of this county, ancestors of the Grosvenors, Cholmondeleys, and other families, who formed a club during the progress of the Pretender through the north, in 1715, when the expediency of joining his standard was debated: the casting vote against the measure having been given by Thomas Asheton, the owner of the manor and mansion: this decision is considered, from the influence of the parties in Lancashire and Cheshire, to have mainly contributed to the defeat of the enterprise.

ASHLEY, a parish in the hundred of CORBY, county of NORTHAMPTON, 5 miles (W. by S.) from Rockingham, containing 367 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Northampton, and diocese of Peterborough, rated in the king's books at £17, and in the patronage of the Rev. Richard Farrer. The church is dedicated to St. Mary.

ASHLEY, a parish in the hundred of KING'S SOMBOURN, Andover division of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, 3 miles (S. S. E.) from Stockbridge, containing 90 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Winchester, rated in the king's books at £7. 16. 3., and in the patronage of the Rev. R. C. Taunton. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. In this parish are vestiges of several Roman camps, and a circular intrenchment of considerable dimensions, supposed to be British or Danish.

ASHLEY, a parish in the northern division of the hundred of PIREHILL, county of STAFFORD, 7 miles (N. W.) from Eccleshall, containing 729 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Stafford, and diocese of Lichfield and Coventry, rated in the king's books at £10. 2. 8 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of T. Kinnersley, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. John the Baptist.

ASHLEY, a parish in the hundred of MALMESBURY, county of WILTS, 5 miles (N. by W.) from Malmesbury, containing 103 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Wilts, and diocese of Salisbury, rated in the king's books at £9. 16. 5 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of the King, as Duke of Lancaster. The church is dedicated to St. James.

ASHLEY-HAY, a township in that part of the parish of WIRKSWORTH which is in the hundred of APPLETREE, county of DERBY, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (S.) from Wirksworth, containing 223 inhabitants.

ASHMANHAUGH, a parish in the hundred of TUNSTEAD, county of NORFOLK, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. by N.) from Coltishall, containing 128 inhabitants. The living is a discharged perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Norfolk, and diocese of Norwich, endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £600 royal bounty, and in the patronage of J. Preston, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Swithin.

ASHMANSWORTH, a parish in the hundred of EVINGAR, Kingsclere division of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. N. W.) from Whitchurch, containing 196 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to the rectory of East Woodhay, in the peculiar jurisdiction of the Bishop of Winchester. The church is dedicated to St. James. This parish is within the jurisdiction of the Cheyney Court held at Winchester every Thursday, for the recovery of debts to any amount.

ASHMORE, a parish in that part of the hundred of CRANBORNE which is in the Shaston (West) division of the county of DORSET, 5 miles (S. E.) from Shaftesbury, containing 166 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Dorset, and diocese of Bristol, rated in the king's books at £7. 19. 9 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of the Rev. George Chisholme. The church is dedicated to St. Nicholas.

ASHOLT, county of SOUTHAMPTON. — See AIS-HOLT.

ASHORN, a township in the parish of NEWBOLD-PACEY, Warwick division of the hundred of KINGTON, county of WARWICK, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. N. W.) from Kington. The population is returned with the parish.

ASHOVER, a parish partly in the hundred of WIRKSWORTH, but chiefly in the hundred of SCARSDALE, county of DERBY, $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W. by W.) from Alfreton, containing, with the chapelry of Dethwick-Lea, and the hamlet of Holloway, 2998 inhabitants. This place, formerly a market town, occupies a pleasant site near the rivers Amber and Milntown; and, according to Domesday-book, had a church at the time of the Conquest. Coal, iron-stone, mill-stone, grit-stone, and lead-ore are found here, and the Gregory lead mine, three hundred yards deep, is said to have once been the richest in the kingdom, though its present produce is but inconsiderable. The manufacture of stockings is carried on to a small extent, and the working of tambour lace affords employment to the greater part of the female population. Fairs for cattle and sheep are held on the 25th of April and the 15th of October. Ashover is in the honour of Tutbury, duchy of Lancaster, and within the jurisdiction of a court held at Tutbury every third Tuesday, for the recovery of debts under 40s.: constables and other officers are appointed at the court leet of the lord of the manor. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Derby, and diocese of Lichfield and Coventry, rated in the king's books at £24. 3. $1\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of the Rev. J. Browne. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a large ancient edifice, built in 1419, with a very handsome spire, and contains a Norman font of curious design, and several monuments to the family of Babington. There are places of worship for Primitive and Wesleyan Methodists. The free school, erected in 1703, at Ashover Hill, is endowed with £23. 9. per annum, principally arising from a bequest of land by the Rev. Francis Gisborne, in 1819, for which about twenty poor children are instructed.

ASHOW, a parish in the Kenilworth division of the hundred of KNIGHTLOW, county of WARWICK, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. E. by E.) from Kenilworth, containing 178 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Coventry, and diocese of Lichfield and Coventry, rated in the king's books at £6. 2. 1., and in the patronage of Chandos Leigh, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Mary.

ASHPERTON, a parish in the hundred of RADLOW, county of HEREFORD, $5\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. W. by W.) from Ledbury, containing 398 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to the vicarage of Stretton-Grandsome, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Hereford. The church is dedicated to St. Bartholomew. Courts leet and baron are held here annually.

ASHPRINGTON, a parish in the hundred of COLERIDGE, county of DEVON, 3 miles (S. E.) from Totness, containing 619 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Totness, and diocese of Exeter, rated in the king's books at £29. 1. 8., and in the patronage of the Rev. G. Carwithen, and R. Newman, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. David. The navigable river Dart is joined by the Hareborn on the north-eastern border of the parish.

ASHREIGNEY, or RING'S ASH, a parish in the hundred of NORTH TAWTON with WINKLEY, county of DEVON, 4 miles (W. by S.) from Chulmleigh, containing 858 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Barnstaple, and diocese of Exeter, rated in the king's books at £24, and in the patronage of the Rev. J. T. Johnson. The church is dedicated to St. James. A school for the instruction of boys and girls has been endowed with £10 per annum by Mrs. Gertrude Pyncombe.

ASHTREAD, a parish in the second division of the hundred of CORTHORNE, county of SURREY, $2\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. W. by S.) from Epsom, containing 579 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Surrey, and diocese of Winchester, rated in the king's books at £13. 15. 5., and in the patronage of the Hon. Fulke Greville Howard. The church is dedicated to St. Giles. A mineral spring, the waters of which are similar to that of Epsom, rises in the parish. A charity school is endowed with £10 per annum; and a school for the children of the poor owes its origin and support to the Hon. Col. and Mrs. Howard. An hospital for six poor widows was founded by Lady Diana Fielding, and endowed with property producing £32. 7. 2. per annum.

ASHTON, a township in that part of the parish of TARVIN which is in the second division of the hundred of EDDISBURY, county palatine of CHESTER, $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. N. E.) from Chester, containing 414 inhabitants.

ASHTON, a parish in the hundred of EXMINSTER, county of DEVON, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. by W.) from Chudleigh, containing 258 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Exeter, rated in the king's books at £11. 10. $2\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of the Rev. Thomas Hole. The church contains a very finely carved wooden screen and rood-loft. The parish is bounded by the river Teign, the sudden inundations of which frequently occasion much damage. Here are several mines of manganese, worked by contractors from Cornwall, who pay to the lord of the manor a duty on the tonnage: large quantities of this mineral are supplied to the Manchester and other manufacturers, for bleaching their goods. Jane Shepherd, in 1734, gave 12s. per annum for teaching two poor children of this place; and John Stooke, in 1691, gave £4. 4. per annum to the poor in the almshouse.

ASHTON, a joint township with Eye-Moreton, in the parish of EYE, hundred of WOLPHY, county of HEREFORD, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. N. E.) from Leominster, containing, with Eye-Moreton, 278 inhabitants.

ASHTON, a joint township with Lea, Cottam, and Ingol, in the parish of PRESTON, hundred of AMOUDERNNESS, county palatine of LANCASTER, 2 miles (W. by N.) from Preston. The population is returned with Lea.

ASHTON, a joint township with Stodday, in that part of the parish of LANCASTER which is in the hundred of LONSDALE, south of the sands, county palatine of LANCASTER, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. S. E.) from Lancaster, containing, with Stodday, 242 inhabitants. Ashton Hall, the property of the Duke of Hamilton, is an oblong edifice, with a projecting wing to the east, and a square tower with angular turrets on the west; it was probably erected in the fourteenth century, but the numerous alterations and additions which it has undergone have left little of the ancient baronial mansion: the surrounding scenery is highly beautiful. A free school, under the management of trustees, has an income of nearly £50 per annum.

ASHTON, a parish in the hundred of CLELEY, county of NORTHAMPTON, 7 miles (S. by E.) from Northampton, containing 341 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Northampton, and diocese of Peterborough, rated in the king's books at £10, and in the patronage of the Crown. The church is dedicated to St. Michael. This parish has a communication with the North sea, by means of the Northampton canal and the river Nene.

ASHTON, a hamlet in the parish of UFFORD, liberty of PETERBOROUGH, county of NORTHAMPTON, 4½ miles (N. N. E.) from Ufford, containing 131 inhabitants.

ASHTON, a chapelry in the parish of OUNDLE, hundred of POLEBROOK, county of NORTHAMPTON, 1½ mile (E. by N.) from Oundle, containing 129 inhabitants.

ASHTON (COLD), a parish in the hundred of PUCKLE-CHURCH, county of GLOUCESTER, 10½ miles (E. by S.) from Bristol, containing 284 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Gloucester, rated in the king's books at £17. 1. 8., and in the patronage of the Rev. J. Whittington. The church is dedicated to the Holy Trinity. Here is a school for the instruction of poor children, endowed with £8 per annum.

ASHTON under HILL, a parish partly in the upper division of the hundred of TEWKESBURY, but chiefly in the hundred of TIBALDSTONE, county of GLOUCESTER, 8 miles (E. N. E.) from Tewkesbury, containing 301 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to the vicarage of Beckford, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Gloucester. The church is dedicated to St. Barbara.

ASHTON under LINE, a parish in the hundred of SALFORD, county palatine of LANCASTER, comprising the market town of Ashton under Line, and the townships of Audenshaw, Hartshead, and Knott-Lanes, and containing 25,967 inhabitants, of which number, 9222 are in the town of Ashton under Line, 60 miles (S. E.) from Lancaster, 7 (E.) from Manchester, and 187 (N. W.) from London, on the road to Sheffield. This place, in ancient records styled Ashtown sub Lima, derives its name from the tree so called, and the adjunct, by which it is distinguished from other places of the same name in the county, from its situation below the Lyme of Cheshire. Its original proprietors, the Asshetons, a family distinguished in the early periods of English history, exercised the power of life and death; and a field near the old hall, called Gallows' Meadow, was the place of execution. In the reign of Henry VI., a descendant of that family, still inheriting extraordinary privileges, clad in black armour and mounted on a charger, with a numerous retinue, levied a penalty on his tenants, for neglecting to clear their lands from a pernicious weed, then called Car gualds, on the discovery of which among his corn, every farmer was liable to forfeit a wether sheep. In commemoration of this, the ceremony of "riding the black lad" still takes place on Easter-Monday, when the effigy of a man in black armour is placed on horseback, and led in procession through the town; it is then dismounted and hung up at the cross in the old market-place, and, after having been shot at, is immersed in a stagnant pool by the populace, who return through the principal streets throwing it at those they meet. The town is situated on an eminence rising from the northern bank of the river Tame; the old streets are narrow and irregular, but those recently formed are spacious, and contain substantial and handsome houses. It is well paved, and is lighted with gas and supplied with water by a company incorporated by act of parliament in 1825, and is rapidly improving under the management of local commissioners, appointed under an act obtained in 1827. The principal branches of manufacture are those of calico, gingham, and muslin, and there are numerous mills for spinning the finer kinds of yarn: the various factories, which are principally worked by steam, contain four hundred and thirteen thousand one hundred and sixteen spindles, and three hundred and ninety power-looms. The manufacture of hats is also carried on extensively in this district. The neighbourhood abounds with excellent coal, which is conveyed to all parts of the kingdom by the Ashton, Huddersfield, and Peak Forest canals, which unite here. The market, which, previously to the establishment of the cotton trade, had fallen into disuse, was restored by act of parliament in 1828, under which act a convenient market-place is now being erected, but the market day has not yet been fixed. Fairs are held on March 23rd, April 29th, and on the eve, day, and morrow of St. Swithin and St. Martin, chiefly for horses and cattle. The town was formerly incorporated, but is now within the jurisdiction of the county magistrates, who sit every Monday and Wednesday, and hold a petty session, every alternate week, for the Middleton division of the hundred. The powers of the local commissioners were extended by the act obtained in 1828, whereby the internal regulation of the town is entrusted to their superintendence. The lord of the manor holds a court leet half-yearly, in April and October, for the recovery of debts under 40s.; and a court of requests for the recovery of debts under £5 is held on the Thursday in every third week, under an act passed in the 48th of Geo. III., having jurisdiction over the parish of Ashton under Line, and the townships of Stalybridge, Hattersley, Matley, Newton, and Duckinfield. The courthouse, for the transaction of the public business, is a handsome and commodious range of building, over which are the theatre and concert-room.

The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Chester, rated in the king's books at £26. 13. 4., and in the patronage of the Earl of Stamford. The parochial church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a spacious structure in the later style of English architecture, with a tower built in the reign of Henry V., but much altered by subsequent repairs: it sustained considerable injury from an accidental fire in 1821. St. Peter's, a handsome edifice in the same style, with a square embattled tower crowned with pinnacles, was erected in 1821, at the expense of £12,688. 13. 6., defrayed by the parliamentary commissioners. There are places of worship for Independents, and Primitive and Wesleyan Methodists. The National school, built partly at the expense of the Earl of Stamford and Warrington, and partly by the contributions of the inhabitants, is supported by subscription. The Roman road from Manchester to Saddleworth may still be traced in the vicnity: near the old hall are the remains of an ancient prison, and in the old market-place those of a cross.

ASHTON (LONG), a parish in the hundred of HARTCLIFFE with BEDMINSTER, county of SOMERSET, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. W. by W.) from Bristol, containing 1168 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Bath, and diocese of Bath and Wells, rated in the king's books at £10. 17. 11., and in the patronage of Sir J. Smyth, Bart. The church is dedicated to All Saints. There were formerly a chapel and hermitage at Rowan Ferry, in this parish. In 1661, Francis Derrick gave a piece of land producing about £8 per annum, which, exclusively of 10s. to the minister, and 10s. to the poor, is appropriated towards the support of a school. Anne Smyth, in 1760, left a rent-charge of £10, which has been applied to the support of a National school, to which, in 1822, John Stanton gave £100. On the eastern point of Ashton hill are two intrenchments, called Burwalls and Stokeleigh, now overgrown with wood, which appear to have been Roman camps; many Roman coins have been dug up in the vicinity.

ASHTON in MACKERFIELD, a chapelry in the parish of WINWICK, hundred of WEST DERBY, county palatine of LANCASTER, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W. by N.) from Newton in Mackerfield, containing 5674 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Chester, endowed with £200 royal bounty, and £1600 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Rector of Winwick. There are places of worship for the Society of Friends, Wesleyan Methodists, and Roman Catholics. Ashton is a large village lying in the centre of a district in which are numerous potteries and cotton-manufactories.

ASHTON upon MERSEY, a parish in the hundred of BUCKLOW, county palatine of CHESTER, comprising the townships of Ashton upon Mersey and Sale, and containing 1924 inhabitants, of which number, 875 are in the township of Ashton upon Mersey, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N.) from Altrincham. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Chester, rated in the king's books at £13. 4. 7., and in the patronage of W. Johnson, Esq. and another. The church is dedicated to St. Martin. There are places of worship for Calvinists, Methodists, and Unitarians. The navigable river Mersey runs through the parish. A school is endowed with land and tenements producing about £50 per annum; in addition to which, William Williamson, Esq. left an annuity of £70 for the instruction of children.

ASHTON (STEEPLE), a parish (formerly a market town) in the hundred of WHORWELSDOWN, county of WILTS, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. by S.) from Trowbridge, containing, with the chapelries of Littleton and Semington, and the tythings of West Ashton and Great Hinton, 1632 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Salisbury, rated in the king's books at £17. 2. 6., and in the patronage of the Master and Fellows of Magdalene College, Cambridge. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a very lofty and elegant structure in the later English style, with extensive north and south porches, two small chapels, and, at the west end, a large and handsome embattled and pinnacled tower, having also a fine western window with five richly ornamented niches over it: ten clustered columns separate the aisles from the nave, and the whole interior is rich in architectural decorations: the north aisle was erected at the expense of Robert Long, a clothier, and Edith his wife, and the south chiefly at that of the parishioners. This place derives the prefix to its name from a very elevated spire, ninety-three feet high, which originally surmounted the tower of the church, but it was seriously damaged by lightning in July 1670, and again in October following, when the spire and a portion of the tower were struck down, two workmen employed in its reparation killed, and a great part of the nave and aisles damaged; the body of the church was repaired in 1675, partly from voluntary subscriptions, and partly at the expense of the parishioners. A market was granted to be held here in the reign of Edward III., and was confirmed in that of Richard II., who also added an annual fair. In the time of Henry VIII. there was a considerable clothing trade, which no longer exists; the market has been long discontinued, and the fair, now inconsiderable, is on September 18th. John Hicks gave a piece of land, producing £5 per annum, for the education of poor children.

ASHTON-GIFFORD, a township in the parish of CODFORD St. PETER, hundred of HEYTESBURY, county of WILTS, 3 miles (S. E. by E.) from Heytesbury. The population is returned with the parish.

ASHTON-KEYNES, a parish in the hundred of HIGHWORTH, CRICKLADE, and STAPLE, county of WILTS, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W.) from Cricklade, containing, with the chapelry of Leigh, 1151 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Wilts, and diocese of Salisbury, rated in the king's books at £16, and in the patronage of Robert Clack and others. The church is dedicated to the Holy Cross.

ASHURST, a parish in the hundred of WASHLINGSTONE, lathe of AYLESFORD, county of KENT, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W.) from Tonbridge-Wells, containing 208 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Rochester, rated in the king's books at £5. 4. 7., endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £900 royal bounty, and in the patronage of Earl De la Warr. The church, a low mean building, was, before the Reformation, famous for a rood or crucifix, the supposed miraculous powers of which attracted numerous pilgrims. The river Medway, which is here but an inconsiderable stream, bounds the parish on the north-west.

ASHURST, a parish in the hundred of WEST GRINSTEAD, rape of BRAMBER, county of SUSSEX, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N.) from Steyning, containing 394 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Chichester, and in the patronage of the President and Fellows of Magdalene College, Oxford. The navigable river Adur runs through this parish.

ASHWATER, a parish in the hundred of BLACK TORRINGTON, county of DEVON, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. E. by S.) from Holsworthy, containing 774 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Totness, and diocese of Exeter, rated in the king's books at £26. 6. 8., and in the patronage of the Rev. T. Melhuish. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, contains some interesting monuments. Fairs for cattle are held on the first Tuesday in May, and the first Monday after the 1st of August. Freestone of excellent quality is obtained in the vicinity.

ASHWELL, a parish in the hundred of ONSVY, county of HERTFORD, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. N. E.) from Baldock, containing 915 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Huntingdon, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £22. 3. 6 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of the Bishop of London. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a spacious edifice, with a tower and spire one hundred and seventy-five feet high. Ashwell is a place of great antiquity, and was a market town and borough at the time of the Norman survey, having also four fairs, and being held in royal demesne. Its name is derived from several springs, issuing out of a rock at the south end of the town, which were formerly surrounded by ash trees: they form the source of the small river Rhee, which soon becomes so full and rapid, as to turn several mills within a short distance. On Harborough hill, in this parish, are the remains of a quadrangular encampment of the Romans, whence the approach of an enemy, in any direction, and at a great distance, could be observed. Urns, coins, and skeletons, have been dug up, as well as near the Ikniel-road, in the vicinity. The free school, in which fourteen boys are instructed, has an endowment from the estate of Sir Richard Hutchinson, paid to the master by the Merchant Taylors' Company of London. There are also six endowed almshouses for as many poor persons, and a fund for apprenticing poor children. A small manor here was held by Walter Somoner, in petit serjeantry, by the service of providing spits and roasting meat in the king's kitchen, on the day of his coronation. The only trade carried on is in malt, the barley produced in the neighbourhood being of a peculiarly excellent quality. The Rev. Ralph Cudworth, D. D., master of Christ's College, Cambridge, and author of "The Intellectual System," was vicar of this parish, and died here in 1688.

ASHWELL, a parish in the hundred of ALSTOE, county of RUTLAND, 3 miles (N. by W.) from Oakham, containing 220 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Northampton, and diocese of Peterborough, rated in the king's books at £20. 16. 3., and in the patronage of Viscount Downe. The church is dedicated to St. Mary.

ASHWELLTHORPE, a parish in the hundred of DEFWADE, county of NORFOLK, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. E. by S.) from Wymondham, containing 418 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, with that of Wrenningham annexed, in the archdeaconry of Norfolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £6. 13. 4., and in the patronage of Robert Wilson, Esq. The church is dedicated to All Saints.

ASHWICK, a parish in the hundred of KILMERSDON, county of SOMERSET, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. by E.) from Shepton-Mallet, containing 829 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to the vicarage of Kilmersdon, in the archdeaconry of Wells, and diocese of Bath and Wells. The church is dedicated to St. James. There are places of worship for Methodists and Presbyterians. Here is a considerable brewery, and in the neighbourhood are many coal mines. On the south-western side of the parish, near the Fosse-way, there is a Roman camp, with a double intrenchment, called Masbury Castle.

ASHWICKEN, a parish in the Lynn division of the hundred of FREZBRIDGE, county of NORFOLK, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles

(E. by S.) from Lynn-Regis, containing 79 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, with that of Leziat annexed, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £6. 13. 4., and in the patronage of Earl Spencer. The church is dedicated to All Saints.

ASHWORTH, a chapelry in the parish of MIDDLETON, hundred of SALFORD, county palatine of LANCASTER, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W.) from Rochdale, containing 280 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Chester, endowed with £800 private benefaction, £1000 royal bounty, and £300 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of W. Egerton, Esq. The chapel is dedicated to St. James.

ASKE, a township in that part of the parish of EASBY which is in the western division of the wapentake of GILLING, North riding of the county of YORK, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (N.) from Richmond, containing 109 inhabitants.

ASKERNE, a township in the parish of CAMPBALL, upper division of the wapentake of OSGOLDCROSS, West riding of the county of YORK, $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N.) from Doncaster, containing 159 inhabitants. Here is a sheet of water, called Askerne Pool, a few yards from which rises a spring with a sulphureous impregnation, the water of which is esteemed beneficial in rheumatic and scorbutic diseases, and is now extensively used; a spacious inn has lately been erected for the accommodation of visitors.

ASKERSWELL, a parish in the hundred of EGGERTON, Bridport division of the county of DORSET, 4 miles (E.) from Bridport, containing 190 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Dorset, and diocese of Bristol, rated in the king's books at £9. 2. 6., and in the patronage of the Rev. Edward Foyle. The church is dedicated to St. Michael.

ASKERTON, a township in the parish of LANERCOST-ABBEY, ESKDALE ward, county of CUMBERLAND, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. N. E.) from Brampton, containing 503 inhabitants. The castle, situated on the eastern bank of the Cambeck, was a small tower building with lofty turrets, but it has long been in ruins. Askerton comprises the ancient parish of Kirk-Cambeck, the church of which was destroyed by the Scots in the reign of Edward II., and the tithes are held on lease from the Dean and Chapter of Carlisle: the inhabitants repair to the church of Lanercost for the performance of ecclesiastical rites.

ASKHAM, a chapelry in the parish of EAST DRAYTON, within the liberty of SOUTHWELL and SCROOBY, which is locally in the South-clay division of the wapentake of Bassetlaw, county of NOTTINGHAM, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N.) from Tuxford, containing 270 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the peculiar jurisdiction of the Dean and Chapter of York, and in the patronage of the Vicar of East Drayton. Hops are cultivated here. There are almshouses for six widows.

ASKHAM, a parish in WEST ward, county of WEST-MORLAND, comprising the townships of Askham and Helton, and containing 517 inhabitants, of which number, 355 are in the township of Askham, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S.) from Penrith. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Carlisle, rated in the king's books at £6, and in the patronage of the Earl of Lonsdale. The church is a small ancient building, dedicated to St. Peter. Limestone abounds in the parish. A school was endowed, in 1813, with subscriptions

nity: near the old hall are the remains of an ancient prison, and in the old market-place those of a cross.

ASHTON (LONG), a parish in the hundred of HARTCLIFFE with BEDMINSTER, county of SOMERSET, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. W. by W.) from Bristol, containing 1168 inhabitants. The church is a small ancient building, dedicated to St. Peter. Limestone abounds in the parish. A school was endowed, in 1813, with subscriptions amounting to £420, a great part of which has been vested in the purchase of land.

ASKHAM-BRYAN, a parish in the ainsty of the city, and East riding of the county, of YORK, 4 miles (W. S. W.) from York, containing 377 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, within the peculiar jurisdiction of the lord of the manor, endowed with £800 private benefaction, and £800 royal bounty, and in the patronage of R. J. Thompson, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Nicholas. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. A small endowment has been given for the education of poor children.

ASKHAM-RICHARD, a parish in the ainsty of the city, and East riding of the county, of YORK, 5½ miles (S. W. by W.) from York, containing 249 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of York, rated in the king's books at £4. 13. 4., endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of R. J. Thompson, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists.

ASKRIGG, a market town and chapelry in the parish of AYSGARTH, western division of the wapentake of HANG, North riding of the county of YORK, 57 miles (W. N. W.) from York, and 247 (N. W. by N.) from London, containing 765 inhabitants. The town is situated on an eminence rising from the northern bank of the river Ure, and the surrounding country exhibits some fine waterfalls and picturesque scenery: it was formerly a place of considerable note, but has fallen into decay; there are a flax and a wool-carding mill. In the neighbourhood are lead mines, but they are not very productive. The market is on Thursday; and fairs are held on May 11th, the first Thursday in June, and October 28th. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Richmond, and diocese of Chester, endowed with £200 private benefaction, £400 royal bounty, and £1000 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Vicar of Aysgarth. The chapel is an ancient structure, dedicated to St. Oswald. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. Almshouses were founded and endowed, in 1807, by Christopher Alderson, for six poor widows of the townships of Askrigg and Low Abbotside, each of whom has a stipend of £10 per annum. In this township is the free grammar school of Yore-bridge, founded by Anthony Besson, in the 43rd of Elizabeth, with an endowment of £64. 10. per annum.

ASKWITH, a township in the parish of WESTON, upper division of the wapentake of CLARO, West riding of the county of YORK, 3 miles (N. W.) from Otley, containing 367 inhabitants.

ASLACKBY, a parish in the wapentake of AVELAND, parts of KESTREVEN, county of LINCOLN, 2½ miles (S. S. E.) from Folkingham, containing, with the hamlets of Graby and Milthorpe, 425 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £12. 10. 7½., and in the patronage of M. Barstow, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. James. Here was a preceptory of Knights Templars, which, on the abolition of their order, became a commandery of the Hospitallers: a square tower belonging to the edifice yet remains.

ASLACTON, a parish in the hundred of DEFWADE, county of NORFOLK, 3½ miles (W. by S.) from St. Mary Stratton, containing 352 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Norfolk, and diocese of Norwich, endowed with £800 royal bounty, and in the patronage of Mrs. Bodham. The church is dedicated to St. Michael.

ASLACTON, a township in the parish of WHATTON, northern division of the wapentake of BINGHAM, county of NOTTINGHAM, 2½ miles (E. by N.) from Bingham, containing 273 inhabitants. It is in the honour of Tutbury, duchy of Lancaster, and within the jurisdiction of a court of pleas held at Tutbury every third Tuesday, for the recovery of debts under 40s. This was the birthplace of Cranmer, the first Protestant Archbishop of Canterbury, who was burnt at Oxford in 1555, a martyr to his religious tenets.

ASPALL, a parish in the hundred of HARTISMERE, county of SUFFOLK, 1½ mile (N. by W.) from Debenham, containing 109 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Sudbury, and diocese of Norwich, and in the patronage of the Rev. C. Chevallier. Here is a free school, endowed with land bequeathed by the Rev. John Metcalf, in 1612, from the produce of which £50 per annum is paid to the master, and £10 to the usher.

ASPATRIA, a parish in ALLERDALE ward below Derwent, county of CUMBERLAND, comprising the townships of Aspatria with Brayton, Hayton with Melay, and Outerside with Allerby, and containing 1920 inhabitants, of which number, 632 are in the township of Aspatria with Brayton, 8 miles (N. by E.) from Cockermouth. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Carlisle, rated in the king's books at £10. 4. 2., and in the patronage of the Bishop of Carlisle. The church, dedicated to St. Kentigern, is a finely ornamented structure, in the Norman style of architecture. A place of worship for Independents was built in 1827. Aspatria derived its name from Gospatrick, father of the first lord of Allerdale: the parish is bounded on the west by the Solway Firth, and on the south-east and south by the river Ellen, and contains a vein of red freestone at Hayton, and coal at Outerside: the village, which is long, straggling, and well built, extends along the ridge of a hill facing the south. In 1790, a barrow was opened about two hundred yards to the north of it, when the skeleton of a man, with the corroded remains of some military weapons, gold ornaments, &c., were discovered in a vault constructed of large stones, on two of which various emblematical figures were sculptured: it is supposed to have been the tomb of a warrior, interred about the close of the sixth century.

ASPEDEN, a parish in the hundred of EDWINS-TREE, county of HERTFORD, ¾ of a mile (S.) from Buntingford, containing 455 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Huntingdon, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £15. 5. 2½., and in the patronage of the Earl of Hardwicke. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. The river Rib, which falls into the Lea near Hertford, flows through this parish. W. and R. Freeman, in 1668, and Mrs. Cater, in 1704, gave land for the education of children; and R. Freeman assigned an additional plot of land for clothing them. In 1684, Dr. Seth Ward, Bishop of Sarum, founded an almshouse for two men and two women, and endowed it with £41. 12. per annum.

ASPLEY, a township in the parish of ECCLES-HALL, northern division of the hundred of PIREHILL, county of STAFFORD, containing 24 inhabitants.

ASPLEY, a joint hamlet with Fordhall, in the parish of WOOTTON-WAWEN, Henley division of the hundred of BARLICHWAY, county of WARWICK, containing, with Fordhall, 106 inhabitants.

ASPLEY-GUISE, a parish in the hundred of MANSHEAD, county of BEDFORD, $2\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. by W.) from Woburn, containing 848 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, consolidated, in 1796, with the vicarage of Hushorn-Crawley, in the archdeaconry of Bedford, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £15. 16. 10 $\frac{1}{2}$. The church, dedicated to St. Botolph, contains several ancient and interesting monuments. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. A market on Friday, and a fair on the festival of St. Botolph, were granted to be held here in 1267; but they have been long discontinued. A small portion of this parish lies in the county of Buckingham.

ASPULL, a township in that part of the parish of WIGAN which is in the hundred of SALFORD, county palatine of LANCASTER, 3 miles (N.E. by E.) from Wigan, containing 1894 inhabitants. A chapel has been lately erected by the parliamentary commissioners. Cannel coal abounds in the township. Here is a small endowment for the education of poor children.

ASSELBY, a township in the parish of HOWDEN, wapentake of HOWDENSHERE, East riding of the county of YORK, 2 miles (W. by S.) from Howden, containing 254 inhabitants. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists.

ASENDON, a hamlet in the parish and hundred of PIRTON, county of OXFORD, 4 miles (N. N. W.) from Henley upon Thames. The population is returned with the parish. Here is an almshouse, endowed with £5 per annum.

ASSINGTON, a parish in the hundred of BARBERGH, county of SUFFOLK, $2\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. W. by W.) from Boxford, containing 533 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Sudbury, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £10, endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Rev. John Hallward. The church is dedicated to St. Edmund. In 1777, John Gurdon bequeathed £100 for the instruction of poor children.

ASTBURY, a parish comprising the township of Somerford-Booths, in the hundred of MACCLESFIELD, the market town of Congleton, and the townships of Astbury-Newbold, Buglawton, Davenport, Hulme-Walfield, Moreton with Alcumlow, Oddrode, Radnor, Smallwood, and Summerford, in the hundred of NORTHWICH, county palatine of CHESTER, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (S. W.) from Congleton, and containing 10,388 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Chester, rated in the king's books at £68, and in the patronage of Lord Crewe. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a spacious and beautiful structure, in the later style of English architecture: the interior contains several stalls, a rood-loft, and some fine screen-work; the ceilings, which are of oak, are richly carved; the east window is highly finished, and there are some fine specimens of stained glass. The nave is separated from the aisles by lofty pointed arches springing from clustered columns. The tower, which stands at the north-west angle of the church, and is surmounted by an elegant spire, appears to have belonged to a former edifice. In the township of Oddrode, a church, or chapel of ease, has been erected by Mr. Dobbs, of Clapham in Surrey, which for a time was shut up, on account of some dispute respecting the patronage; but the service of the established church is now performed in it, the minister being appointed by the founder. The office of churchwarden devolves on the proprietors of six of the principal halls, and on the mayor of Congleton, who are styled Præpositi, here termed Posts, and who in rotation nominate a deputy. A railway passes through the parish from Mole-Cop to a coal wharf near Congleton; and the Macclesfield canal proceeds at a short distance east of the village. The sum of £50 per annum, the bequest of John Halford, in 1714, is partly distributed among the poor, and partly applied in apprenticing poor children.

ASTBURY (NEWBOLD), a township in that part of the parish of ASTBURY which is in the hundred of NORTHWICH, county palatine of CHESTER, 3 miles (S. by E.) from Congleton, containing 569 inhabitants.

ASTERBY, a parish in the northern division of the wapentake of GARTREE, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, 7 miles (N.) from Horncastle, containing 189 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £8. 0. 10., endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of Lady Southwell. The church is dedicated to St. Peter. Here is a small endowment for the instruction of poor children, the bequest of Anthony Ascham, in 1638.

ASTHALL a parish in the hundred of BAMPTON, county of OXFORD, 3 miles (E. by S.) from Burford, containing, with the hamlet of Asthall-Leigh, 365 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford, rated in the king's books at £7. 9. 4 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of the Provost and Fellows of Eton College. The church is dedicated to St. Nicholas. In this parish is a barrow of considerable height, supposed to be a sepulchral monument, near which the Roman Akeman-street passes. Sir George Fettiplace bequeathed £6 per annum for the instruction of six girls, with a house for the mistress; he also left £5 per annum for apprenticing poor boys.

ASTLEY, a chapelry in the parish of LEIGH, hundred of WEST DERBY, county palatine of LANCASTER, 3 miles (E.) from Leigh, containing 1882 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Chester, endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £400 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Vicar of Leigh. The chapel, dedicated to St. Stephen, was founded by Adam Mort, gent., in the early part of the seventeenth century, and endowed by him with property of the value of £18 per annum. In 1760, the old edifice was taken down, and a new one erected upon a more enlarged plan, by the landowners of the chapelry, the income at that time having been considerably augmented. For a long period the right of appointing the minister was a subject of dispute, and various contests took place at the time of elections; but the matter was ultimately determined by the judges of the court of King's Bench, in 1824, in favour of the present patron. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. The manufacture of fustian is extensively carried on in the chapelry. A school is endowed with £25. 14. 8. per annum, for the education of poor children; and, in 1630, Adam Mort bequeathed land, producing about £24 per annum, for the instruction of poor children here, and in the townships of Great Bolton, Little Hulton, Bedford, and Tyldesley.

ASTLEY, a chapelry in that part of the parish of ST. MARY which is within the liberties of SHREWSBURY, county of SALOP, 5 miles (N. N. E.) from Shrewsbury, containing 204 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, within the jurisdiction of the court of the royal peculiar of St. Mary in Shrewsbury, and in the patronage of the Perpetual Curate of that parish.

ASTLEY, a parish in the Kirby division of the hundred of KNIGHTLOW, county of WARWICK, 4½ miles (W. S. W.) from Nuneaton, containing 293 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Coventry, and diocese of Lichfield and Coventry, endowed with £16 per annum and £400 private benefaction, and £600 royal bounty, and in the patronage of F. Newdigate, Esq. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, was made collegiate and rebuilt in the form of a cross, with a lofty spire, in the reign of Edward III., by Lord Thomas de Astley, many of whose family were interred here; the ancient choir, now forming the body of the church, is the only portion of the building remaining: the revenue of the college, at its dissolution, was £46. 8. A short distance to the north is an old mansion, erected in the sixteenth century, on the site of a more ancient baronial castle, some portion of the massive walls of which still exist.

ASTLEY, a parish in the lower division of the hundred of DODDINGTREE, county of WORCESTER, 3 miles (S. W. by S.) from Stourport, containing 784 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Worcester, rated in the king's books at £15. 13. 4., and in the patronage of the Rev. D. J. J. Cooks. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is of Norman architecture. An Alien priory of Benedictine monks, founded here by Ralph de Toden, in the reign of William I., was annexed to the college of Westbury in that of Edward IV. Here is a school, endowed with about £20 per annum. At Redstone ferry, in the vicinity, is an ancient hermitage, excavated in a lofty cliff by the side of the river.

E.) from Hinckley, containing, with the chapelry of Burbage, and the hamlet of Sketchley, 1584 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Leicester, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £33. 12. 8 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of the Countess de Grey. The church is dedicated to St. Peter. The Roman Watling-street passes near the border of the parish.

ASTON-GRANGE, a township in the parish of RUNCORN, hundred of BUCKLOW, county palatine of CHESTER, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles (E.) from Frodsham, containing 36 inhabitants. Here is an ancient chapel, which was rebuilt on an enlarged plan, in 1737.

ASTON-INGHAM, a parish in the hundred of GREYTREE, county of HEREFORD, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E.) from Ross, containing 551 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Hereford, rated in the king's books at £7. 7. 1., and in the patronage of the Trustees of the late Francis Lawson, Esq. Courts leet and baron are occasionally held. Here is a school, endowed with about £10 per annum. Limestone is obtained in the parish.

ASTON-MOLLINS, a hamlet in that part of the parish of DINTON which is in the hundred of ASHENDON, county of BUCKINGHAM, containing 9 inhabitants.

ASTON-ROWANT, a parish in the hundred of LEWKNOB, county of OXFORD, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. E.) from Tetsworth, containing, with the liberties of Chalford and Kingston-Blount, 870 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, with the perpetual curacy of Stokenchurch annexed, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford, rated in the king's books at £16. 18. 11., and in the patronage of the Crown. The church is dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul. Near the close of the seventeenth century, a large Roman vessel, containing five smaller ones, was discovered in Kingston field, within this parish, at the distance of about a furlong from the Ikniel-street.

ASTON-SANDFORD, a parish in the hundred of ASHENDON, county of BUCKINGHAM, 4 miles (E. N. E.) from Thame, containing 84 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Buckingham, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £12. 16. 0 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of Mrs. Susannah Barber. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is in the later style of English architecture. The remains of the Rev. Thomas Scott, M. A., a learned and zealous commentator on the Holy Scriptures, were interred in the chancel.

ASTON-SOMERVILLE, a parish in the lower division of the hundred of KIRTSGATE, county of GLOUCESTER, $7\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. by E.) from Winchcombe, containing 110 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Gloucester, rated in the king's books at £9. 3. 4., and in the patronage of Lord Somerville. This parish, with others, is within the jurisdiction of a court leet and baron held occasionally at Winchcombe. The late Lord Somerville, who first introduced the breed of Merino sheep into this country, and author of several tracts and essays on Agriculture and Rural Economy, was born here, in 1765.

ASTON-TIRROLD, a parish in the hundred of MORETON, county of BERKS, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. W. by W.) from Wallingford, containing 355 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Berks, and diocese of Salisbury, rated in the king's books at £10. 12. 11., and in the patronage of the President and Fellows of Magdalene College, Oxford. The church is dedicated to St. Michael. Bishop Gibson supposed this to be the place called in the Saxon Chronicle Aescedune, where Ethelred I. and his brother Alfred defeated the Danes, in 871; but Gough, with greater probability, considers this battle to have been fought at Ashdown Park, near East Ilsley. There is a small endowment for the instruction of poor children.

ASTON-UPTHORP, a chapelry in that part of the parish of BLEWBERRY which is in the hundred of MORETON, county of BERKS, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles (W. S. W.) from Wallingford, containing 154 inhabitants. The chapel is said to be one of the most ancient in England.

ASTROP, a hamlet in the parish and hundred of KING'S SUTTON, county of NORTHAMPTON, $5\frac{1}{4}$ miles (W.) from Brackley. The population is returned with the parish. Here is a mineral spring, called St. Rumbald's Well, which, in the latter part of the seventeenth century, was much frequented.

ASTWELL, a hamlet partly in the parish of SYRESHAM, but chiefly in the parish of WAPPENHAM, hundred of KING'S SUTTON, county of NORTHAMPTON, $5\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. N. E.) from Brackley, containing 118 inhabitants.

ASTWICK, a parish in the hundred of BIGGLESWADE, county of BEDFORD, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. W. by N.) from Baldock, containing 99 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, united, in 1764, to the vicarage of Arlsey, in the archdeaconry of Bedford, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £6. 13. 4. The church is dedicated to St. Guthlake.

ASTWOOD, a parish in the hundred of NEWPORT, county of BUCKINGHAM, $5\frac{1}{4}$ miles (E. N. E.) from Newport-Pagnell, containing 263 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Buckingham, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £6. 6. 8., and in the patronage of the Crown. The church is dedicated to St. Peter.

ASWARBY, a parish in the wapentake of ASWARDHURN, parts of KESTIVEN, county of LINCOLN, 4 miles (N. by W.) from Folkingham, containing 116 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £12. 4. 7., and in the patronage of Sir T. Whichcote, Bart. The church is dedicated to St. Denis.

ASWARDBY, a parish in the hundred of HILL, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, 4 miles (N. W. by N.) from Spilsby, containing 80 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £7. 19. $4\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of R. C. Breakenbury, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Helen. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists.

ATCHAM, a parish in the Wellington division of the hundred of BRADFORD (South), county of SALOP, 4 miles (S. E. by E.) from Shrewsbury, containing 489 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Salop, and diocese of Lichfield and Coventry, rated in the king's books at £11. 6. 8., and in the patronage of R. Burton, Esq. The Roman Watling-street passes through this parish, and crosses the Severn.

ATHELHAMPTON, county of DORSET.—See ADMISTON.

ATHELINGTON, a parish in the hundred of Hoxne, county of SUFFOLK, 5 miles (S. E. by E.) from Eye, containing 100 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Suffolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £4. 14. 2., endowed with £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Crown. The church is dedicated to St. Peter.

ATHERINGTON, a parish in the hundred of NORTH TAWTON with WINKLEY, county of DEVON, 7 miles (N. E. by E.) from Great Torrington, containing 535 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Barnstaple, and diocese of Exeter, rated in the king's books at £26. 2. 1., and in the patronage of Francis Bassett, Esq. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, contains a richly ornamented screen and rood loft crossing the north aisle; also the monument of a crusader, and an altar-tomb, with the figures of a knight and his two ladies on brass plates. A chapel was erected here, in the reign of Henry III., by the nuns belonging to the convent of Caen in Normandy, founded and endowed by Matilda, wife of William the Conqueror, with lands in this parish, where they had a cell.

ATHERINGTON, or ALDRINGTON, formerly a parish in the hundred of FISHERGATE, rape of LEWES, county of SUSSEX, $2\frac{1}{4}$ miles (W. by N.) from Brighton. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Lewes, and diocese of Chichester, rated in the king's books at £7. 10. $2\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of the Master and Fellows of Magdalene College, Cambridge. The church has been destroyed, and the village depopulated, by the encroachments of the sea.

ATHERSTONE, a market town and chapelry in the parish of MANCETTER, Atherstone division of the hundred of HEMLINGFORD, county of WARWICK, 20 miles (N. by E.) from Warwick, and 105 (N. W. by N.) from London, on the road to Chester, containing 3434 inhabitants. The name of this place, in Domesday-book written Aderestone, is by Dugdale derived from Edred, or Aldred, who possessed it in the time of the Saxons, and thence called Edredstone, or Aldredstone; by others its name is deduced from its situation near Mancetter, or Mancetter, the Manduesedum of the Romans, reckoning from which station, here was the first, or nearest, milliarium on the line of the Roman Watling-street, and thence called Hither-stone, or Atherstone. In 1485, the Earl of Richmond, previously to the battle of Bosworth Field, entered this town on the 20th of August, encamped his forces in a meadow, north of the church, still called the Royal meadow, and took up his own quarters at an ancient inn, now the Three Tuns, where he passed the night: here he had an interview with the Stanleys, and concerted those measures which secured him the victory in the celebrated battle that took place on the 22nd, and terminated the war between the houses of York and Lancaster. In 1376, Ralph, Lord Bassett, of Drayton, founded a convent of Augustine friars, the church of which is now the parochial chapel; part of it is appropriated to the use of the free grammar school, and part to an endowed charity school. The town consists of one principal street, containing many ancient and several very respectable modern houses, from which another, branching off, leads to the market place. It is paved, well lighted, and amply supplied with water: there is a subscription library and news-room; and assemblies are held occasionally in the town hall, a neat brick building on piazzas. The manufacture of hats is carried on to a considerable extent, and that of ribands upon a smaller scale. The Coventry and Fazely canal passes on the north-western extremity of the town, where extensive coal and lime wharfs have been constructed. The market is on Tuesday: fairs are held on April 7th and July 18th, for cattle; September 19th, 20th, and 21st, for cattle, cheese, and pedlary, on the Tuesday after which is a statute fair; and on December 4th is a great show fair for cattle, &c. The county magistrates hold a petty ses-mon weekly, the hundred court is held here alternately with other towns; and a court leet annually, at which constables and other officers are appointed.

The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Coventry, and diocese of Lichfield and Coventry, and in the patronage of the Vicar of Mancetter. The chapel, dedicated to St. Mary, and originally belonging to the Augustine priory, is a cruciform structure, in the early and decorated styles of English architecture, with an octagonal tower rising from the centre, but its original character has been impaired by additions. There are places of worship for Wesleyan Methodists and Unitarians. The free grammar school, founded by Sir William Devereux, of Merevale, and others, and endowed with estates now producing £600 per annum, is under the management of trustees, who appoint the master; there is at present only one scholar on the foundation. Here is also an endowed charity school, in which thirty boys are instructed in reading, writing, and arithmetic. The infant school, a handsome modern building near the church, is well supported; and there is another upon a smaller scale. The self-supporting dispensary, upon the plan of Mr. Smith, of Soatham, established in 1825, affords relief to a considerable number of patients. Drayton, the poet, and one of the earliest topographical writers, whose works were published by the learned Selden, was born here.

ATHERSTONE upon STOUR, a parish in the Kington division of the hundred of KINGTON, county of WARWICK, 3 miles (S.) from Stratford upon Avon, containing 94 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Worcester, rated in the king's books at £13. 1. 8., and in the patronage of the Rev. Dr. Cox.

ATHERTON, a chapelry in the parish of LEIGH, hundred of WEST DERBY, county palatine of LANCASTER, 1½ mile (N. E.) from Leigh, containing 4145 inhabitants. The living is a donative, in the gift of Lord Lilford. The chapel, which is domestic, is dedicated to St. John the Baptist: it formerly belonged to the dissenters, but was consecrated for the service of the church of England by Dr. Wilson, the pious Bishop of Sodor and Man. Atherton Hall, a superb edifice built by the family of that name, in the early part of the eighteenth century, at an expense of about £63,000, was taken down in 1825, and the materials sold. This chapelry contains the populous manufacturing village of Chowbent, which see.

ATLOW, a chapelry in that part of the parish of BRADBORNE which is in the hundred of APPLETREE, county of DERBY, 5 miles (E. N. E.) from Ashbourn, containing 197 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Derby, and diocese of Lichfield and Coventry, endowed with £500 private benefaction, and £400 royal bounty, and in the patronage of H. F. Oakover, Esq. The church is a mean dilapidated structure, situated in the middle of a field. Near the village is a high hill, called "Magger's Bush," which affords an extensive prospect.

ATTENBOROUGH, a parish in the southern division of the wapentake of BROXTOW, county of NOTTINGHAM, 6 miles (S. W.) from Nottingham, containing, with the hamlets of Chilwell and Toton, 1031 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, with the perpetual curacy of Bramcote annexed, in the archdeaconry of Nottingham, and diocese of York, rated in the king's books at £4. 15., endowed with £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of Sir F. Foljambe. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. The rivers Trent and Erewash run through the parish. In the hamlet of Toton is a chalybeate spring. Attenborough is the birthplace of Henry Ireton, the son-in-law of Cromwell, and Lord Deputy of Ireland in the time of the Commonwealth.

ATTERBY, a township in the parish of BISHOP'S NORTON, eastern division of the wapentake of ASLACOE, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, 10½ miles (W. N. W.) from Market-Rasen, containing 110 inhabitants.

ATTERCLIFFE, a chapelry in that part of the parish of SHEFFIELD which is in the southern division of the wapentake of STRAFFORTH and TICKHILL, West riding of the county of YORK, 1½ mile (N. E. by E.) from Sheffield, containing, with the hamlet of Darnall, 3172 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry and diocese of York, endowed with £400 private benefaction, £400 royal bounty, and £3000 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Vicar of Sheffield. The chapel is dedicated to the Holy Jesus. A new church, in the later style of English architecture, was erected in 1822, at the expense of £11,700. 5., defrayed by a grant from the parliamentary commissioners. There are places of worship for Calvinists and Wesleyan Methodists. A Sunday school is endowed with £13. 9. 6. per annum. Almshouses have been erected for four poor people, but they are not endowed.

ATTERTON, a hamlet in the parish of WITHERLEY, hundred of SPARKENHOE, county of LEICESTER, 3¼ miles (E. by N.) from Atherstone, containing 75 inhabitants. Here was formerly a chapel, now desecrated.

ATTINGTON, an extra-parochial liberty, in the hundred of THAME, county of OXFORD, 1 mile (E. by N.) from Tetsworth, containing 8 inhabitants.

ATTLEBRIDGE, a parish in the hundred of TAVERHAM, county of NORFOLK, 4½ miles (S. S. E.) from Reepham, containing 105 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, with the rectory of Alderford united, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £4. 6. 10½., and in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Norwich. The church is dedicated to St. Andrew.

ATTLEBURGH, or ATTLEBOROUGH, a market town and parish in the hundred of SHROPHAM, county of NORFOLK, 15 miles (S. W. by W.) from Norwich, and 94 (N. E. by N.) from London, containing 1659 inhabitants. This place derives its name from Atheling, or Atlinge, a Saxon prince, by whom it is supposed to have been originally founded; and from a burg, or castle, by which it was formerly defended from the incursions of the Danes: it was anciently the capital of Norfolk, and the residence of Offa, and Edmund, kings of East Anglia. In the reign of Richard II., Robert de Mortimer founded a college, for a warden and four Secular priests, in the church of the Holy Cross, of which there are no remains. Though situated on the high road from Thetford to Norwich, it is now reduced to a very inconsiderable town. The market is on Thursday; and fairs are held on the Thursdays before Easter and Whitsuntide, and on the 15th of August. Constables and other officers are appointed at the court of the lord of the manor. Attleborough formerly comprised two parishes, Attleburgh Major, a rectory, rated in the king's books at £19. 8. 9., and Attleburgh Minor, a vicarage, rated at £8. 2. 6.; they are now united, and constitute one rectory, in the archdeaconry of Norfolk, and diocese of Norwich, and in the patronage of Sir T. Smyth, Bart. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a spacious cruciform structure, in the decorated style of English architecture, with a square embattled tower rising from the centre, and a fine porch: the chancel, which had some portions in the Norman style, has been demolished: there are several monuments to the memory of distinguished personages, of which the most prominent are those of the Mortimers, Ratcliffs, and Blickleys. There are places of worship for Baptists and Wesleyan Methodists. A Sunday school, lately established, is supported by subscription. Two miles and a half from the town, on the road to Wymondham, said to have been the first turnpike-road constructed in England, and for which an act was granted in the 7th of William III., are the remains of an obelisk, erected by the county to the memory of Sir Edward Rich, who, in 1675, gave £200 towards repairing the highways.

ATWICK, a parish in the northern division of the wapentake of HOLDERNESS, East riding of the county of YORK, $2\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. N. W.) from Hornsea, containing, with the township of Atwick with Arram, and Skirlington, 326 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of the East riding, and diocese of York, rated in the king's books at £4. 7. 11., and in the patronage of the Crown. The church is dedicated to St. Lawrence. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. The village is small, but pleasantly situated near the sea, from the encroachments of which, however, it has occasionally sustained considerable damage: in the centre stands a rude stone cross of great antiquity, with a Latin inscription upon its base, now nearly defaced. A school for the education of seventeen boys is endowed with £20 per annum, arising from a bequest of land by Edward Fenwick, in 1689; and another, for five girls, has an endowment of £18. 18., arising from land bequeathed by Ralph Burton, in 1726.

ATWORTH, a chapelry in the parish of GREAT BRADFORD, hundred of BRADFORD, county of WILTS, 4 miles (N. E. by N.) from Bradford, containing 642 inhabitants.

AUBORN, a parish in the lower division of the wapentake of BOOTHBY-GRAFFO, parts of KESTEVEN, county of LINCOLN, $6\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. W. by S.) from Lincoln, containing, with the township of Haddington, 330 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £7. 13. 10., endowed with £200 private benefaction, £400 royal bounty, and £500 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of C. Neville, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Peter. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists.

AUCKLAND (ST. ANDREW), a parish comprising the townships of Byers-Green, Counden-Grange, Eldon, Middlestone, Midridge-Grange, Old-Park, Sunderland-Bridge, Westerton, and Windleston, in the south-eastern division, and the market town of Bishop-Auckland, the chapelries of St. Helen Auckland and Hamsterley, and the townships of St. Andrew Auckland, West Auckland, North Bedburn, South Bedburn, Barony, Binchester, Coundon, Evenwood, Hunwick with Helmington, Lynesack with Softley, Newfield, Newton-Capp, Pollards-Lands, Shildon and East Thicky, in the north-western division, of DARLINGTON ward, county palatine of DURHAM, and containing 8253 inhabitants, of which number, 119 are in the township of St. Andrew Auckland, 1 mile (S.) from Bishop Auckland. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Durham, endowed with £800 private benefaction, and £800 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Bishop of Durham. The church, a spacious cruciform structure, was made collegiate for Secular canons by Bishop Carileph; and in 1292 was endowed by Bishop Beck for a dean and nine prebendaries: three or four additional prebendaries were founded by Bishop Langley, in 1428. At the dissolution the deanery was valued at £100. 7. 2., and the prebends at £79. 16. 8.: the dean's house and some of the prebendal houses have been converted into residences for farmers. The parish abounds with coal and limestone, and its surface is varied with highly interesting and romantic scenery. The Stockton and Darlington rail-road passes through it.

AUCKLAND (BISHOP), a market town and chapelry, in that part of the parish of ST. ANDREW AUCKLAND which is in the north-western division of DARLINGTON ward, county palatine of DURHAM, $10\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. W.) from Durham, and 252 (N. by W.) from London, containing 2180 inhabitants. This place derives its name from the great number of oak trees which formerly grew in the neighbourhood, and its prefix from an episcopal palace, in which the bishops of the diocese, who are lords of the manor, occasionally reside. The town is pleasantly situated on a considerable eminence, near the confluence of the rivers Gaunless and Wear, in a fertile district, remarkable for the salubrity of the air, and abounding with coal and limestone; the streets are tolerably paved, the houses are well built, and the inhabitants are plentifully supplied with water. The palace, originally erected in the reign of Edward I. by Bishop Anthony Beck, and subsequently enlarged, was destroyed during the parliamentary war. After the Restoration it was rebuilt, by Bishop Cosins, in a beautiful park north-east of the town: it is a spacious structure, surrounded with plantations and pleasure grounds watered by the Gaunless. The market is on Thursday: the fairs, which are of recent origin, are in March and October, but on no fixed day; the ancient fairs, on the days of Ascension and Corpus Christi, are now obsolete. The county magistrates hold petty sessions monthly; and courts leet and baron are held annually, at the former of which a bailiff and other officers are appointed. The Bishop's chapel is a stately edifice, built about the year 1660, by Dr. John Cosins, Bishop of Durham, whose remains are therein deposited. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Durham, endowed with £600 private benefaction, and £1200 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Bishop of Durham. There are places of worship for the Society of Friends, Independents, and Wesleyan Methodists. The free grammar school was founded by James I.: the original endowment, consisting of an estate in Weardale, has been augmented by subsequent benefactions; the management is vested in twelve governors, who are a body corporate, and have a common seal; the schoolroom was rebuilt in 1783, and a small neat chapel, dedicated to St. Anne, erected over it by subscription. A school for twenty boys was founded by Mr. Walton, in 1772: the master has a rent-free residence, and a salary of £20 per annum; and a school on Dr. Bell's system, for two hundred children, was established in 1810, by Bishop Barrington, who also founded a school of industry for girls, in 1815. Alms-houses for two men and two women were founded and endowed by Bishop Cosins, in the reign of Charles II.

AUCKLAND (ST. HELEN), a chapelry in that part of the parish of ST. ANDREW AUCKLAND which is in the north-western division of DARLINGTON ward, county palatine of DURHAM, 3 miles (S. S. W.) from Bishop-Auckland, containing, in the township of St. Helen Auckland (which constitutes only a small portion of the chapelry), 220 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Durham, rated in the king's books at £13. 9. 4., endowed with £400 private benefaction, £400 royal bounty, and £1100 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Bishop of Durham. Here is a school, endowed with land producing £20 per annum.

AUCKLAND (WEST), a township in that part of the parish of ST. ANDREW AUCKLAND which is in the north-western division of DARLINGTON ward, county palatine of DURHAM, 3½ miles (S. W. by S.) from Bishop-Auckland, containing 1106 inhabitants. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. A court leet, for the recovery of debts under 40s., is held twice a year. A free school, founded by Mrs. Margaret Hubback in 1798, is endowed with about £20 per annum. This place gives the title of baron to the family of Eden.

AUDENSHAW, a township in the parish of ASHTON under LINE, hundred of SALFORD, county palatine of LANCASTER, 5 miles (E. by S.) from Manchester, containing 3781 inhabitants. The name of this place, in ancient documents written Aldwinshagh, is said to be derived from the Saxon Aldwin, an elder or chieftain, and Shagh, a wood. It is supposed to have belonged, prior to the Conquest, to some Saxon thane, whose residence was on, or near, the site of the present village, which exhibits appearances of earlier cultivation than the surrounding district, which consists mostly of woods and morasses. The Ashton under Line canal passes through the township, and a large reservoir has been constructed here for supplying the town of Manchester with water. The inhabitants are chiefly employed in the various branches of the hat manufacture and in weaving. There is a place of worship for Methodists of the New Connexion. A parochial school was founded about the year 1745, and endowed by Miles Hilton with two estates in the parish of Manchester, producing £40 per annum. The schoolroom, with a large house for the master, has lately been erected, at an expense of nearly £1000, defrayed partly by subscription, and partly by the appropriation of the income arising from the endowment. There are also Sunday schools supported by subscription.

AUDLEM, a parish in the hundred of NANTWICH, county palatine of CHESTER, comprising the townships of Audlem, Buerton, Dodcot with Wilkesley, Hankelow, and Tittenley, and containing 2795 inhabitants, of which number, 1307 are in the township of Audlem, 7 miles (S.) from Nantwich. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Chester, rated in the king's books at £5. 16. 8., and in the patronage of Sir R. S. Cotton, Bart. The church is dedicated to St. James. There is place of worship for Particular Baptists. A grant for a market and a fair on the eve, day, and morrow of St. James the Apostle, was obtained in the 24th of Edward I., which, after long disuse, were revived a few years since. A free grammar school is endowed with £20 per annum by Ralph Bolton, a similar sum by Mr. Gamul, £7 by Trephena Bolton, and about £40 by an unknown benefactor: here is also an endowed English school.

AUDLEY, a parish in the northern division of the hundred of PIREHILL, county of STAFFORD, comprising the chapelry of Talk o' th' Hill, the townships of Audley, Bignall-End, Eardley-End, Knowl-End, and Park-End, and the liberty of Halmer-End, and containing 2940 inhabitants, of which number, 583 are in the township of Audley, 5 miles (N. W.) from Newcastle under Line. The living is a discharged vicarage, with the perpetual curacy of Talk o' th' Hill annexed, in the archdeaconry of Stafford, and diocese of Lichfield and Coventry, rated in the king's books at £6. 13. 4., and in the patronage of G. Tollet, Esq. The church, dedicated to St. James, is an ancient edifice having a tower crowned with pinnacles. Near the village is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. This parish abounds in mines of excellent coal and iron-stone: the Grand Trunk canal crosses its eastern extremity, where it passes under the Horncastle tunnel, one thousand eight hundred and eighty-eight yards in extent. A free grammar school, in which about fifty children are educated, was founded in 1622 by Edward Vernon; it has an annual endowment amounting to £125. 18. Another school, for teaching writing and arithmetic, is endowed with £2 per annum. On the summit of a steep rock, near the western boundary of the parish, are the remains of Heyley Castle, built by the barons of Audley; and near the village are vestiges of an ancient intrenchment. Audley gives the title of baron to the family of Touchet.

AUGHTON, a chapelry in the parish of HALTON, hundred of LONSDALE, south of the sands, county palatine of LANCASTER, containing 199 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Richmond, and diocese of Chester, endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Rector of Halton. The chapel is dedicated to St. George.

AUGHTON, a parish in the hundred of WEST DERBY, county palatine of LANCASTER, 2½ miles (S. W.) from Ormskirk, containing 1279 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Chester, rated in the king's books at £14. 15. 5., and in the patronage of John Plumbe Tempest, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Michael. The Liverpool and Wigan canal passes through the parish.

AUGHTON, a parish in the Holme-Beacon division of the wapentake of HARTHILL, East riding of the county of YORK, comprising the chapelry of East Cottingham, and the townships of Aughton and Laytham, and containing 702 inhabitants, of which number, 269 are in the township of Aughton, $8\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N.N.W.) from Howden. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of the East riding, and diocese of York, rated in the king's books at £4, endowed with £10 per annum private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of T. Mosley, Esq. The church is dedicated to All Souls. A castle anciently stood on the east bank of the river Derwent, of which only the moats and trenches can now be traced. This was the residence of Robert Aske, who was executed in the reign of Henry VIII., as a principal in the insurrection called the "Pilgrimage of Grace," occasioned by the suppression of the monasteries.

AUGHTON, a township in the parish of ASTON, southern division of the wapentake of STRAFFORTH and TICKHILL, West riding of the county of YORK, $4\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S.S.E.) from Rotherham. The population is returned with the parish.

AUKBOROUGH, a parish in the northern division of the wapentake of MANLEY, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, $10\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W.) from Barton upon Humber, containing 428 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, united to the rectory of Whitton, in the archdeaconry of Stow, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £10, endowed with £400 private benefaction, and £400 royal bounty. The church is dedicated to St. John the Baptist. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. A free school is endowed with £16. 13. 4. per annum. Dr. Stukeley supposed Aukborough to have been the Arquis of the geographer of Ravennas.

AUKLEY, a township in that part of the parish of FINNINGLEY which is in the Hatfield division of the wapentake of BASSETLAW, county of NOTTINGHAM, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N.) from Bawtry, containing 297 inhabitants.

AULT-HUCKNALL, a parish in the hundred of SCARSDALE, county of DERBY, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N.W. by W.) from Mansfield, containing, with the township of Stainsby, and a part of the township of Glapwell, 605 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Derby, and diocese of Lichfield and Coventry, rated in the king's books at £6. 0. 5., endowed with £200 private benefaction, £200 royal bounty, and £800 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Duke of Devonshire. At Hardwicke, in this parish, there is a school for the education of poor children, towards the support of which Thomas Whitehead, in 1729, bequeathed a house and land producing £23. 15. per annum; it is also endowed with property in the parish of Edensor.

AULTON, county of DERBY.—See ALLTON.

AUNSBY, a parish in the wapentake of ASWARDHURN, parts of KESTEVEN, county of LINCOLN, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N.W. by W.) from Folkingham, containing 105 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £6. 0. 7½., and in the patronage of M. Newton, Esq. The church, dedicated to St. Thomas à Becket, is a small edifice, in the early style of English architecture, having in the windows some remains of beautifully stained glass: the font has some remarkable ornaments.

AUST, a chapelry in that part of the parish of HENBURY which is in the upper division of the hundred of HENBURY, county of GLOUCESTER, $4\frac{1}{4}$ miles

(W. S. W.) from Thornbury, containing 192 inhabitants. This village, surrounded by salt marshes, is situated on the banks of the Severn, over which was formerly a ferry, now abandoned, in consequence of the establishment of a more convenient communication at New Passage, a mile and a half lower down the river. That rare mineral, sulphate of strontian, and carbonate of strontian, has been found in the fissures of the rocks bordering on the Severn.

AUSTELL, (ST.), a market town and parish in the eastern division of the hundred of POWDER, county of CORNWALL, 34 miles (S. W.) from Launceston, and 252 (W. S. W.) from London, on the great road from Plymouth to Falmouth, containing 6175 inhabitants. The name of this place is of uncertain derivation. In the reign of Henry VIII. it was an obscure village, and first rose into importance from its vicinity to Polgooth and other considerable mines. In the parliamentary war St. Austell, in which part of the army under the Earl of Essex had been quartered, was taken by Charles I., a short time previous to the capitulation of the parliamentarians near Lostwithiel, in 1644. In 1760, the great road from Plymouth to the Land's End was brought through the town, which is now a considerable thoroughfare. St. Austell is pleasantly situated in a highly cultivated district, on the south side of a hill, which slopes gradually to a small stream: the streets are paved, and lighted with gas, and the inhabitants are well supplied with water. The trade principally consists of the produce of its numerous mines of tin and copper, and in china-stone and clay of a very superior quality, which are found here in great abundance. The Great Crinnis, East Crinnis, and Pembroke mines, which are in the parish, and the Fowey Consolidated and Lanescot mines, in the vicinity, are exceedingly productive; and, from the improved manner of working them, promise continued prosperity to the town, the population of which has been trebled within the last eighteen years. Several harbours have been formed in different parts of the parish. Of these the harbour at Charlestown, a village within a mile and a half of St. Austell, is capable of affording secure anchorage to vessels drawing about fifteen feet of water. At Par, to the east of Charlestown, a harbour with a canal is in great progress; it was projected for the especial accommodation of the Fowey Consolidated and Lanescot copper mines, but promises additional public advantages. Another harbour has been lately completed at Pentewan, about four miles to the south, with which an iron rail-road communicates from the town. Many vessels are employed in the importation of coal from Wales, for the use of the mines, and in the exportation of copper ore for smelting; and of china-stone and clay to the different potteries, and for the use of linen-bleachers. The principal part of the grain tin produced in Cornwall is obtained here, and for melting it, blowing-houses have been erected near the town. A considerable pilchard fishery is carried on, in which many boats, fitted out from the different harbours, are employed. The market, which is considerable for corn and provisions, is on Friday; and there are fairs on November 30th and the Thursday before Trinity-Sunday. The town is within the jurisdiction of the county magistrates, by whom constables and other officers are appointed. The Blackmore, the most considerable of the Stannary courts, is held here. The living is a vicarage, with that of St. Blazey annexed, in the archdeaconry of Cornwall, and diocese of Exeter, rated in the king's books at £21, and in the patronage of the Crown. The church, dedicated to the Holy Trinity, is an ancient structure, combining various styles of English architecture, with a very handsome tower richly ornamented with sculpture. There are places of worship for Brianites, Calvinists, the Society of Friends, and Primitive and Wesleyan Methodists. At Menacuddle and Towan, in this parish, there are baptismal wells, over which are ancient buildings in the early style of English architecture, covered with arched roofs of granite. Near the new harbour of Pentewan is a large quarry, from which freestone for building many of the churches and mansions in the county has been procured; and near it, in one of the celebrated tin stream-works of Pentewan, the bones of men, of oxen of enormous size, of a whale, and of animals now unknown, have been found.

AUSTERFIELD, a chapelry in that part of the parish of BLYTH which is in the northern division of the wapentake of STRAFFORTH and TICKHILL, West riding of the county of YORK, $1\frac{1}{4}$ mile (N.N.E.) from Bawtry, containing 242 inhabitants.

AUSTERSON, a township in the parish of ACTON, hundred of NANTWICH, county palatine of CHESTER, containing 65 inhabitants.

AUSTHORPE, a township in the parish of WHITKIRK, lower division of the wapentake of SKYRACK, West riding of the county of YORK, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles (E.) from Leeds, containing 150 inhabitants. John Smeaton, distinguished as a civil engineer, who rebuilt the Eddystone lighthouse, was born here, in 1724.

AUSTHWAITE, a joint township with Birker, in the parish of MILLOM, ALLERDALE ward above Derwent, county of CUMBERLAND. The population is returned with Birker. This township is situated on the south side of the river Esk, and contains the lake Devock-water, and the waterfalls of Birker Force and Stanley Gill. The inhabitants have the privilege of marrying, burying, &c., at the neighbouring chapel of Eskdale.

AUSTONLEY, a township in that part of the parish of ALMONDBURY which is in the upper division of the wapentake of AGRIGG, West riding of the county of YORK, 7 miles (N. by W.) from Huddersfield, containing 968 inhabitants, who are mostly engaged in the manufacture of woollen cloth, for which there are numerous mills in the township.

AUSTREY, a parish in the Tamworth division of the hundred of HEMLINGFORD, county of WARWICK, 6 miles (E.N.E.) from Tamworth, containing 542 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Coventry, and diocese of Lichfield and Coventry, rated in the king's books at £8, and in the patronage of the Crown. The church is dedicated to St. Nicholas: the windows contain some curious specimens of stained glass.

AUSTWICK, a township in the parish of CLAPHAM, western division of the wapentake of STAINCLIFFE and EWCROSS, West riding of the county of YORK, 5 miles (N.W.) from Settle, containing 556 inhabitants. A fair for cattle is held on the Thursday before Whitsuntide. There are two small bequests for the instruction of poor children.

AUTHORPE, a parish in the Wold division of the hundred of LOUTH-ESKE, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N.W.) from Alford, containing 100 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £5. 13. 4., and in the patronage of Robert Viner, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Margaret.

AVEBURY, a parish in the hundred of SELKLEY, county of WILTS, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. by S.) from Marlborough, containing, with the tything of Beckhampton, 688 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, to which that of Winterbourne-Monkton was united in 1747, in the archdeaconry of Wilts, and diocese of Salisbury, rated in the king's books at £9, endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Crown. The church, dedicated to St. James, is of Norman architecture. The river Kennet has its source in this parish. In 1722, Susannah Holford bequeathed £200, directing the interest to be applied to the instruction of poor children. The village occupies a portion of the area of a stupendous monument, called Abury, supposed to have been constructed by the ancient Britons, for the purposes of religious worship, or national assemblies. It consisted of an extensive ditch and rampart, including double circles of large unhewn stones, many of which have been broken, and used as materials for building the houses in the village, and for other purposes. In the vicinity are several barrows, and among them, the very large and remarkable one, close to the turnpike road, called Silbury Hill, which covers an area of five acres and thirty-four perches, and exceeds in dimensions every similar work in Great Britain, being two thousand and twenty-seven feet in circumference at the base, and one hundred and twenty at the summit: its sloping height three hundred and sixteen feet, and its perpendicular height one hundred and seventy. Within a short distance of this are the remarkable stones termed the Grey Wethers, and about a mile north of the village is a cromlech. An Alien priory, dependent on the Benedictine abbey of Bochartville in Normandy, was founded here in the reign of Henry I. Robert of Avebury, who wrote a history of Edward III., is supposed to have been a native of this place.

AVELEY, a parish (formerly a market town) in the hundred of CHAFFORD, county of ESSEX, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (N.E.) from Purfleet, containing 733 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Essex, and diocese of London, rated in the king's books at £14. 10. 5., and in the patronage of the Bishop of London. The church is dedicated to St. Michael. Here is an endowed almshouse.

AVENBURY, a parish in the hundred of BROXASH, county of HEREFORD, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (S.E.) from Bromyard, containing 333 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Hereford, rated in the king's books at £7. 8. 9., endowed with £200 royal bounty, and £200 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Crown. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. A court leet is held annually. A small portion of limestone is found in the parish. Here was anciently a small priory, subordinate to the abbey of Dore.

AVENING, a parish in the hundred of LONGTREE, county of GLOUCESTER, 3 miles (N.) from Tetbury, containing, exclusively of that part of the chapelry of Nailsworth which is in this parish, 1118 inhabitants.

The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Gloucester, rated in the king's books at £24, and in the patronage of the Rev. T. Brooks, L. L. D. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is supposed to have been built by the abbess of Caen in Normandy, to whom the manor belonged till the suppression of Alien priories, in the reign of Henry V. There is a place of worship for Particular Baptists. Here is an endowed school, in which six boys are clothed and educated.

AVERHAM, a parish in the northern division of the wapentake of THURGARTON, county of NOTTINGHAM, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles (W. by N.) from Newark, containing 191 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, with that of Kelham annexed, in the archdeaconry of Nottingham, and diocese of York, rated in the king's books at £20. The church is dedicated to St. Michael. The navigable river Trent runs through the parish.

AVETON-GIFFORD, a parish in the hundred of ERMINGTON, county of DEVON, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. E.) from Modbury, containing 924 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Totness, and diocese of Exeter, rated in the king's books at £38. 1. 8., and in the patronage of James Pitman, Esq. The church, dedicated to St. Andrew, is an ancient structure, in the early style of English architecture, with later additions. The lords of the manor had formerly the power of inflicting capital punishment. The river Avon, which is navigable from this place to the English channel, is here crossed by a bridge, on the road leading to South Enford.

AVINGTON, a parish in the hundred of KINTBURY-EAGLE, county of BERKS, 3 miles (E. by S.) from Hungerford, containing 77 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Berks, and diocese of Salisbury, rated in the king's books at £8, and in the patronage of Sir Francis Burdett, Bart. The church exhibits a curious specimen of Norman architecture, having an arch separating the chancel from the nave, with an obtuse depending point in the centre: the font, which is also of Norman design, is adorned with sculptured figures under arches.

AVINGTON, a parish in the hundred of FAWLEY, Fawley division of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. E. by E.) from Winchester, containing 195 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Winchester, rated in the king's books at £11. 11. 10 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of the Bishop of Winchester. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. Here is an endowed school. Avington is within the jurisdiction of the Cheyney Court held at Winchester every Thursday, for the recovery of debts to any amount.

AVON, a chapelry in that part of the parish of CHRISTIAN-MALFORD which is in the hundred of CHIPPENHAM, county of WILTS, 3 miles (N. E.) from Chippenham, containing 18 inhabitants.

AVON-DASSET, county of WARWICK.—See DASSET (AVON).

AWBRIDGE, a hamlet in the parish of MITCHELMERSH, hundred of BUDDLESGATE, Fawley division of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, containing 250 inhabitants.

AWBURN, a chapelry in the parish of FRAISTHORP, wapentake of DICKERING, East riding of the county of YORK, 5 miles (S. by W.) from Bridlington. The population is returned with the parish. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of the East riding, and diocese of York, endowed with £600 royal bounty, and in the patronage of Sir W. Strickland, Bart.

AWLISCOMBE, a parish in the hundred of HEMROCK, county of DEVON, 2 miles (W. by N.) from Honiton, containing 513 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Exeter, rated in the king's books at £12. 10. 10., and in the patronage of the Duke of Bedford. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, has a finely ornamented window in the south transept, and a stone screen. The river Otter bounds the parish on the south.

AWNBY, a joint chapelry with Holywell, in the parish of BYTHAM-CASTLE, wapentake of BELTISLOE, parts of KESTEVEN, county of LINCOLN, 5 miles (N. by W.) from Stamford. The population is returned with Holywell.

AWRE, a parish in the hundred of BLIDESLOE, county of GLOUCESTER, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. N. E.) from Blake-ney, comprising the chapelry of Blakeney, and the tythings of Blidesloe, Etloe, Etloe-Duchy, and Hagloe, and containing 1138 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Hereford, and diocese of Gloucester, rated in the king's books at £10. 5., and in the patronage of the Master and Wardens of the Haberdashers' Company. The church is dedicated to St. Andrew. This parish forms a promontory of the Severn. The port of Gatcomb, and a town named Pomerton, which were included within it, have both been entirely destroyed: there is a large common, still called the Old Wharf.

AWSWORTH, a chapelry in the parish of NUTHALL, southern division of the wapentake of BROXTOW, county of NOTTINGHAM, $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W. by W.) from Nottingham. The population is returned with the parish. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Nottingham, and diocese of York, endowed with £400 private benefaction, and £600 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Rector of Nuthall.

AXBRIDGE, a market town and parish having separate jurisdiction, locally in the hundred of Winterstoke, county of SOMERSET, 18 miles (S. by W.) from Bristol, and 130 (W. by S.) from London, containing 988 inhabitants. This place, which derives name from its bridge over the river Axe, was formerly the residence of some of the West

Saxon monarchs, by whom it was invested with many privileges. The town is of mean appearance and indifferently paved, but amply supplied with water. The chief occupation of the poorer class of inhabitants is the knitting of stockings. The navigation of the river Axe has been greatly improved by an act obtained in 1802, whereby it has also been made toll-free. The market is on Saturday: fairs are held on February 2nd, March 25th, June 11th, and October 28th; those in February and March are very large cattle fairs, and at the others great quantities of butter are brought from the adjacent country, and sold to dealers for the Bristol market.

Corporate Seal.

The government of the town, by charter of Queen Elizabeth, is vested in a mayor, bailiff, recorder, one alderman, fifteen common council-men, and twenty-two burgesses, assisted by a town clerk, two mace bearers, and subordinate officers. The corporation hold a court of session quarterly for the borough. A court of record for pleas under £10 was formerly held, but it has fallen into disuse. The council-house, an ancient building, is in a very dilapidated state. Axbridge sent members to parliament in the 23rd of Edward I., but the right was discontinued in the 17th of Edward III., on petition of the burgesses. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Wells, and diocese of Bath and Wells, rated in the king's books at £11. 4. 4., endowed with £132 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Bishop of Bath and Wells. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, is a very ancient structure, occupying an elevated situation on the north-eastern side of the town, supposed to have been erected by one of the West Saxon monarchs, two of whose statues formerly ornamented the tower. There are places of worship for Particular Baptists and Wesleyan Methodists. Near the town is a mineral spring, which has been found efficacious in chronic diseases.

AXFORD, a tything in the parish and hundred of RAMSBURY, county of WILTS, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E.N.E.) from Marlborough, containing 428 inhabitants.

AXMINSTER, a parish in the hundred of AXMINSTER, county of DEVON, comprising the market town of Axminster, and the tythings of Beerhall, Westwater, and Wyke, and containing 2743 inhabitants, of which number, 1703 are in the town of Axminster, 25 miles (E. by N.) from Exeter, and 147 (W.S.W.) from London, on the road to Exeter. The name of this place is derived from its situation near the river Axe, and from a minster founded here by King Athelstan. In the time of the Saxons it was a town of considerable importance, and the burial-place of many of their princes. In 1644, a conflict took place in the vicinity, between the royalists and the parliamentarians, in which Sir Richard Cholmondeley, who commanded the former, was slain. The town, which is irregularly built, is pleasantly situated on the summit of a hill, near the confluence of the rivers Axe and Yarty, over the former of which a bridge has been erected: the streets, which are spacious, and contain some respectable houses, are well paved and lighted, and the inhabitants are amply supplied with water from several good springs. Races are held in August at Shute-hill, three miles distant; and there are assemblies occasionally at the George hotel. The manufacture of carpets, which has been established for nearly a century, is still conducted by the family of the original proprietor, and affords employment to about a hundred men: the carpets are considered superior in beauty and durability to those of Turkey; one lately made for the Emperor of Russia measured seventy-three feet by forty-five, and cost £1200: there are also manufactories for plush and tape. The market is on Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday: the fairs are on the first Tuesday after April 25th, the first Wednesday after June 24th, and the first Wednesday after October 21st. Courts leet and baron are held annually by the lord of the manor, at the former of which constables and other officers are appointed.

The living is a vicarage, with the perpetual curacies of Kilmington and Membury annexed, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Exeter, rated in the king's books at £44. 6. 8., and in the patronage of the Chancellor in the Cathedral Church of York: there is also a sinecure rectory, rated at £40. 6. 8., belonging to the Prebendary of Warthill in the same cathedral. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is an ancient structure, partaking of various styles of architecture: the entrance is under a fine Norman arch richly moulded; the interior is of the early English style, with later insertions; and the pulpit and reading-desk are curiously carved. There are places of worship for Independents, Wesleyan Methodists, and Roman Catholics. Twelve poor children are instructed in the parochial school, for the amount of divers benefactions made for that purpose. About a mile and a half south of the town, on the bank of the river Axe, are the remains of Newnham abbey, consisting of the chapel, kitchen, and other parts; and, at the distance of three miles, are the ruins of Musbury Castle.

AXMOUTH, a parish in the hundred of AXMINSTER, county of DEVON, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. by E.) from Colyton, containing 529 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Exeter, rated in the king's books at £22. 19. 2., and in the patronage of John Hallet, Esq. The river Axe runs through the parish, and falls into the English channel, where a convenient harbour for coasting vessels of one hundred and twenty tons' burden has recently been constructed, by John Hallett, Esq. Here is a school for the education of poor children, to which William Serle, in 1726, gave a small endowment. From the numerous traces of Roman occupancy on the eastern bank of the river, it is supposed that this was the famous port Moridunum.

AYCLIFFE, a parish in the south-eastern division of DARLINGTON ward, county palatine of DURHAM, comprising the townships of Great Aycliffe, Brafferton, Preston le Skerne, and Woodham, and containing 1379 inhabitants, of which number, 807 are in the township of Great Aycliffe, 6 miles (N.) from Darlington. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Durham, rated in the king's books at £20, and in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Durham. The church is dedicated to St. Acca. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. Spelman supposes Aycliffe to have been the place anciently called Aclod, where synods were held in 782 and 789. The Stockton and Darlington railway passes about three quarters of a mile to the west of the village. Limestone is found in abundance; and upon the river Skerne there are a spinning-mill, and a mill for the manufacture of brown paper.

AYCLIFFE (SCHOOL), a township in the parish of HEIGHINGTON, south-eastern division of DARLINGTON ward, county palatine of DURHAM, $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. by W.) from Darlington, containing 37 inhabitants.

AYDON, a township in the parish of CORBRIDGE, eastern division of TINDALE ward, county of NORTH-UMBERLAND, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. by N.) from Hexham, containing 94 inhabitants. Lead-ore and coal exist here, but in very small quantities. Several Roman relics have been found, including two urns, the effigy of a human being, &c.

AYDON-CASTLE, a township in the parish of CORBRIDGE, eastern division of TINDALE ward, county of NORTHUMBERLAND, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. by N.) from Hexham, containing 31 inhabitants. The castle, now in ruins, belonged for several generations to the baronial family of Aydon, or Ayton.

AYLBURTON, a chapelry in the parish of LIDNEY, hundred of BLIDESLOE, county of GLOUCESTER, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. W. by W.) from Blakeney, containing 353 inhabitants. The chapel is dedicated to Mary.

AYLESBEAR, a parish in the eastern division of the hundred of BUDLEIGH, county of DEVON, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. W. by W.) from Ottery St. Mary, containing, with the chapelry of Newton-Poppleford, 854 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Exeter, rated in the king's books at £16. 2. 4., endowed with £400 private benefaction, and £600 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Rev. W. H. Marker. The church is dedicated to St. Christopher. This parish is bounded on the east by the river Otter, on which stands a silk and riband manufactory. In 1697, Richard White bequeathed a small endowment for the instruction of poor children.

AYLESBURY, a borough, market town, and parish, in the hundred of AYLESBURY, county of BUCKINGHAM, 17 miles (S. E. by S.) from Buckingham, and 40 (N. N. W.) from London, containing, according to the last census, 4400 inhabitants, now about 5000. This town, which was one of the strongest fortresses of the ancient Britons, received the name of Eglesbury from Cuthwulf, brother of Ceawlin, king of the West Saxons, by whom it was captured in 571. About the year 600, a monastery, dedicated to St. Osyth, was erected here. At the Conquest, Aylesbury was conferred on one of the royal favourites, under the extraordinary tenure that he should provide straw for the monarch's bed, sweet herbs for his chamber, and two green geese and three eels for his table, three times in the year, if he should so often visit it. A convent of Grey friars, the only one in the county, was founded here, in 1387, by James, Earl of Ormond; its site was subsequently occupied by a mansion belonging to the Packington family, which has been long since taken down. There were also two ancient hospitals, dedicated to St. John and St. Leonard, for the benefit of lepers, which had gone to decay previously to the year 1360. In the war between Charles I. and the parliament, Aylesbury was garrisoned for the latter. The town is delightfully situated in a fertile vale, which affords pasturage to an extraordinary number of sheep; the houses are principally of stone and lath and plaster, intermixed with some handsomely built of brick; the streets are well paved, and partially lighted with oil, and the inhabitants have lately been supplied with water by means of the tread-wheel in the gaol. Much of its prosperity is due to the munificent patronage of Sir John Baldwin, Chief Justice of the Common Pleas in the reign of Henry VIII., who erected several buildings, and procured the assizes to be removed hither from Buckingham; the summer assizes, however, have been again transferred to that town. Lace-making constitutes the chief employment of the poor; and numerous ducklings are reared for the London market at Christmas. The market, which is principally for corn, and is also abundantly supplied with excellent meat, is on Saturday: fairs are held on the first Friday after January 18th, the Saturday before Palm-Sunday, May 8th, June 14th, September 25th, and October 11th.

Queen Mary, in 1550, vested the government of the borough in a corporation, who, from non-exercise of their privileges, forfeited their charter in the reign of Elizabeth; and the town is now within the jurisdiction of the county magistrates, who hold a petty session weekly: two constables and other officers are appointed at the court leet of the lord of each of the two manors, viz., the manor of Aylesbury, and the manor of the rectory of Aylesbury. A court of quarter session for the county is held in the shire-hall, a handsome edifice, erected in 1723. The county gaol and house of correction admits of the classification of prisoners, and comprises one hundred and forty cells, two day-rooms, a chapel, and a tread-mill employed in raising water and grinding corn. The elective franchise was conferred in 1554, since which time the borough has continued to return two members to parliament: the right of election is vested in the inhabitant householders, and in the freeholders of the hundred, the number of both being near three thousand; the four constables are the returning officers. Concerning a disputed return for this borough in 1703, the contest between the lords and the commons was so great, that the queen deemed it expedient to prorogue the parliament. The living is a discharged vicarage, within the jurisdiction of the peculiar court of Aylesbury, belonging to the Dean and Chapter of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £24. 18. 1., and in the patronage of the Prebendary of Aylesbury in the Cathedral Church of Lincoln. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a venerable and interesting structure. There are places of worship for Particular Baptists, the Society of Friends, Independents, and Wesleyan Methodists. The free grammar school, founded by Sir Henry Lee, was endowed, at the beginning of the last century, with only £8 per annum, which was augmented by John Phillips, Esq., a native of the town, with a legacy of £5000, since invested in land producing about £240 per annum: there are one hundred and twenty boys on the foundation, fifteen of whom are instructed in the classics. The school-house and residences for three masters were built in 1718. A Lancasterian school was founded by Mr. John Hull, of Uxbridge: there are also Sunday schools in connexion with the established church and the dissenting congregations. In 1694, Mr. John Bedford gave land for the repair of the highways, and for the relief of the poor, the rental of which exceeds £300 per annum. Aylesbury gives the title of marquis to the family of Brudenell Bruce.

AYLESBY, a parish in the wapentake of BRADLEY-HAVERSTON, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. by S.) from Great Grimsby, containing 142 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Lincoln, endowed with £600 royal bounty, and in the patronage of T. D. Drake, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Lawrence.

AYLESFORD, a parish in the hundred of LARKFIELD, lathe of AYLESFORD, county of KENT, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. N. W.) from Maidstone, and 34 (S. E.) from London, containing 1136 inhabitants. This place was called Saissenag-hobail by the Britons, in commemoration of their having here defeated the Saxons; and by the latter, after their settlement in the country, Eaglesford, of which the present name is a corruption. In the battle above mentioned, which took place in 455, Horsa, the brother of Hengist, was slain. In 893, Alfred defeated the Danes at Fenham, in this parish; and, in 1016, Edmund Ironside, in a fierce encounter with those invaders, pursued them to this place with great slaughter, and drove them hence to Sheppy. In 1240, Ralph Frisburn, on his return from the Holy Land, founded a Carmelite monastery, under the patronage of Richard, Lord Grey of Codnor, many parts of which are entire, though the greater portion of the site is occupied by a mansion, erected by Sir William Sedley, and now the residence of the Earl of Aylesford. The town is pleasantly situated on the north-east bank of the river Medway, over which is a neat modern stone bridge of six arches: it consists of one principal street, on the east side of which the ground rises abruptly to an elevation of one hundred feet. A paper-mill, by the side of a small stream, is the only manufactory in the place: a pleasure fair is held on the 29th of June. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Rochester, rated in the king's books at £10, and in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Rochester. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is situated on rising ground to the east of the principal street. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. A school for the education of poor children was endowed, in 1766, by Mr. William Milner, with a rent-charge of £20, which is paid to a master for instructing twenty-five boys: the school-room was built in 1773. An hospital, dedicated to the Holy Trinity, was founded for six aged persons, in 1617. Fragments of military weapons are frequently discovered here. At Horsted is a monument of upright stones, erected, as it is supposed, to the memory of Horsa; and three miles distant is another, called Kit's Cotty House, to the memory of Certigorn, brother of Vortimer, who was slain with that prince in the battle with Hengist and Horsa. Aylesford confers the title of earl on the family of Finch. Sir Charles Sedley, a celebrated wit and poet in the reign of Charles II., was a native of this parish.

AYLESTONE, a parish partly in the hundred of GUTHLAXTON, and partly in the hundred of SPARKENHEX, county of LEICESTER, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. by W.) from Leicester, containing, with the chapelries of Glen Parva and Lubbesthorpe, 749 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Leicester, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £31. 8. 11 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of the Duke of Rutland. The church is dedicated to St. Andrew. The chapel at Lubbesthorpe has fallen to decay, and the inhabitants resort for divine service to the church at Aylestone, but pay no tithes, whence the place has been deemed extra-parochial. The Union canal passes through the parish, soon after which it joins the river Soar.

AYLMERTON, a parish in the northern division of the hundred of ERPINGHAM, county of NORFOLK, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W.S.W.) from Cromer, containing 284 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory in mediocres, with that of Runton, in the archdeaconry of Norfolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated together in the king's books at £6. 11., and in the patronage of Rear-Admiral Wyndham. The church is dedicated to St. John the Baptist.

AYLSHAM, a market town and parish in the southern division of the hundred of ERPINGHAM, county of NORFOLK, $12\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. by W.) from Norwich, and 121 (N.E. by N.) from London, containing 1853 inhabitants. This place, situated on the southern bank of the river Bure, which is navigable for barges from Yarmouth, was formerly one of the principal manufacturing towns in the county; the linen made here was much esteemed and distinguished by the name of Aylsham web. This branch of industry was succeeded by the woollen manufacture and the knitting of stocking pieces, which flourished until the introduction of machinery, since which it has greatly declined, a few looms only being employed for the manufacturers at Norwich: the trade at present is principally in corn and timber. The market is on Tuesday, and fairs are held on March 23rd, and the last Tuesday in September. The town is within the jurisdiction of the county magistrates: constables and other officers are appointed at the court leet of the lord of the manor. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £17. 19. 7., and in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Norwich. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, was founded by John of Gaunt, in the fourteenth century: it is a spacious structure in the decorated style of English architecture, and contains a curious and richly sculptured font. There are places of worship for Particular Baptists and Methodists. The free school, founded in 1517, by Robert Jermys, mayor of Norwich, and endowed with £10 per annum, has been incorporated with the National school. A school, founded by Robert James, has an endowment of £10 per annum, for the instruction of seven boys.

AYLTON, a parish in the hundred of RADLOW, county of HEREFORD, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W.) from Ledbury, containing 100 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Hereford, rated in the king's books at £3. 3. 4., and in the patronage of the Earl of Oxford.

AYLWORTH, a hamlet in that part of the parish of NAUNTON which is in the hundred of BRADLEY, county of GLOUCESTER, containing 32 inhabitants.

AYMESTREY, a parish partly in the hundred of STRETTFORD, but chiefly in the hundred of WIGMORE, county of HEREFORD, 8 miles (N.W.) from Leominster, comprising the chapelry of Earls Lenthall, and the townships of Conhope and Upper Ley, and containing 813 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Hereford, rated in the king's books at £7. 14. 2., endowed with £200 private benefaction, £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Crown. The church is dedicated to St. John and St. Alkmund. The river Lug runs through the parish, and limestone abounds in the vicinity. A court leet for the manor is held every alternate year. A charity school is endowed with £12 per annum, and an almshouse, for one poor widow, with £2 per annum. Traces of Roman and British camps are discernible near the village.

AYNHÖ, a parish (formerly a market town) in the hundred of KING'S SUTTON, county of NORTHAMPTON, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. by N.) from Deddington, containing 719 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Northampton, and diocese of Peterborough, rated in the king's books at £25. 5. 5., and in the patronage of W. R. Cartwright, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Michael. Robert Wild, a Presbyterian minister, and a poet and satirist, held this living during the Commonwealth; but having been ejected from it in 1662, he retired to Oundle, where he died in 1679. The village, which is of considerable size, is situated on a rocky eminence, from the foot of which issues a copious spring, called the "Town Well." A charter was obtained, in the 17th of Edward II., for a weekly market and a fair annually at Michaelmas, but both have long since been discontinued. A free school was founded by John Cartwright, and endowed with a rent-charge of £20. Here was anciently an hospital, dedicated to St. John and St. James, founded about the time of Henry II., which, in 1484, was united to Magdalene College, Oxford, by gift of the patron, William Fitz-Alan. The Roman Portway, a vicinal road, runs through this parish, and is visible at the eastern end of the village. Shakerley-Marmion, a dramatic writer, was born at the manor-house, in 1602.

AYOTT (ST. LAWRENCE), a parish in the hundred of BROADWATER, county of HERTFORD, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles (W. by N.) from Welwyn, containing 160 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Huntingdon, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £8. 13. 4., and in the patronage of Lionel Lyde, Esq. The church, dedicated to St. Lawrence, is a neat modern brick edifice, with a handsome portico of stone, of the Doric order: it was erected in 1787, at an expense of £6000, by Sir Lionel Lyde, from a design by Revett, the celebrated Italian architect. The ruins of the old church, a quarter of a mile distant, are considerable, and under the belfry of its embattled tower there is an altar-tomb, with recumbent figures of a knight and his lady. This place was anciently in the possession of King Harold. Dane-End, near Ayott, owes its name to a signal defeat of the Danes by King Ethelwulf.

AYOTT (ST. PETER), a parish in the hundred of BROADWATER, county of HERTFORD, $1\frac{1}{4}$ mile (W. by S.) from Welwyn, containing 233 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Huntingdon, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £7. 8. 6½., and in the patronage of the Earl of Hardwicke. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, a neat octagonal building, was erected about eighty years ago, by the late rector, Dr. Freeman, who built also the steeple, on the opposite side of the churchyard.

AYSGARTH, a parish in the western division of the wapentake of HANG, North riding of the county of YORK, comprising the chapelries of Askrigg and Hawes, and the townships of High Abbotside, Low Abbotside, Aysgarth, Bainbridge, Bishop-Dale, Burton with Walden, Carperby, Newbiggin, Thoraby, and Thornton-Rust, and containing 5621 inhabitants, of which number, 293 are in the township of Aysgarth, $8\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W.) from Middleham. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Richmond, and diocese of Chester, rated in the king's books at £19. 6. 8., endowed with £400 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Master and Fellows of Trinity College, Cambridge. The church, dedicated to St. Andrew, is a spacious structure, and has an elegant screen and rood-loft between the nave and the chancel, supposed to have been brought from the abbey of Jervaux. There are places of worship for the Society of Friends and Wesleyan Methodists. Here is an endowed grammar school, also almshouses for six widows. The river Ure, which rises in this parish, passes over a precipitous and irregular ledge of rocks, and produces some fine waterfalls, called Aysgarth Force, Mossdale Fall, and Hardraw Fall. At some distance above there is a curious and highly ornamented bridge of one arch, having a span of seventy feet, from which a beautifully picturesque prospect may be obtained. Several veins of lead and some strata of coal exist in the neighbourhood: Mary, Queen of Scots, was imprisoned for a short time in Nappa Hall, an ancient mansion in this parish.

AYSTON, a parish in the hundred of MARTINSLEY, county of RUTLAND, $1\frac{1}{4}$ mile (N. W. by N.) from Uppingham, containing 110 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Northampton, and diocese of Peterborough, rated in the king's books at £8. 7. 8½., and in the patronage of G. B. Brudenell, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Mary.

AYTON, a parish in the western division of the liberty of LANGBAURGH, North riding of the county of YORK, comprising the chapelry of Nunthorpe, and the townships of Great Ayton, and Little Ayton, and containing 1201 inhabitants, of which number, 1023 are in the township of Great Ayton, 3 miles (N. E. by E.) from Stokesley. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Cleveland, and diocese of York, endowed with £600 royal bounty, and £800 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Rev. W. Marwood. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a neat unadorned edifice of considerable antiquity, and contains a handsome monument to the memory of W. Wilson, Esq., a distinguished naval commander in the service of the Hon. East India Company. There are places of worship for the Society of Friends, Independents, and Primitive and Wesleyan Methodists. At the extremity of a ridge of hills, in this parish, is a quarry of hard blue whin-stone, or granite, which is much used in making and repairing roads. There are some linen-manufactories and oil-mills in the parish. Iron-ore has been obtained at Cliffrigg-woods, but the mine is not worked at present. There were also alum-works, but these have been abandoned. A charity school, founded in 1704, by Michael Postgate, was rebuilt in 1785; it has an endowment, of about £10 per annum, for the education of eight boys belonging to the township. At this school, the celebrated navigator, Captain Cook, received a portion of his education, at the expense of Thomas Scottowe, Esq., whom his father served as a manager of a farm. Adjoining the school are three almshouses.

AYTON (EAST), a chapelry in the parish of SEAMER, PICKERING lythe, North riding of the county of YORK, 5 miles (S. W. by W.) from Scarborough, containing 333 inhabitants. The chapel is dedicated to St. John the Baptist. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. The village is situated in a valley, remarkable for the beauty of its scenery, through which flows the river Derwent. An iron-foundry has been established here.

AYTON (LITTLE), a township in the parish of AYTON, western division of the liberty of LANGBAURGH, North riding of the county of YORK, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles (E. N. E.) from Stokesley, containing 68 inhabitants.

AYTON (WEST), a township in the parish of HUTTON-BUSHELL, PICKERING lythe, North riding of the county of YORK, $5\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. W. by S.) from Scarborough, containing 229 inhabitants. Here are remains of an ancient castle, formerly belonging to the family of Eure, and afterwards to that of Clifford. Agreeably to the will of Lady Hewley, two-thirds of the manor are vested in seven trustees, for the support of dissenting ministers. The river Derwent separates the townships of East and West Ayton, and is here crossed by a bridge of four arches.

B.

BABCARY, a parish in the hundred of CATSASH, county of SOMERSET, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E.) from Somerton, containing 422 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Wells, and diocese of Bath and Wells, rated in the king's books at £13. 10. 5., and in the patronage of N. and G. Messiter and John Twyford, Esqrs. The church is dedicated to the Holy Cross.

BABINGLEY, a parish in the Lynn division of the hundred of FREEBRIDGE, county of NORFOLK, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (N.) from Castle-Rising, containing 53 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, annexed to that of Sandringham, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £4. 13. 4. The church, which is partly in ruins, is dedicated to St. Felix, the apostle of the East Angles, who is said to have erected the original structure.

BABINGTON, a parish in the hundred of KILMERSDON, county of SOMERSET, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. N. W.) from Frome, containing 156 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Wells, and diocese of Bath and Wells, rated in the king's books at £10, and in the patronage of J. Twyford Jolliffe, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Margaret. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. Coal and limestone are found in the neighbourhood. A school for poor children is endowed with £15 per annum, bequeathed in 1758, by Elizabeth Long.

BABRAHAM, a parish in the hundred of CHILFORD, county of CAMBRIDGE, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W.) from Linton, containing 238 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Ely, rated in the king's books at £6. 5. 10., and in the patronage of the Crown. The church is dedicated to St. Peter. Here is a school for poor children, the master of which has a salary of £20 per annum, arising from a bequest, in 1723, by Judith Bennet, who also left £25 per annum for apprenticing boys, and £30 per annum towards the support of six poor widows.

BABWORTH, a parish in the Hatfield division of the wapentake of BASSETLAW, county of NOTTINGHAM, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (W.) from East Retford, containing 416 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Nottingham, and diocese of York, rated in the king's books at £14. 19. 2., and in the patronage of the Hon. T. B. Simpson. The church is dedicated to All Saints. The Chesterfield canal passes along the northern side of the parish, the income arising from a share in which was bequeathed, in 1781, by Lindley Simpson, Esq., to support a school for the instruction of poor children.

BACH, a township in that part of the parish of St. OSWALD, CHESTER, which is in the lower division of the hundred of BROXTON, county palatine of CHESTER, containing 21 inhabitants. Bach Hall was garrisoned for the parliament, in the early part of the civil war, and destroyed during the siege of Chester, in 1645.

BACKFORD, a parish comprising the townships of Backford, Chorlton, Lea, and Great Mollington, in the higher division of the hundred of WIRRAL, and the township of Conghall, in the lower division of the hundred of BROXTON, county palatine of CHESTER, and containing 450 inhabitants, of which number, 140 are in the township of Backford, 4 miles (N.) from Chester. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Chester, rated in the king's books at £5. 0. 5., endowed with £400 private benefaction, and £400 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Bishop of Chester. The church is dedicated to St. Oswald. The Ellesmere canal passes along the southern side of the parish.

BACKWELL, a parish (formerly a market town) in the hundred of HARTCLIFFE with BEDMINSTER, county of SOMERSET, $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. W. by W.) from Bristol, containing 863 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Bath, and diocese of Bath and Wells, rated in the king's books at £6. 19. 9½., endowed with £400 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Co-heiresses of Mrs. Lox: there is also a sinecure rectory, rated at £11. 16. 3., and in the patronage of the Marquis of Bath. The church is dedicated to St. Andrew. The weekly market, granted by Edward II., has long been discontinued: there is a fair for cattle and pedlary on the 21st of September. A great number of the labouring class is employed in extensive collieries within the parish: there are also quarries which produce a reddish calcareous stone variegated with blue and white veins, susceptible of a high polish. A National school is chiefly supported by subscription.

BACKWORTH, county of NORTHUMBERLAND. — See BLACKWORTH.

BACONSTHORPE, a parish in the southern division of the hundred of ERPINGHAM, county of NORFOLK, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. S. E.) from Holt, containing 246 inhabitants. The church is dedicated to St. Mary.

BACUP, a chapelry in that part of the parish of WHALLEY which is in the higher division of the hundred of BLACKBURN, county palatine of LANCASTER, 6 miles (E. by S.) from Haslingden. The population is returned with the parish. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Chester, endowed with £200 private benefaction, £1100 royal bounty, and £1000 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Vicar of Whalley. The chapel was consecrated in 1788. There are two places of worship for Particular Baptists, and one for Wesleyan Methodists. The manufacture of baize, and the spinning and manufacture of cotton, are extensively carried on in this chapelry.

BADBY, a parish in the hundred of FAWLEY, county of NORTHAMPTON, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. S. W.) from Daventry, containing 547 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, with the perpetual curacy of Newnham annexed, in the archdeaconry of Northampton, and diocese of Peterborough, rated in the king's books at £14, endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Dean and Canons of Christ Church, Oxford. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. There are quarries of hard blue rag-stone in the neighbourhood. On a lofty eminence, called Arbury hill, is an intrenchment enclosing an area of about ten acres, supposed to have been a Roman camp.

BADDESLEY (NORTH), a parish in the hundred of MANSBRIDGE, Fawley division of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. by S.) from Romsey, containing 286 inhabitants. The living is a donative, in the patronage of T. Dummer, Esq.

BADDESLEY-CLINTON, a parish in the Solihull division of the hundred of HEMLINGFORD, county of WARWICK, 7 miles (N. W.) from Warwick, containing 140 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, united to the vicarage of Polesworth, in the peculiar jurisdiction of the lord of the manor, rated in the king's books as a rectory, at £4. 6. 8. The church is dedicated to St. Michael. The Warwick and Birmingham canal passes through the parish.

BADDESLEY-ENSOR, a parish in the Tamworth division of the hundred of HEMLINGFORD, county of WARWICK, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. N. W.) from Atherstone, containing 535 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Coventry, and diocese of Lichfield and Coventry, endowed with £1200 royal bounty, and £200 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Parishioners of Polesworth. The church is dedicated to St. Michael. There are some coal mines in the neighbourhood. George Abbott, in 1647, bequeathed a rent-charge of £5 in support of a free school.

BADDILEY, a parish in the hundred of NANTWICH, county palatine of CHESTER, 3 miles (W. S. W.) from Nantwich, containing 270 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Chester, rated in the king's books at £24. 3. 6., and in the patronage of Sir H. Mainwaring, Bart. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is constructed of English oak, and is of great antiquity; the upright timbers, being much decayed, were cased with brick in 1811, but the roof and ceiling are still in fine preservation. Baddiley Hall, once the noble residence of the Mainwarings, has been converted into a farmhouse. The Ellesmere canal passes through the parish.

BADDINGTON, a township in the parish of ACRON, hundred of NANTWICH, county palatine of CHESTER, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (S. S. W.) from Nantwich, containing 140 inhabitants.

BADDOW (GREAT), a parish in the hundred of CHELMSFORD, county of ESSEX, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (S. E.) from Chelmsford, containing 1603 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Essex, and diocese of London, rated in the king's books at £18. 6. 8., and in the patronage of A. Bullen, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Mary; its tower is covered with ivy. The village is very pleasantly situated, and is inhabited by several highly respectable families. A school for the instruction of twenty children is endowed with £20 per annum, aided by a bequest of £50 from Jasper Jefferey, in 1731: there is also an endowed school for the children of dissenters, and there are nine almshouses.

BADDOW (LITTLE), a parish in the hundred of CHELMSFORD, county of ESSEX, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. by W.) from Danbury, containing, with the hamlet of Little Mead, 583 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Essex, and diocese of London, rated in the king's books at £8. 2. 2., and in the patronage of Col. Strutt, who is also patron of the rectory, which is a sinecure, rated at £7. 13. 4. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. In 1717, Edward Butler bequeathed one hundred and ninety-six acres of land, and a wood containing thirty-six acres, directing the proceeds to be applied for clothing and educating children in this parish, and that of Boreham. A school for the instruction of twenty children is supported by the dissenters.

BADGER, a parish within the liberties of the borough of WENLOCK, locally in the hundred of Brimstree, county of SALOP, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. E.) from Bridgenorth, containing 132 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Salop, and diocese of Hereford, rated in the king's books at £4. 13. 4., and in the patronage of the Crown. The church is dedicated to St. Giles. There is a school for poor children, with a house for the master; also six almshouses.

BADGEWORTH, a parish in the upper division of the hundred of DUDSTONE and KING'S BARTON, county of GLOUCESTER, 4 miles (S. W. by W.) from Cheltenham, containing 715 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, with the perpetual curacy of Great Shurdington annexed, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Gloucester, rated in the king's books at £20. 11. 3., and in the patronage of W. Laurence Laurence, Esq.: there is also a sinecure rectory, in the patronage of the principal and Fellows of Jesus' College, Oxford. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a handsome stone building, with a tower at the west end. There was formerly a chapel of ease at Bentham, in this parish. The village, which tradition reports to have anciently been a market town, was evidently much larger than it now is, from the foundations of houses which have been discovered in its vicinity. At Churchdown is a school for the instruction of children of that parish and Badgeworth, to which £25 per annum are paid out of an estate here, left for that purpose by William Window, Gent. The Rev. William Stanby, formerly vicar of this parish, demised an estate for apprenticing boys of the parishes of Badgeworth, Churchdown, and Cheltenham; and there are various minor charities for the benefit of the poor. On an estate called Cold Pool is a mineral spring, the water of which is similar to the Cheltenham waters.

BADGINGTON, a parish in the hundred of CROWTHORNE and MINETY, county of GLOUCESTER, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N.) from Cirencester, containing 137 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Gloucester, rated in the king's books at £8. 4. $4\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of the Principal and Fellows of Jesus' College, Oxford. The church is dedicated to St. Margaret.

BADGWORTH, a parish in the hundred of WINTERSTOKE, county of SOMERSET, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. W. by W.) from Axbridge, containing 319 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Wells, and diocese of Bath and Wells, rated in the king's books at £25. 15., and in the patronage of Sir J. Mordaunt, Bart. The church is dedicated to St. Congar.

BADINGHAM, a parish in the hundred of HOXNE, county of SUFFOLK, 4 miles (N. N. E.) from Framlingham, containing 816 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Suffolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £22. 16. 8., and in the patronage of the Rev. C. Chevallier. The church is dedicated to St. John the Baptist.

BADLESMERE, a parish in the hundred of FEVERSHAM, lathe of SCRAY, county of KENT, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S.) from Faversham, containing 113 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, united to that of Levealand, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Canterbury, rated in the king's books at £5. 2., and in the patronage of Lord Sondes. The church is dedicated to St. Leonard. A fair is held here on the 6th of November.

BADLEY, a parish in the hundred of BOSMERE and CLAYDON, county of SUFFOLK, 2 miles (W. N. W.) from Needham, containing 84 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Suffolk, and diocese of Norwich, and in the patronage of the Earl of Ashburnham and C. Boone, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. The navigable river Gep flows through the parish. The hall, once the seat of the Pooleys, is now a farm-house.

BADMINTON (GREAT), a parish in the upper division of the hundred of GRUMBALD'S ASH, county of GLOUCESTER, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. by N.) from Chipping-Sodbury, containing 464 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Gloucester, rated in the king's books at £5. 5. $7\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of the Duke of Beaufort. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, was rebuilt by the Duke of Beaufort, in 1785. The petty sessions for the division of Sodbury and Grumbald's Ash are held here, at Cross Hands, and at Chipping-Sodbury, in rotation. In 1705, Mary, Duchess Dowager of Beaufort, gave a rent-charge of £94 for the endowment of an almshouse for three men and three women, and a school for the children of Great and Little Badminton and Littleton-Drew. The noble mansion of Badminton was erected by the first duke of Beaufort, in the reign of Charles II., on the site of an ancient seat of the Boteler family.

BADMINTON (LITTLE), a tything in the parish of HAWKESBURY, upper division of the hundred of GRUMBALD'S ASH, county of GLOUCESTER, containing 97 inhabitants. Here was a chapel to the vicarage of Great Badminton, now desecrated.

BADSEY, a parish in the upper division of the hundred of BLACKENHURST, county of WORCESTER, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. by S.) from Evesham, containing, with the hamlet of Aldington, 421 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the peculiar jurisdiction of the Bishop of Worcester, rated in the king's books at £5. 6. 8., and in the patronage of the Dean and Canons of Christ Church, Oxford. The church is dedicated to St. James. The navigable river Avon runs along the border of the parish, and receives here a small brook, which in its course turns several mills, including a silk-mill. There is a small endowed school for the instruction of poor boys. Within the limits of the parish are some mineral springs, but their properties are not thoroughly known.

BADSHOT, a tything in the parish and hundred of FARNHAM, county of SURREY, 2 miles (N. E. by E.) from Farnham, containing, with Runfold, 869 inhabitants.

BADSWORTH, a parish in the upper division of the wapentake of OSGOLDCROSS, West riding of the county of YORK, comprising the townships of Badsworth, Thorp-Audling, and Upton, and containing 728 inhabitants, of which number, 200 are in the township of Badsworth, 5 miles (S.) from Pontefract. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of York, rated in the king's books at £32. 5. 10., and in the patronage of the Earl of Derby. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. A school is endowed with £5 per annum.

BADWELL-ASH, a parish in the hundred of BLACKBOURN, county of SUFFOLK, 8 miles (N. N. W.) from Stow-Market, containing 427 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Suffolk, and diocese of Norwich, endowed with £16 per annum private benefaction, and £800 royal bounty, and in the patronage of Miss Clough. The church is dedicated to St. Mary.

BAGBOROUGH (WEST), a parish in the hundred of TAUNTON and TAUNTON-DEAN, county of SOMERSET, $8\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W. by W.) from Taunton, containing, with the hamlet of East Bagborough, 421 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Taunton, and diocese of Bath and Wells, rated in the king's books at £18. 10. 10., and in the patronage of the Rev. J. Guerin. The church is dedicated to the Holy Trinity.

BAGBY, a chapelry in the parish of KIRBY-KNOWLE, wapentake of BIRDFOORTH, North riding of the county of YORK, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. S. E.) from Thirsk, containing 242 inhabitants. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists.

BAGGRAVE, a liberty in that part of the parish of HUNGERTON which is in the hundred of GARTREE, county of LEICESTER, $8\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E.N.E.) from Leicester, containing 15 inhabitants.

BAGINGTON, a parish in the Kenilworth division of the hundred of KNIGHTLOW, county of WARWICK, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. by E.) from Coventry, containing 281 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Coventry, and diocese of Lichfield and Coventry, rated in the king's books at £8. 1. 8., and in the patronage of the Rev. W. D. Bromley. The church is dedicated to St. John the Baptist. Here was anciently a castle, in which the Duke of Hereford, afterwards Henry IV., lodged previously to the day appointed for the combat between him and the Duke of Norfolk, at Coventry, in the reign of Richard II.

BAGLEY-WOOD, an extra-parochial liberty, in the hundred of HORMER, county of BERKS, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. by E.) from Abingdon, containing 4 inhabitants. A monastery was founded here by Cissa, Viceroy of Centwine, ninth king of Wessex, which was removed to Abingdon, in 680, that town and its appendages having been assigned to it by Ceadwalla.

BAGNALL, a joint parish with Bucknall, in the northern division of the hundred of PIREHILL, county of STAFFORD, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N.E.) from Hanley. The population is returned with Stoke upon Trent, to which parish Bagnall formerly belonged, but was separated from it, in 1807, by an act of parliament, which constituted Bucknall a distinct rectory. The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to the rectory of Bucknall, in the archdeaconry of Stafford, and diocese of Lichfield and Coventry, endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £400 royal bounty.

BAGNOR, a joint township with Wood-Speen, in that part of the parish of SPEEN which is in the hundred of FAIRCROSS, county of BERKS, 2 miles (N.W.) from Speenhamland. The population is returned with Wood-Speen.

BAGSHOT, a chapelry in the parish of WINDLESHAM, first division of the hundred of WOKING, county of SURREY, 12 miles (N.N.W.) from Guildford, and 26 (W.S.W.) from London, on the great western road. The population is returned with the parish. The chapel, which had been destroyed by lightning, was rebuilt in 1676. This place, formerly called Holy Hall, gives name to a tract of heath land, which was anciently more extensive, a great part having been enclosed and cultivated. It was formerly the residence of some of the kings of England, who had a mansion here and a park, which was laid open after the civil war in the reign of Charles I.: it is now occupied by their Royal Highnesses, the Duke and Duchess of Gloucester. On the borders of Bagshot heath are some handsome villas, but the village contains only a few respectable houses and some good inns, and is indebted to its situation as a public thoroughfare for the traffic it enjoys.

BAGTHORPE, a parish in the hundred of GALLOW, county of NORFOLK, 7 miles (S.S.W.) from Burnham Westgate, containing 69 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Norfolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £5. 10., endowed with £400 royal bounty, and in the patronage of Sir Charles Chad, Bart. The church is dedicated to St. Mary.

BAGULEY, a township in the parish of BOWDON, hundred of BUCKLOW, county palatine of CHESTER,
VOL. I.

$6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. by S.) from Stockport, containing 458 inhabitants.

BAGWORTH, a chapelry in the parish of THORNTON, hundred of SPARKENHOE, county of LEICESTER, 5 miles (N.E.) from Market-Bosworth, containing, with the extra-parochial liberty of Bagworth Park, 389 inhabitants. The chapel is dedicated to the Holy Rood.

BAGWORTH PARK, an extra-parochial liberty, in the hundred of SPARKENHOE, county of LEICESTER, 5 miles (E.N.E.) from Market-Bosworth. The population is returned with Bagworth.

BAILDON, a chapelry in that part of the parish of OTLEY which is in the upper division of the wapentake of SKYRACK, West riding of the county of YORK, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. by W.) from Bradford, containing 2679 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry and diocese of York, endowed with £200 private benefaction, £200 royal bounty, and £400 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Vicar of Otley. The chapel is dedicated to St. Giles. A new church, or chapel, is about to be erected here by the parliamentary commissioners. Within the limits of the chapelry are numerous manufactories for worsted, woollen, and cotton goods, and some business is done in malt and the making of nails.

BAILEY, a joint township with Aighton and Chaigley, in that part of the parish of MITTON which is in the lower division of the hundred of BLACKBURN, county palatine of LANCASTER, 8 miles (N.) from Blackburn. The population is returned with Aighton.

BAILIE, a township in the parish of BEWCASTLE, ESKDALE ward, county of CUMBERLAND, 5 miles (E.N.E.) from Longtown, containing 386 inhabitants. The scenery is of a romantic description, and there is a long range of lofty crags, which extends to the point where the kingdom of Scotland and the counties of Cumberland and Northumberland meet.

BAINBRIDGE, a township in the parish of AYSGARTH, western division of the wapentake of HANG, North riding of the county of YORK, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (S.W.) from Askrigg, containing 872 inhabitants. The village is situated upon the river Ure, which is here crossed by a good stone bridge of three arches. A free grammar school was founded by Anthony Besson, Esq., in the 43rd of Queen Elizabeth. In this township there exists a custom of blowing a horn every night at ten o'clock, from September 27th to Shrovetide, intended as a signal to the benighted traveller, and said to have originated when the country was an open forest. On a neighbouring eminence, called Brough Hill, are vestiges of a Roman fortress, near which, among other relics, a statue of the Emperor Commodus was found.

BAINTON, a chapelry in the parish of UFFORD, liberty of PETERBOROUGH, county of NORTHAMPTON, 5 miles (N. by E.) from Wansford, containing 162 inhabitants. The chapel, dedicated to St. Mary, exhibits some interesting specimens of early English architecture.

BAINTON, a hamlet in the parish of STOKE-LYNE, hundred of PLOUGHLEY, county of OXFORD, 3 miles (N.) from Bicester, containing 58 inhabitants.

BAINTON, a parish in the Bainton-Beacon division of the wapentake of HARTHILL, East riding of the county of YORK, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S.W.) from Great Driffield, containing 300 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of the East riding, and diocese of York, rated in the king's books at £35. 14. 9½., and in the patronage of the President and Fellows of St. John's College, Oxford. The church is dedicated to St. Andrew. There are places of worship for Primitive and Wesleyan Methodists. The petty sessions for the Bainton-Beacon division are held here. A beacon was anciently erected on an eminence near the village, to give notice of approaching danger, and hence the name given to this division of the wapentake.

BAKEWELL, a parish in the hundred of HIGH PEAK, county of DERBY, comprising the market town of Bakewell, the chapelrys of Ashford, Baslow, Beeley, Blackwell, Buxton, Chelmerton, Great Longstone, Monyash, Sheldon, and Taddington, the townships of Brushfield, Bubnell, Flagg, Froggatt, Over Haddon, Harthill, Holme, Priestcliffe, Rowland, Great Rowsley, and Wardlow, and the hamlets of Calver, Curbar, Hassop, and Little Longstone, and containing 9162 inhabitants, of which number, 1782 are in the town of Bakewell, 26 miles (N. W.) from Derby, and 152 (N. W. by N.) from London. The Saxon name of this place, Baderanwylla, or Badde cum Well, of which its present appellation is a contraction, is derived from a chalybeate spring, which was in great repute prior to the year 924, when Edward the Elder is said to have built a castle, or fort, in the vicinity. The town, which is in an improving state, is situated in a beautiful and picturesque vale, about four miles from the confluence of the rivers Wye and Derwent, and at nearly an equal distance from Buxton and Matlock, between which places is an excellent turnpike road, leading through a district replete with pleasingly diversified scenery. The river Wye, which flows through the town, abounds with fine trout and grayling, and is much frequented for angling during the season. The air is salubrious, and the inhabitants are amply supplied with water from numerous springs in the neighbourhood. An Agricultural Society has recently been formed, the members of which hold their meetings at Bakewell and Chesterfield alternately, generally in October. The chalybeate baths, lately re-established by the Duke of Rutland, and now in the occupation of Mr. White Watson, F.L.S., who has a good collection of minerals and fossils attached to them, constitute one of the greatest attractions: the principal bath is thirty-three feet long, sixteen wide, and of proportionate depth, and is constantly supplied with fresh water, which, on its influx, emits a considerable quantity of carbonic acid gas, and possesses a temperature of 60° of Fahrenheit. There are also shower baths, and a private warm bath with suitable accommodations; and a news-room has been added to the establishment. Near the entrance into the town from Ashford stands a cotton-mill, erected by the late Sir Richard Arkwright, in which about three hundred persons are employed; and in the immediate vicinity are extensive quarries of black and grey marble, and of chert, which is used in the Staffordshire potteries, in manufacturing earthenware. The market is on Friday, and on every alternate Monday there is a cattle market, which was established in 1825, and is now extremely well supplied with store and fat cattle and sheep. Fairs are held on Easter-Monday, Whit-Monday, August 26th, the Monday next after October 10th, and the Monday after November 11th, for horses and horned cattle. The town is within the jurisdiction of the county magistrates, and a constable and other officers are appointed at the court leet of the lord of the manor. One of the quarter sessions for the county was formerly, and a petty session for the hundred of High Peak, on the first and third Friday in every month, is still, held here. A mineral court is also held for the manor, according to the local articles and customs of the lead mines within it, which have prevailed from time immemorial. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the peculiar jurisdiction and patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Lichfield, rated in the king's books at £40. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a spacious cruciform structure, partly in the Norman, and partly in the early style of English architecture: the tower, rising from the intersection, and surmounted by a lofty spire, having become in a dangerous state from the failure of the pillars that supported it, has been lately taken down: at the western entrance is a highly ornamented Norman arch. Within are several magnificent altar-tombs of alabaster, supporting recumbent figures, and a stone font of great antiquity; and in the churchyard is an ancient cross, decorated with rude sculpture, but greatly mutilated. There are places of worship for Independents and Wesleyan Methodists. A free school was founded here, in 1636, and endowed with £15 per annum, by Lady Grace Manners, for the instruction of poor children in reading, writing, and arithmetic; the original endowment has been augmented with £35 per annum by the Duke of Rutland, and the school is now open to the poor children of this parish and Great Rowsley: the school-room is over the town-hall. Mary Hague, in 1715, gave certain houses and land, for which seven poor children are instructed, the master occupying one of the houses. St. John's hospital, for six aged men, was founded and endowed, in 1602, by Sir John Manners Sutton and his brother: the income amounts to £40 per annum. A dispensary and a lying-in institution have been established, and are supported by subscription. At the distance of two miles south of the town stands Haddon Hall, the property of the Duke of Rutland, lord of this manor, one of the largest and most perfect of the ancient baronial mansions in the kingdom; about three miles toward the north-east is Chatsworth House, the princely seat of the Duke of Devonshire, in which Mary, Queen of Scots, was confined in the year 1570; and about two miles and a half to the north is Hassop Hall, the seat of Earl Newburgh. Dr. Thomas Denman, an eminent physician and accoucheur, and father of the present Sir Thomas Denman, Attorney-general, was born here in 1733.

BALBY, a joint township with Hexthorp, in that part of the parish of DONCASTER which is in the soke of DONCASTER, West riding of the county of YORK, 1½ mile (S. S. W.) from Doncaster, containing, with Hexthorp, 392 inhabitants. The first meetings of the Society of Friends, under their founder, George Fox, were held here, and in the neighbouring village of Warmsworth.

BALCOMB, a parish partly in the hundred of STREET, but chiefly in the hundred of BUTTINGHILL, rape of LEWES, county of SUSSEX, 4½ miles (N.) from Cuckfield, containing 606 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Lewes, and diocese of Chichester, rated in the king's books at £15. 18. 6½., and in the patronage of the Rev. Dr. Bethune. The church is dedicated to St. Mary.

BALDERSBY, a township in that part of the parish of TOPCLIFFE which is in the wapentake of HAL-LELD, North riding of the county of YORK, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. N. E.) from Ripon, containing 241 inhabitants. Here is a school with a small endowment, bequeathed by the Rev. Mr. Day, in 1764.

BALDERSTON, a chapelry in the parish, and lower division of the hundred, of BLACKBURN, county palatine of LANCASTER, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. N. E.) from Preston, containing 705 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Chester, endowed with £400 private benefaction, and £400 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Vicar of Blackburn. The chapel is dedicated to St. Leonard.

BALDERTON, a parish in the southern division of the wapentake of NEWARK, county of NOTTINGHAM, 2 miles (S. E.) from Newark, containing 773 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to the vicarage of Farndon, in the archdeaconry of Nottingham, and diocese of York. The church, dedicated to St. Giles, is a very handsome edifice, principally in the later style of English architecture, with a lofty spire: it has a richly ornamented Norman porch of exceeding beauty and in good preservation. A school for the instruction of twelve boys and ten girls has been endowed by William Alvey with a rent-charge of £8.

BALDOCK, a market town and parish in the hundred of BROADWATER, county of HERTFORD, 18 miles (N. by W.) from Hertford, and 37 (N. by W.) from London, on the great north road, containing 1550 inhabitants. This place, in the reign of Stephen, belonged to the Knights Templars, to whom Gilbert, Earl of Pembroke, gave the site, which, in a charter of confirmation granted by his descendant William, is called Baudoc, of which the present name is a variation; though some antiquaries derive it from Balbec, supposing the town to have been so called by the Templars, in memory of the city of that name in Syria, from which their order had been expelled by the Saracens. The town is situated near the intersection of the great north road and the Roman Ikniel-street, between two hills, which command an extensive view of a fine open country: it consists principally of one street, the houses in which are mostly ancient, interspersed with several of modern erection, and is amply supplied with water. A horticultural society, patronised by the nobility and gentry in the neighbourhood, was established in 1825. The trade is principally in malt, the land in the vicinity being highly favourable to the growth of barley: the fens and marsh land near the town form an extensive grazing district, and a great quantity of cheese of a peculiar quality is made here; there is also a very large public brewery. The general market, which was on Saturday, has been discontinued, and a market, exclusively for the sale of straw-plat, is now held on Friday. The fairs are on the festivals of St. James, St. Andrew, and St. Matthew, each continuing two days; at the last a great quantity of cheese is sold. The county magistrates hold a petty session on the first Monday in every month: constables and other officers are appointed at the court leet of the lord of the manor. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Huntingdon, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £10. 8. 9., endowed with £800 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Crown. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, was built by the Knights Templars, and nearly rebuilt in the early part of the fifteenth century: it is a spacious structure, partly in the Norman style, and partly in the later style of English architecture, with an octagonal steeple rebuilt a few years ago, and contains a finely carved oak screen, part of the ancient rood-loft, and a very curious font. There are places of worship for the Society of Friends, Independents, and Wesleyan Methodists. Almshouses for twelve aged widows were founded and endowed, in 1621, by Mr. John Winne. In cutting through Baldock hill, to form a new turnpike road, a great number of fossils, consisting of cornua ammonis, sharks' teeth, &c., were discovered.

BALDON-MARSH, a parish in the hundred of BULLINGTON, county of OXFORD, 6 miles (S. E. by S.) from Oxford, containing 312 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, within the jurisdiction of the peculiar court of Dorchester, rated in the king's books at £6. 13. 4., and in the patronage of Sir H. P. Willoughby, Bart. The church is dedicated to St. Peter. Elizabeth Lane, in 1770, bequeathed land, producing £6 per annum, for teaching six boys and six girls to read.

BALDON - TOOT, a parish in the hundred of BULLINGTON, county of OXFORD, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. E.) from Oxford, containing 258 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, within the jurisdiction of the peculiar court of Dorchester, and in the patronage of the Rector of Baldon-Marsh. The church is dedicated to St. Lawrence.

BALE, or BAITHLEY, a parish in the hundred of HOLT, county of NORFOLK, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. by S.) from Holt, containing 265 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, united to that of Gunthorpe, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £10. 13. 4. The church is dedicated to All Saints. Here was anciently a chapel, dedicated to St. Botolph.

BALK, a township in the parish of KIRBY-KNOWLE, wapentake of BIRDFORTH, North riding of the county of YORK, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. S. E.) from Thirsk, containing 125 inhabitants.

BALKHOLME, a township in the parish of HOWDEN, wapentake of HOWDENSHERE, East riding of the county of YORK, 3 miles (E.) from Howden, containing 105 inhabitants.

BALLIDON, a chapelry in that part of the parish of BRADBORNE which is in the hundred of WIRKSWORTH, county of DERBY, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. N. E.) from Ashbourn, containing 102 inhabitants. This chapelry is in the honour of Tutbury, duchy of Lancaster, and within the jurisdiction of a court of pleas held at Tutbury every third Tuesday, for the recovery of debts under 40s.

BALLINGDON, a parochial chapelry in the hundred of HINCKFORD, county of ESSEX, $\frac{1}{2}$ a mile (S. W. by W.) from Sudbury, containing, with Brundon, 662 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, consolidated with the rectory of Brundon, in the archdeaconry of Middlesex, and diocese of London. The chapel was made parochial in consequence of the decay of the church at Brundon, and all ecclesiastical rites for that parish are now performed here.

BALLINGHAM, a parish in the upper division of the hundred of WORMELOW, county of HEREFORD, 7 miles (N. by W.) from Ross, containing 127 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Hereford, endowed with £30 per annum private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Vicar of Lugwardine.

BALNE, a township in that part of the parish of SNAITH which is in the lower division of the wapentake of OSGOLDCROSS, West riding of the county of YORK, 5½ miles (S. W. by W.) from Snaith, containing 329 inhabitants.

BALSALL, a chapelry in the parish of HAMPTON in ARDEN, Solihull division of the hundred of HEMLINGFORD, county of WARWICK, 4½ miles (S. E. by E.) from Solihull, containing 1056 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, within the peculiar jurisdiction of the manorial court of Balsall-Temple, and in the patronage of the Governors of Balsall Hospital. The chapel, dedicated to St. Mary, formerly belonged to a Society of Knights Templars, and, about 1823, was repaired at an expense of £979. Lady Katherine Leveson, of Trentham, in the county of Stafford, by will dated in 1670, devised the manor of Temple-Balsall to twelve trustees, for the erection and endowment of an hospital for twenty poor women of the chapelry, directing that £8 per annum should be paid to each of the almswomen, and £20 per annum to a minister, for reading prayers to them and for teaching twenty poor boys. By an act passed in the 1st of Queen Anne, for the better government of this hospital, it was incorporated, under the name of "The Hospital of the Lady Katherine Leveson," and eleven trustees were appointed, with power to enlarge the buildings and increase the number of inmates, which now amounts to thirty. The establishment consists of a master, under-master, an apothecary, a matron, and a nurse. The master, in addition to his salary, receives from the funds of the hospital £50 per annum, as perpetual curate of Balsall: a stipend of £50 per annum is also paid to the vicar of Long Itchington. The annual receipts of the charity now amount to about £1500.

BALSCOTT, a hamlet in the parish of WROXTON, hundred of BLOXHAM, county of OXFORD, 5 miles (W. N. W.) from Banbury, containing 314 inhabitants.

BALSHAM, a parish in the hundred of RADFIELD, county of CAMBRIDGE, 4 miles (N. E. by N.) from Lincoln, containing 959 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the peculiar jurisdiction and patronage of the Governors of the Charter-house, London, rated in the king's books at £39. 16. 8. The church is dedicated to the Holy Trinity. A little westward from the village are Gogmagog hills, on the summit of which there are remains of a circular camp with a double rampart, supposed to be British. Hugh de Balsham, founder of Peter-house College, Cambridge, was born here.

BALTONSBOROUGH, a parish in the hundred of GLASTON-TWELVE-HIDES, county of SOMERSET, 5 miles (S. E.) from Glastonbury, containing 671 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to the vicarage of Butleigh, in the exempt jurisdiction of Glastonbury, which belongs to the Bishop of Bath and Wells. The church is dedicated to St. Dunstan.

BAMBROUGH, a parish in the northern division of BAMBROUGH ward, county of NORTHUMBERLAND, comprising the chapelries of Beadnell and Lucker, and the townships of Adderstone, Bambrough, Bambrough-Castle, Bradford, Budle, Burton, Elford, Fleetham, Glororum, Hoppen, Mouson, Newham, Newstead, Outchester, Ratchwood, Shoston, Spindleston, North Sunderland, Swinhoe, Tuggal, Warrenton, and Warnford, and containing 3342 inhabitants, of which number, 342 are in the township of Bambrough, 4½ miles (E. by N.) from Belford. Bambrough, originally called Bebbanburg, was, prior to the Conquest, a royal Saxon burgh, and the residence of several of the kings of Northumbria. It sent two members to parliament in the 23rd of Edward I., and, in the reign of Edward III., furnished one ship for the expedition against Calais: it had also a market, which has long been discontinued. The surrounding district, formerly called Bambroughshire, was a separate franchise, in the possession of various privileges, now become obsolete. The village occupies an airy and pleasant situation near the sea and Budle bay. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Northumberland, and diocese of Durham, endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £500 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Trustees of Lord Crewe. The church, dedicated to St. Aidan, was, with another long since desecrated, given by Henry I. to the priory of Nosthall in Yorkshire, whereupon a small convent of Augustine canons was founded here, in 1137, as a cell to that priory, the revenue of which, at the dissolution, was £124. 15. 7. There were also a college, an hospital dedicated to St. Mary Magdalene, and a house of Preaching friars.

BAMBROUGH-CASTLE, a township in the parish, and northern division of the ward, of BAMBROUGH, county of NORTHUMBERLAND, 5 miles (E. by N.) from Belford, containing 62 inhabitants. This township is principally distinguished for its castle, built about the middle of the sixth century, by Ida, the first Anglo-Saxon king of Northumbria. In 642, it was besieged by Penda, King of Mercia, who, after an unsuccessful attempt to set it on fire, was compelled to retreat. In the beginning of the eighth century, Berthfrid, guardian of Osred, the young Northumbrian king, defended it against the usurper Eadulph, who was taken prisoner and put to death. It was plundered and almost demolished by the Danes, in 993, but was soon afterwards restored. After the Norman Conquest, it was held by Robert de Mowbray, on whose insurrection against William Rufus it was besieged, and, after an obstinate defence, surrendered to that monarch, who threatened, unless it were given up, to put out the eyes of Mowbray, who had been taken prisoner. During the war between Stephen and the Empress Matilda, and the protracted struggle between the houses of York and Lancaster, this castle sustained repeated sieges, and at length became dilapidated, in the reign of Henry VII. The castle and manor were granted, in the reign of James II., to John Forster, Esq., one of whose descendants having joined the Pretender, they were confiscated to the crown, and were purchased by his relative, Lord Crewe, Bishop of Durham, who, in 1720, devised this estate to trustees for charitable uses. Under the direction of Dr. Sharp, Archdeacon of Durham, the castle was repaired in 1757, and apartments were prepared, in which one of the trustees, who superintends the establishment, constantly resides. It is situated on the summit of a steep rock, which projects into the sea, and rises perpendicularly to the height of one hundred and fifty feet above low water mark, and is accessible only on the south-east side, where is the ancient gateway, flanked with a circular tower on each side, and formerly defended by a trench cut through a narrow isthmus communicating with the main land. Within a short distance of this is a more modern gateway, with a portcullis; and a little further on is a round tower. The keep, which is of Norman architecture, and the most ancient part of the building, is a lofty square structure. In 1773, the ruins of a church, or chapel, erected in the castle by King Oswald, were discovered, and the font, richly carved, is preserved, among other curiosities, in the keep. In the upper part of the building are granaries, in which corn is stored to be sold to the poor in times of scarcity; and a market is opened every Tuesday and Friday, when the industrious poor are supplied with meat and grocery at the cost price. In another part of the castle is an infirmary, with a resident surgeon; the average annual number of in-patients is about thirty-five, and of out-patients upwards of one thousand. There are also two schools, in which about one hundred and sixty children of both sexes are taught on Dr. Bell's system; thirty of the girls are clothed and lodged in the castle till they are fit for service. In 1778, the trustees founded a library in the castle, to which the late Dr. Sharp bequeathed the whole of his valuable collection of books, including the greater part of the library of Dr. Sharp, Archbishop of York. But the principal object of this charitable establishment is to afford assistance to shipwrecked mariners, for whose reception, apartments comfortably furnished, and containing thirty beds, are always kept in readiness; patrols are constantly stationed along the coast in stormy nights, and when vessels are observed to be in distress, signals are made from the summit of the tower to the fishermen at Holy Island, who are rewarded for their services by the trustees.

BAMBURGH, county of LINCOLN.—See BAUMBER.

BAMFORD, a hamlet in the parish of HATHERSAGE, hundred of HIGH PEAK, county of DERBY, 6½ miles (N. by W.) from Stoney-Middleton, containing 263 inhabitants.

BAMFORD, a joint township with Birtle, in the parish of MIDDLETON, hundred of SALFORD, county palatine of LANCASTER, 3 miles (W. S. W.) from Rochdale. The population is returned with Birtle.

BAMPTON, a market town and parish in the hundred of BAMPTON, county of DEVON, 21 miles (N. by E.) from Exeter, and 162 (W. by S.) from London, containing 1633 inhabitants. Bampton is supposed by Bishop Gibson to have been the Beamdune of the Saxon Chronicle, where, in 614, the Britons were defeated with great slaughter by Cynegils, King of the West Saxons. Other antiquaries, referring this event to Bindon in Dorset, derive its names Bathern-town and Bathrumpton from the river Bathern, which flows into the Exe, about three quarters of a mile below the town, whence, by contraction, its present appellation is obtained. The town is pleasantly situated in a vale watered by the river; the houses are of stone, irregularly built, and the inhabitants are amply supplied with water. The principal branch of manufacture is that of serge; and freestones and limestone are obtained in the parish.

The market is on Wednesday and Saturday; and fairs are held on Whit-Tuesday, the Wednesday before Lady-day, the last Thursday in October, and the first Tuesday in November; at the two last a great number of sheep are sold, which, from the excellence of the pastures, are remarkable for size and flavour. Two portreeves, two constables, and other officers, are chosen annually by the householders. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Exeter, rated in the king's books at £21. 11., endowed with £400 private benefaction, £400 royal bounty, and £400 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of Charles Chichester, Esq. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a spacious structure, in the early style of English architecture, containing several monuments to the Earls of Bath. At Pitton, four miles distant from the church, there is a chapel, in which divine service is performed once a month; and at Shillingford are the remains of another chapel. There are places of worship for Particular Baptists and Independents. A charity school has been lately built and endowed by Mrs. Penton, in which one hundred children are educated. In the vicinity is a chalybeate spring, strongly impregnated with iron. The site of an ancient castle, erected in 1336, by a member of the family of Cogan, is still discernible. John de Bampton, a Carmelite monk, and the first who read Aristotle publicly at Cambridge, was a native of this town.

BAMPTON, a market town and parish in the hundred of BAMPTON, county of OXFORD, 16 miles (W. by S.) from Oxford, and 70 (W. N. W.) from London, comprising the chapelry of Shifford, and the hamlets of Aston with Cote, Chimney, and part of that of Bright-Hampton, and containing 2304 inhabitants. This place, called by the Saxons Bemtune, was a town of some importance during the Octarchy, and, in the reign of Edward the Confessor, was annexed to the diocese of Exeter, by Leofric, chaplain to that monarch, and first bishop of the see. The town is situated near the river Isis, on which there are some convenient wharfs: the houses are neatly built, and the inhabitants are plentifully supplied with water, which springs through a gravelly soil; there are a subscription library and a news-room. The trade formerly consisted in supplying the counties of Bucks, Dorset, and Wilts with leather prepared by the fellmongers at Witney: the manufacture of leather was subsequently established here, but it has greatly declined. The market has recently fallen into disuse: a fair is held on the 26th and 27th of August, the former day being for the sale of horses. Constables and other officers are appointed at the court leet of the joint proprietors of the manor. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford, in three portions, each rated in the king's books at £10. 0. 10., and in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Exeter. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a spacious ancient structure, containing some interesting monuments. The free school was founded, in 1635, by Mr. Robert Vesey, of Chimney, in this parish, who endowed it with £200, which, with subsequent benefactions, purchased eight acres of land, now let for £30 per annum: in 1784, £400 stock was given for the instruction of ten additional scholars. The school is under the inspection of the vicars, portionists of Bampton, who appoint the master: the premises comprise a school-room, house, and garden. A National school is partly supported by an endowment, and partly by subscription; the present income is about £45 per annum. There are slight remains of an ancient castle, supposed to have been erected in the reign of John. Phillips, the author of the Splendid Shilling, a poem on Cider, &c., was born here, in 1676.

BAMPTON, a parish in West ward, county of WESTMORLAND, $9\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N.W.) from Orton, containing 614 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Carlisle, rated in the king's books at £7. 5., endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £400 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Crown. The church, dedicated to St. Patrick, was rebuilt on the site of the former, in 1726: the vicarage-house was rebuilt also, about the same period, by Dr. Gibson, Bishop of London. The river Lowther runs through the parish, in which is a beautiful lake, called Haweswater, about three miles long, and half a mile broad, its summit being environed by an assemblage of lofty mountains, its eastern side sheltered by well-planted rocky eminences, and its western bordered by cultivated fields. A lead mine has been discovered, but it is not yet fully explored; and limestone is obtained in the parish. The free grammar school was founded, in 1627, by Thomas Sutton, D.D., who vested in trustees the sum of £500, collected in the parish of St. Saviour, Southwark, and other places, with which certain tithes were purchased, now let by the master, and producing about £60 annually: the school is free for all the children of the parish: other benefactions for the purchase of books have been added. A school at Roughill, in this parish, was founded by Edmund Noble, and endowed with £9. 15. 10. per annum. At Measand there is a school, founded in 1723, by Richard Wright, and endowed with property producing £50 per annum. Here are also three parochial libraries, established respectively in 1710, 1750, and 1757, and comprising in the aggregate upwards of eight hundred volumes; and there are some minor bequests for the benefit of the poor. Thomas Gibson, M.D., who married the daughter of Richard Cromwell, son of the Protector, physician-general to the army, and author of a "System of Anatomy," was a native of High Knipe, in this parish, where also was born, in 1669, his nephew, Edmund Gibson, D.D., Bishop of London, and editor of two improved editions of Camden's Britannia, and various other learned works.

BAMPTON (KIRK), a parish in the ward and county of CUMBERLAND, comprising the townships of Kirk-Bampton, Little Bampton, and Oughterby, and containing 470 inhabitants, of which number, 193 are in the township of Kirk-Bampton, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W.) from Carlisle. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Carlisle, rated in the king's books at £14. 17. 10., endowed with £400 parliamentary grant, and in the alternate patronage of the Earl of Lonsdale and Sir Wastel Brisco, Bart. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is an ancient edifice. There are two chalybeate springs in the parish, one of them discovered in 1826, near Fingland Rigg.

BAMPTON (LITTLE), a township in the parish of Kirk-Bampton, ward and county of CUMBERLAND, 5 miles (N. by E.) from Wigton, containing 172 inhabitants.

BANBURY, a borough, market town, and parish, having separate jurisdiction, locally in the hundred of Banbury, county of OXFORD, 22 miles (N.) from Oxford, and 73 (N.W.) from London, containing, with the hamlet of Neithrop, 5247 inhabitants. This place, by the Saxons called Banesbyrig, of which its present name is a contraction, is supposed to have been occupied by the Romans, and this opinion has been confirmed by the discovery of some Roman coins and an altar. A castle was built here, about 1153, by Alexander, Bishop of Lincoln, which continued an episcopal residence till the first year of the reign of Edward VI. "In this castle," says Leland, "is a terrible prison for convict men." During the war between the houses of York and Lancaster the neighbourhood was the scene of frequent conflicts: the most disastrous of these was the battle of Banbury, fought, in 1469, on a plain called Danesmore, near Edgecote, a village about three miles distant, between the forces under the celebrated Earl of Warwick, and a numerous army, which, under the command of the Earls of Pembroke and Stafford, had obtained possession of the town. The Yorkists were defeated; Pembroke and his brother, Sir Richard Herbert, were both taken and beheaded, and in a few days Edward IV. himself was made prisoner. At the commencement of the war between Charles I. and the parliament, the inhabitants espoused the cause of the latter, by whom the castle was garrisoned. After the battle of Edgehill, it was taken by the royalists, and defended by Sir William Compton, against Col. John Fiennes, the parliamentary officer, for thirteen weeks, till the garrison was relieved by the Earl of Northampton. It was afterwards besieged by Col. Whalley for ten weeks, when the king having joined the Scottish army, it was surrendered on honourable terms. Of this fortress, a stone vault with grated windows, supposed to have been the dungeon, and traces of the inner ditch, existed in Leland's time, and there are still some vestiges. The town is pleasantly situated in a fertile valley, on the banks of the small river Cherwell, and has been greatly improved under an act of parliament passed in the fourth year of the reign of George IV.: the houses are well built, the streets lighted with oil, and the inhabitants plentifully supplied with water. There is a public subscription library. The manufacture of plush shag and girth-webbing was formerly carried on to a considerable extent, but has greatly declined. A great quantity of cheese of a very superior quality is made, for which, and for its well-known cakes, Banbury has long been famous. The Oxford canal comes up to the town. The market, which was greatly celebrated in the time of Henry VIII., is on Thursday: fairs are held on January 22nd, March 5th, April 9th, May 28th, June 18th, July 9th, August 13th, September 10th, October 5th and 30th, and December 17th. The government, by charter of incorporation granted by Mary, confirmed by James, and enlarged by George I., is vested in a mayor, high steward, recorder, twelve aldermen, six capital burgesses, and thirty assistants, with a town clerk, chamberlain, and other officers.

The mayor, who is elected from among the aldermen, on the first Monday in September, and two of the aldermen, are justices of the peace within the borough, and hold regularly a petty session every Monday, and a general session twice a year. The corporation possess the power of holding a court of record for the recovery of debts under £40, but have discontinued the exercise of it. The elective franchise was conferred in the reign of Mary, since which time the borough has returned one member to parliament: the right of election is vested in the mayor and capital burgesses; the mayor is the returning officer, and the influence of the Marquis of Bute predominates.

The living is a discharged vicarage, within the jurisdiction of the peculiar court of Banbury, rated in the king's books at £22. 0. 2., endowed with £200 private benefaction, £400 royal bounty, and £600 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Bishop of Oxford. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a very handsome and spacious structure, rebuilt under the authority of an act of parliament obtained in 1790, at an expense of nearly £30,000. There are places of worship for the Society of Friends, Independents, Wesleyan Methodists, and Unitarians. A free grammar school, which formerly existed here, was held in such high estimation, that the statutes of St. Paul's school, London, are said to have been drawn up on the model of those of Banbury school. One of the masters, Mr. Stanbridge, was tutor to the celebrated Sir Thomas Pope; and so great was the fame which this institution had acquired, that the statutes of the free grammar school at Manchester, dated 1524, ordain that grammar be there taught "after the manner of the school at Banbury, in Oxfordshire, which is called Stanbridge grammar." This school has been wholly abandoned for many years, and the building, formerly called the Church School, let on lease by the corporation. A Blue-coat school, established by subscription in 1705, and endowed with property to the amount of £80 per annum, was, in 1807, incorporated with a National school formed in that year, to which a Sunday school is attached, supported by the interest of £295. 1. 6. three per cent. consols., purchased by a legacy of £200 under the will of Sir John Knightley. An unendowed almshouse was rebuilt by Francis, Lord Guildford, for twelve poor persons, who are appointed by the corporation, eight of them receiving also part of a charitable fund called the widow's groats. Various other charities are periodically distributed, and certain lands are especially set apart for repairing the bridge, highways, &c. An ancient hospital, dedicated to St. John, has been converted into a farm-house. Adjoining the Ram Inn there is a sulphureous well, and, at a short distance from the town, a chalybeate spring. The pyrites aureus, or golden fire-stone, is frequently found in digging wells. There is also an amphitheatre, called the "Bear Garden," having two rows of seats cut in the rising ground; and on Crouch hill, a mile westward, are vestiges of a circular intrenchment, the site of which was chosen for an encampment by Sir W. Waller, in 1644.

BANHAM, a parish in the hundred of GUILT-CROSS, county of NORFOLK, 5½ miles (E. by N.) from East Harling, containing 1195 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Norfolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £9. 3. 6½, and in the patronage of the Crown. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. The parochial school has a small endowment.

BANKFEE, or SOUTH-FIELD, a hamlet in the parish of LONGBOROUGH, upper division of the hundred of KIFTSGATE, county of GLOUCESTER, 1½ mile (N. by W.) from Stow on the Wold. The population is returned with the parish.

BANKS, a township in the parish of LANERCOST-ABBAY, ESKDALE ward, county of CUMBERLAND, containing 280 inhabitants.

BANNINGHAM, a parish in the southern division of the hundred of ERPINGHAM, county of NORFOLK, 2 miles (N. E.) from Aylsham, containing 256 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £10. 15. 10., and in the patronage of Sir John Lubbock, Bart.

BANSTEAD, a parish in the first division of the hundred of COPTHORNE, county of SURREY, 3½ miles (S. E. by E.) from Ewell, containing 940 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Surrey, and diocese of Winchester, rated in the king's books at £13. 8. 7½, and in the patronage of the Rev. W. Buckle. The church, dedicated to All Saints, contains several fine specimens of pointed arches, and has a handsome tower, surmounted by a lofty spire. Banstead downs, on which Epsom races are held, are remarkable for their verdure, and afford excellent pasturage for sheep, though a considerable portion of them has been brought under tillage of late years.

BANWELL, a parish in the hundred of WINTER-STOKE, county of SOMERSET, 5 miles (N. N. W.) from Axbridge, containing 1430 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, within the jurisdiction of the peculiar court of Banwell at Wells, rated in the king's books at £26. 6. 0½, and in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Bristol. The church, dedicated to St. Andrew, is a fine specimen of the later style of English architecture: among the internal decorations are a richly carved screen and rood-loft, a finely sculptured stone pulpit, and windows of stained glass. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. A monastery was founded at Banwell by one of the early Saxon kings, to the abbacy of which Alfred the Great appointed Asser, his subsequent biographer: it was entirely demolished in the Danish irruptions, and, although restored, never recovered its former splendour, having fallen to decay several years before the general suppression of religious houses. The manor has been in the possession of the Bishops of Bath and Wells since the time of Edward the Confessor, with the exception of the short reign of Edward VI., one of whom built an episcopal palace here, the remains of which, in the early part of the last century, were converted into a private residence, called Banwell Court, and the park has been divided into enclosures, which have been assigned on lease for lives: some of the leases have been lately bought up, and the ground disposed in a tasteful manner, by forming plantations, with drives conducting to pleasing and richly variegated prospects. The bishop also, in 1827, erected a cottage ornée for his own accommodation, and that of the numerous visitors which the recent discovery of two caverns in the rock, one denominated the Bone, and the other the Stalactite cavern, has attracted hither. The former, when first observed, was filled, to the depth of about eight feet, with a confused mass of bones of animals, stones, and gravel; but the rubbish has been removed, and the bones, of which there are several wagon-loads, have been fancifully disposed along the sides of the cavern, about forty feet below the body of which there is a fissure, wherein the diluvia have been permitted to remain in a promiscuous state. The Stalactite cavern exhibits fine specimens of a transparent stalactite; huge fragments of the rock lie dispersed on the floor, covered with stalagmik. In this there were found two pieces of candle, incrustated with lime, which are supposed to have been left by the miners who were last employed in working for ochre, calamine, and lead-ore, minerals which, doubtless, still exist to a considerable extent, though the mines in this part of the Mendip hills have not been opened of late years. A rich vein of iron-ore, with some cobalt and manganese, has been discovered, and the working of it commenced: the ore is conveyed to the southern coast of Wales, where the smelting-works are. The village is agreeably situated under the northern declivity of the Mendip range of hills. A spring, from which the place probably derives its name, and formerly noted for possessing a medicinal property, expands into a fine sheet of water, and, after turning a large paper and grist-mill, pursues a winding course through the valley, and empties itself into the channel, near the remains of the priory at Woodspring. Fairs for the sale of cattle are held on January 18th and July 18th. An English free school was established about 1767, and a fund for its support was raised by subscription, the produce of which is £10. 10. per annum: a schoolroom was built in 1824, at an expense of £400. Attached to this is an endowment for the instruction of ten boys belonging to the established church. William Burgess, in 1676, gave a rent-charge of £4, to accumulate for the apprenticing of a boy every seven years. The summit of a neighbouring eminence is crowned by a British earthwork, enclosing within its irregular rampart an area of about twenty acres. About a quarter of a mile from this is an intrenchment, nearly square, in the centre of which the ground is elevated in the form of a cross.

BAPCHILD, a parish in the hundred of MILTON, lathe of SCRAY, county of KENT, $1\frac{1}{4}$ mile (E. S. E.) from Sittingbourne, containing 307 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Canterbury, rated in the king's books at £8, endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Chichester. The church, dedicated to St. Lawrence, is principally in the early style of English architecture, with modern insertions. Ecclesiastical councils were held here during the Saxon Octarchy, in commemoration of one of which, convened under Archbishop Brightwald, in 794, an oratory, or chapel, was erected, of which there are still some remains. There is a small endowment for the education of poor children.

BAPTON, a tything in the parish of FISHERTON de la MERE, hundred of WARMINSTER, though locally in the hundred of Dunworth, county of WILTS, 6 miles (N. by E.) from Hindon. The population is returned with the parish.

BARBON, a chapelry in the parish of KIRKBY-LONSDALE, LONSDALE ward, county of WESTMORLAND, 4 miles (N. N. E.) from Kirkby-Lonsdale, containing 348 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Richmond, and diocese of Chester, endowed with £800 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Vicar of Kirkby-Lonsdale. The chapel, and a schoolroom adjoining it, were built partly by subscription, and partly by means of a rate, in 1815; the school has an endowment bequeathed by John Garnett, in 1721.

BARBY, a parish in the hundred of FAWSLEY, county of NORTHAMPTON, $5\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. N. W.) from Daventry, containing, with the hamlet of Onely, 645 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Northampton, and diocese of Peterborough, rated in the king's books at £30. 2. 11., and in the patronage of the Rev. C. Williams. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. The Oxford canal crosses the parish. Property for charitable uses is vested in feoffees, and out of the produce thereof £20 per annum is paid for the daily instruction of twenty-four children, and £4 per annum to the master of a Sunday school.

BARCHESTON, a parish in the Brails division of the hundred of KINGTON, county of WARWICK, $\frac{1}{2}$ a mile (E. S. E.) from Shipston upon Stour, containing, with the hamlet of Willington, 184 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Worcester, rated in the king's books at £13. 6. 8., and in the patronage of the Rev. T. L. Snow. The church is dedicated to St. Martin.

BARCOMB, a parish in the hundred of BARCOMB, rape of LEWES, county of SUSSEX, 3 miles (N. by E.) from Lewes, containing 753 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Lewes, and diocese of Chichester, rated in the king's books at £18. 10. 10., and in the patronage of the Crown. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. A school established by the late Thomas Rickman, Esq., who bequeathed to it an annuity of £20 for ten years, has since been supported by the Earl of Liverpool and Mrs. Rickman.

BARDEN, a chapelry in that part of the parish of SKIPTON which is in the eastern division of the wapentake of STAINCLIFFE and EWCROSS, West riding of the county of YORK, 8 miles (N. E. by N.) from Skipton, containing 219 inhabitants. The interest of £170, being the amount of various benefactions, is appropriated to the instruction of children and the relief of the poor.

BARDFIELD (GREAT), a parish in the hundred of FRESHWELL, county of ESSEX, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. by S.) from Thaxted, containing 887 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Colchester, and diocese of London, rated in the king's books at £11, and in the patronage of Sir C. M. Burrell, Bart. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. The navigable river Blackwater runs through the parish. In 1584, William Benlows bequeathed property, producing about £30 per annum, for the education of children and other charitable purposes, to which sundry other endowments have since been added. Petty sessions for the hundred are held here every Thursday.

BARDFIELD (LITTLE), a parish in the hundred of FRESHWELL, county of ESSEX, 3 miles (E.) from Thaxted, containing 308 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Colchester, and diocese of London, rated in the king's books at £11; and in the patronage of the heir male of the Rev. T. Bernard. The church is dedicated to St. Catherine. A school was endowed by Sarah Bernard, in 1774, for eighteen poor children, to be taught by a widow; there is also an almshouse for poor widows.

BARDFIELD-S LING, a parish in the hundred of FRESHWELL, county of ESSEX, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. E.) from Great Dunmow, containing 282 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Essex, and diocese of London. The church is dedicated to St. Margaret.

BARDNEY, a parish in the western division of the wapentake of WRAGGOE, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, 10 miles (W.) from Horncastle, containing 954 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £7, endowed with £220 private benefaction, £200 royal bounty, and £600 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Bishop of Lincoln. The church is dedicated to St. Lawrence. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. A free grammar school was founded, in 1711, by Thomas Kitchen, who endowed it, for the benefit of the children of Bardney, Bucknall, and Topholme, with a salary of £35 per annum for the master, together with a house and garden. There is also an almshouse for fourteen poor widowers and widows. A monastery founded here, in which Ethelred, King of Mercia, became a monk in 704, was destroyed by the Danes in 870; and, about the period of the Conquest, it was restored for a society of Benedictine monks, by Gilbert de Gaunt, Earl of Lincoln: the revenue, at the dissolution, amounted to £429. 7.

BARDON-PARK, an extra-parochial liberty, in the hundred of SPARKENHOE, county of LEICESTER, $9\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W. by W.) from Leicester, containing 69 inhabitants.

BARDSEA, a township in the parish of URSWICK, hundred of LONSDALE, north of the sands, county palatine of LANCASTER, 3 miles (S. by E.) from Ulverstone. The population is returned with the parish. Here are several malt-kilns, and in the neighbourhood is a copper mine. A school for the education of poor children is endowed with a rent-charge of £8, given by Wilson Braddyll, in 1781.

BARDSEY, a parish in the lower division of the wapentake of SKYRACK, West riding of the county of YORK, comprising the townships of Bardsey with Rigton, and Wothersome, and containing 372 inhabitants, of which number, 356 are in the township of Bardsey with Rigton, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. W. by S.) from Wetherby. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of York, rated in the king's books at £4. 1. 8., endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £400 royal bounty, and in the patronage of George Lane Fox, Esq. The church is dedicated to All Saints: near it is a mound, called Castle Hill, the supposed site of a Roman fortress. A school was endowed with about £18 per annum by Lord Bingley, in 1726. Congreve, the poet and dramatist, supposed to have been born in Ireland, was baptized at Bardsey, in February 1670.

BARDWELL, a parish in the hundred of BLACKBOURN, county of SUFFOLK, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. by E.) from Ixworth, containing 687 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Sudbury, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £7. 17. 1., and in the patronage of the President and Fellows of St. John's College, Oxford. The church is dedicated to St. Peter. There is a place of worship for Particular Baptists. The parochial school has a small endowment for the instruction of poor children: here is also an almshouse.

BARE, a township in that part of the parish of LANCASTER which is in the hundred of LONSDALE, south of the sands, county palatine of LANCASTER, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W. by N.) from Lancaster, containing 91 inhabitants.

BARFORD, a parish in the hundred of FOREHOE, county of NORFOLK, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N.) from Wymondham, containing 387 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory in mediety, in the archdeaconry of Norfolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £4. 8. 4., endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and respectively in the patronage of the Rev. H. Franklin and the Dean and Chapter of Norwich. The church is dedicated to St. Botolph.

BARFORD, an extra-parochial liberty, within the limits of the parish of Arthingworth, hundred of ROTHWELL, county of NORTHAMPTON, 3 miles (N. by W.) from Kettering, containing 9 inhabitants.

BARFORD, a parish in the Warwick division of the hundred of KINGTON, county of WARWICK, 3 miles (S. by W.) from Warwick, containing 671 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Worcester, rated in the king's books at £11. 11. 0 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of Mrs. Mills. The church is dedicated to St. Peter. A free school, in which about thirty boys and thirty girls are educated, is endowed with about £48 per annum, arising chiefly from the benefaction of John Beale, in 1672, and that of the Rev. Thomas Dugard, in 1677.

BARFORD (GREAT), a parish in the hundred of BARFORD, county of BEDFORD, 6 miles (E. N. E.) from Bedford, containing 635 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, united to that of Roxton, in the archdeaconry of Bedford, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £9. The church is dedicated to All Saints. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. The navigable river Ouse, here crossed by a bridge, runs along the south-eastern border of the parish.

BARFORD (GREAT), a parish in the hundred of WOOTTON, county of OXFORD, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. N. W.) from Deddington, containing 339 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford, rated in the king's books at £6. 5., endowed with £400 private benefaction, and £600 royal bounty, and in the patronage of John Hall, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Michael.

BARFORD (ST. JOHN), a chapelry in the parish of EAST ADDERBURY, hundred of BLOXHAM, county of OXFORD, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W. by W.) from Deddington, containing 123 inhabitants.

BARFORD (LITTLE), a parish in the hundred of BIGGLESWADE, county of BEDFORD, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. by W.) from St. Neots, containing 123 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Bedford, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £13. 16. 3., and in the patronage of the Rev. John Alington. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is an ancient building with a Norman arch over the south door, and a curious wooden screen between the nave and the chancel. The river Ouse forms the western boundary of the parish. Nicholas Rowe, the dramatic writer, and poet-laureat to George I., was a native of this place; he was buried with much pomp in Westminster abbey in 1718.

BARFORD (ST. MARTIN), a parish in the hundred of CAWDEN and CADWORTH, county of WILTS, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W.) from Wilton, containing 560 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Salisbury, rated in the king's books at £24. 2. 8 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of the Warden and Fellows of All Souls' College, Oxford. There is a place of worship for Independents. A parochial school is supported by subscription.

BARFORTH, a township in the parish of FORCETT, western division of the wapentake of GILLING, North riding of the county of YORK, 6 miles (E.) from Barnard-Castle, containing 141 inhabitants. Within this township, which is situated on the banks of the Tees, are the inconsiderable ruins of Old Richmond, a place formerly of some note, as is evident from the relics that are frequently dug up: the remains consist only of an old ruinous chapel, with some visible inequalities in the surface of the ground.

BARFRESTON, a parish in the hundred of EASTRY, lathe of ST. AUGUSTINE, county of KENT, 6 miles (S. by E.) from Wingham, containing 115 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Canterbury, rated in the king's books at £7. 14., endowed with £400 private benefaction, and £400 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the President and Fellows of St. John's College, Oxford. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, presents a fine specimen of Norman architecture, especially in the southern porch, which is richly ornamented with varied mouldings. It is a small building, consisting of a nave and chancel, the latter much narrower than the former, and separated from it by a large circular arch, supported by two elegant wreathed pillars: the exterior is curiously ornamented with carved stone work and circular windows and arches, particularly at the east end, which has a beautiful circular upper window; the west end has also a fine circular arch, with diagonal ornaments and sculptured rows of figures: niches for statues surround the entire building. This parish, and some adjoining it, contain numerous tumuli.

BARHAM, a parish in the hundred of LEIGHTONSTONE, county of HUNTINGDON, 6 miles (N. N. E.) from Kimbolton, containing 104 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the peculiar jurisdiction and patronage of the Prebendary of Longstow in the Cathedral Church of Lincoln, endowed with £400 royal bounty.

BARHAM, a parish in the hundred of KINGHAMFORD, lathe of ST. AUGUSTINE, county of KENT, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. E. by S.) from Canterbury, containing 912 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to the rectory of Bishopsbourne, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Canterbury. The church is dedicated to St. John the Baptist. The Canterbury races are held annually, in the month of August, on Barham downs. Barham gives the title of baron to the family of Noel.

BARHAM, a parish in the hundred of BOSMERE and CLAYDON, county of SUFFOLK, 4 miles (N. N. W.) from Ipswich, containing, with the inmates of the house of industry for the hundred, 845 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Suffolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £12. 10. 5., and in the patronage of the Rev. John Longe. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a handsome edifice with a very large chancel. The parish is bounded on the west by the navigable river Gipping. In a field, called Chapel field, the floor of an ancient chapel was lately turned up by the plough.

BARHOLME, a parish in the wapentake of Ness, parts of KESTEVEN, county of LINCOLN, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. by N.) from Market-Deeping, containing 154 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, united in 1772 to that of Stow, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £5. 11. 8., and in the patronage of the Governors of Oakham and Uppingham schools. The church is dedicated to St. Martin: from an inscription in verse the tower appears to have been erected in 1648.

BARKBY, a parish in the eastern division of the hundred of GOSCOTE, county of LEICESTER, 5 miles (N. E.) from Leicester, containing, with the chapelries of Barkby-Thorpe and North Thurmaston, 719 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Leicester, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £10, and in the patronage of George Pochin, Esq.

BARKBY-THORPE, a chapelry in the parish of BARKBY, eastern division of the hundred of GOSCOTE, county of LEICESTER, 4 miles (N. E.) from Leicester, containing 70 inhabitants.

BARKHAM, a parish in the hundred of CHARLTON, county of BERKS, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. W. by W.) from Wokingham, containing 215 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Berks, and diocese of Salisbury, rated in the king's books at £5. 15. 7 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of the Rev. H. E. St. John. The church is dedicated to St. James.

BARKING, a parish in the hundred of BECN-TREE, county of ESSEX, comprising the market town of Barking, and the wards of Chadwell, Ilford, and Ripple, and containing 6374 inhabitants, of which number, 2580 are in the town of Barking, 23 miles (S. W.) from Chelmsford, and 7 (N. E.) from London. The name of this place, formerly written Berking, is by some considered to be derived from the Saxon words Beorce, a birch tree, and Ing, a meadow; by others from Berg-Ing, signifying a fortification in the meadows, probably from an ancient intrenchment, at the distance of about a quarter of a mile on the road to Ilford, of which there are still considerable vestiges. It appears to have been of an irregular quadrilateral form, enclosing an area of more than forty-eight acres, defended on the north, south, and east sides by a single, and on the west side by a double, intrenchment, and having on the north-west, an outlet to a spring of fine water, protected by a high mound of earth. The town derived its ancient importance from a very extensive abbey, founded in 670, by Erkenwald, Bishop of London, for nuns of the Benedictine order, and dedicated to the Virgin Mary, which was governed by a long succession of abbesses, of whom many were of noble, and some of royal, descent. In 870, Barking was burnt by the Danes, the abbey destroyed, and the nuns (many of whom were massacred) dispersed. The abbey was afterwards rebuilt, about the year 970, by Edgar, whose queen Elfrida presided over it after his decease: at the dissolution its revenue amounted to £1084. 6. 2½. Of the conventual buildings there remains only the gateway, over which is the chapel of the Holy Rood: the arch is finely pointed, and enriched with deeply receding mouldings; above is a canopied niche under a fine window of three lights, the whole forming a square embattled tower, with an octagonal turret at one of the angles. It is called the Fire-bell gate, from its having anciently contained the curfew. Among the ruins of the abbey were found a fibula and a gold ring, on which were engraved the Salutation of the Virgin and the letters I. M. Soon after the Conquest, William retired to this town, till the completion of the Tower of London, which he was then building, to keep the citizens in subjection; and here he was visited, during the preparation for his coronation, by Earl Edwin of Mercia, and Earl Morca of Northumberland, with many of the English nobles, who swore fealty to him on the restoration of their estates. The town is situated on the small river Roding, which, after flowing in two branches unites with the Thames about two miles below. The inhabitants are principally occupied in the fishery, having a number of vessels which they send to the Dutch and Scotch coasts, and, on their return, the fish is sent to Billingsgate in smaller vessels. There is a convenient wharf at Barking creek, which is navigable to Ilford for ships of eighty tons' burden, by which the neighbourhood is supplied with coal and timber; and near it is a large flour-mill, formerly belonging to the abbey. Many hundred acres of land in the vicinity are appropriated to the cultivation of potatoes for the London market. The market is on Saturday: a fair is held on October 22nd. Constables and other officers for the town are appointed at a court leet, and a court under the lord of the manor is held every third Saturday, for the recovery of debts under 40s. The town-hall is over the market-house, an ancient building, chiefly of wood, erected in the reign of Elizabeth, to which a small prison is attached. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Essex, and diocese of London, rated in the king's book at £19. 8. 11½, and in the patronage of the Warden and Fellows of All Souls' College, Oxford. The church is dedicated to St. Margaret. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. Sir James Campbell, in 1641, bequeathed £666. 13. 4. for founding and endowing a free school, which sum was invested in the purchase of a rent-charge of £20, on lands in the county of York. The school-house, having become ruinous, was taken down, and a workhouse erected on its site, in which the children of the poor are taught by a master and mistress, to whom the rent-charge is paid. In 1686, John Fowke, Esq. bequeathed certain estates for the maintenance of eight boys in Christ's Hospital, London, two of whom are to be chosen from this parish. National schools, for boys and girls, are supported by subscription, and a few of each sex are also clothed. An infant school, in which there are one hundred children, has been recently established. There are two unendowed almshouses, one containing four tenements, the other six.

BARKING, a parish in the hundred of BOSMERE and CLAYDON, county of SUFFOLK, 1¼ mile (S.W.) from Needham-Market, containing, with the chapelry of Needham-Market, 1687 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Suffolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £27. 10. 7½, and in the patronage of the Earl of Ashburnham. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. There is also a chapel of ease at Darmsden, in this parish. In 1650, Francis Theobald bequeathed £30 per annum for the endowment of a free school, in which seventeen children are taught.

BARKISLAND, a township in the parish of HALIFAX, wapentake of MORLEY, West riding of the county of YORK, 5½ miles (S.W. by S.) from Halifax, containing 2224 inhabitants. The manufacture of worsted and woollen goods is carried on in the township. Sarah Gledhill, in 1657, endowed a school for twelve children; with property now producing about £40 per annum, at Ripponden, in this township. Here is an almshouse for two widows.

BARKSTON, a parish in the soke of GRANTHAM, parts of KESTIVEN, county of LINCOLN, 3¼ miles (N.N.E.) from Grantham, containing 416 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, rated in the king's books at £13. 7. 6., and in the peculiar jurisdiction and patronage of the Prebendary of North Grantham in the Cathedral Church of Salisbury. The church is dedicated to St. Nicholas. There is a small endowment for instructing and apprenticing poor children, being part of the rent of some land given by Selina Towers, in 1718. An almshouse for six poor people is endowed with £43 per annum.

BARKSTON, a township in the parish of SHERBURN, upper division of the wapentake of BARKSTONE-ASH, West riding of the county of YORK, 5 miles (S. by E.) from Tadcaster, containing 251 inhabitants.

BARKSTONE, a parish in the hundred of FRAMLAND, county of LEICESTER, 6½ miles (S.E. by E.) from Bingham, containing 341 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Leicester, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £7. 5. 5., endowed with £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Duke of Rutland. The church is dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul. The Grantham and Nottingham canal passes through the parish. Daniel Smith endowed a school for the instruction of sixteen boys and sixteen girls.

BARKWAY, a parish (formerly a market town) in the hundred of EDWINSTREE, county of HERTFORD, 13¼ miles (N.N.E.) from Hertford, and 35 (N.) from London, on the road to Cambridge, containing, with the hamlet of Nuthamstead, 993 inhabitants. In the reign of Henry III. a grant of a market, now disused, and of a fair, which is still held on July 20th, was obtained for this place. Nearly the whole town was destroyed by fire in the reign of Elizabeth, and again in 1748. It is pleasantly situated on rising ground, and consists principally of one street, which is a great thoroughfare: the houses in general are modern and neatly built, and the inhabitants are well supplied with water. Constables and other officers are appointed at the court leet of the lord of the manor. The living is a vicarage, with the rectory of Reed, in the archdeaconry of Middlesex, and diocese of London, rated in the king's books at £14, and in the patronage of the Dowager Lady Selsea. The church, dedicated to St. Mary Magdalene, is a neat spacious structure with a tower. There is a place of worship for Independents. A charity school for twenty boys has an endowment of £10 per annum, and is further supported by subscription.

BARKWITH (EAST), a parish in the eastern division of the wapentake of WRAGGOE, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N.E.) from Wragby, containing 195 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £11. 10. 10., and in the patronage of G. R. Heneage, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Mary.

BARKWITH (WEST), a parish in the eastern division of the wapentake of WRAGGOE, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N.E.) from Wragby, containing 93 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £5. 5., and in the patronage of C. D. Holland, Esq. The church is dedicated to All Saints.

BARLSTON, a parish in the southern division of the hundred of PIREHILL, county of STAFFORD, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. by W.) from Stone, containing 462 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Stafford, and diocese of Lichfield and Coventry, endowed with £750 private benefaction, and £600 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Marquis of Stafford. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, is a modern building of brick, with an ancient stone tower. The village is situated upon an eminence, commanding extensive, varied, and beautiful views. The Grand Trunk canal passes through the parish. There is a school for twenty-eight poor children, to which Thomas Mills, in 1800, bequeathed £12 per annum.

BARLAVINGTON, a parish in the hundred of ROTHERBRIDGE, rape of ARUNDEL, county of SUSSEX, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S.) from Petworth, containing 94 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Chichester, rated in the king's books at £5. 13. 4., endowed with £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Earl of Egremont.

BARLBOROUGH, a parish in the hundred of SCARSDALE, county of DERBY, 8 miles (N.E. by E.) from Chesterfield, containing 675 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Derby, and diocese of Lichfield and Coventry, rated in the king's books at £10. 1. 5 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of C. H. Rhodes, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. James. The turnpike roads from Chesterfield to Worksop, and from Sheffield to Mansfield, cross here at right angles. There are extensive collieries and mines of iron-stone in the vicinity. Margaret and Mary Pole, in 1752, founded an almshouse for six poor persons, and endowed it with an estate now producing £75 per annum. Barlborough Hall is a spacious interesting edifice of the Elizabethan era.

BARLBY, a chapelry in the parish of HEMINGBROUGH, wapentake of OUZE and DERWENT, East riding of the county of YORK, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (N.E. by E.) from Selby, containing 349 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to the vicarage of Hemingbrough, within the jurisdiction of the peculiar court of Howdenshire, endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £800 royal bounty. Here is a small endowed school.

BARLESTON, a chapelry in the parish of MARKET-BOSWORTH, hundred of SPARKENHOE, county of LEICESTER, 3 miles (N.E.) from Market-Bosworth, containing 617 inhabitants. The chapel is dedicated to St. Giles.

BARLEY, a parish in the hundred of EDWINSTREE, county of HERTFORD, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N.E. by N.) from Barkway, containing 695 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Middlesex, and diocese of London, rated in the king's books at £26. 13. 4., and in the patronage of the Bishop of Ely. The church is dedicated to St. Margaret. There is a school with a small endowment.

BARLEY, a joint township with Whitley-Booths, in that part of the parish of WHALLEY which is in the higher division of the hundred of BLACKBURN, county palatine of LANCASTER, 5 miles (W. by N.) from Colne, containing, with Whitley-Booths, 765 inhabitants.

BARLEYTHORPE, a chapelry in the parish of OAKHAM-DEANSHOLD, soke of OAKHAM, county of RUTLAND, 1 mile (N.W. by W.) from Oakham. The population is returned with the parish. The chapel is dedicated to St. Peter.

BARLING, a parish in the hundred of ROCHFORD, county of ESSEX, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E.N.E.) from Prittlewell, containing 293 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the peculiar jurisdiction and patronage of the Dean and Chapter of St. Paul's, London, rated in the king's books at £18. The church is dedicated to All Saints.

BARLINGS, a parish in the wapentake of LAWRESS, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E.N.E.) from Lincoln, containing 245 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Stow, and diocese of Lincoln, endowed with £1000 royal bounty, and in the patronage of John Dixon, Esq. The church is desecrated. A school is endowed with a rent-charge of £10. An abbey for Premonstratensian canons, dedicated to St. Mary, was founded in 1154, the revenue of which, at the dissolution, was £307. 16. 6. The last prior was Dr. Mackerel, who, having put himself at the head of an insurrection against the king's authority, was taken and executed in 1536.

BARLOW, a chapelry in the parish of STAVELEY, hundred of SCARSDALE, county of DERBY, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N.W. by W.) from Chesterfield, containing 708 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Derby, and diocese of Lichfield and Coventry, endowed with £400 and £10 per annum private benefaction, £400 royal bounty, and £1300 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Rev. F. Gisborne. Here is a free school for ten poor children, with an endowment in land, augmented with a pecuniary donation by the Duke of Rutland.

BARLOW, a chapelry in the parish of BRAYTON, lower division of the wapentake of BARKSTONE-ASH, West riding of the county of YORK, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S.E.) from Selby, containing 175 inhabitants.

BARMBY on the MARSH, a chapelry in the parish of HOWDEN, wapentake of HOWDENSHERE, East riding of the county of YORK, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W.) from Howden, containing 525 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, within the jurisdiction of the peculiar court of Howdenshire, endowed with £600 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Vicar of Howden. The chapel is dedicated to St. Helen. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. Barmby is situated near the junction of the rivers Ouse and Derwent: the manufacture of sacking is carried on in the chapelry. A school is endowed for the instruction of ten boys. Here are two mineral springs, called St. Peter's and St. Helen's wells, one possessing a chalybeate, and the other a sulphureous, impregnation.

BARMBY on the MOOR, a parish (formerly a market town) within the liberty of ST. PETER OF YORK, though locally in the Wilton-Beacon division of the wapentake of Harthill, East riding of the county of YORK, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (W.) from Pocklington, containing 440 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the peculiar jurisdiction and patronage of the Dean of York, rated in the king's books at £5. 6. 8., and endowed with £400 royal bounty. The church is dedicated to St. Catherine. This was formerly a place of much greater importance, having received the grant of a weekly market, and various immunities, such as freedom from toll, &c., which the inhabitants still enjoy, subject to the payment of a small sum annually to the Dean and Chapter. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. A fair is held on the Thursday preceding St. Peter's day. A school is endowed with land bequeathed by various individuals.

BARMER, in the hundred of GALLOW, county of NORFOLK, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. S. W.) from Burnham-Westgate, containing 25 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Norfolk, and diocese of Norwich, endowed with £400 royal bounty, and in the patronage of Thomas Kerslake, Esq. The church, which was dedicated to All Saints, is desecrated, and Barmer is now considered extra-parochial.

BARMING, a parish in the hundred of MAIDSTONE, lathe of AYLESFORD, county of KENT, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. by S.) from Maidstone, containing 406 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Rochester, rated in the king's books at £12. 17. 1., and in the patronage of the Crown. The church, which has a fine spire, is dedicated to St. Margaret. The river Medway, which runs through the parish, is crossed by a stone bridge leading to East Farleigh, and by another of wood, called St. Helen's bridge, on the road to West Farleigh. The soil in the neighbourhood is peculiarly adapted to the cultivation of hops, and a large quantity of fruit is sent to the London market. There was a Roman villa at this place, the foundations of which were taken up a few years ago, when coins of the Lower Empire, also of Edward I., and of later English monarchs, were found. Several urns have also been discovered in different parts of the parish. The abbess of St. Helen's, London, had a summer retreat here, but there are no remains of the house. The poet Smart resided upon his paternal estate in this parish; and the Rev. John Harris, D.D., author of a History of Kent, a Dictionary of Arts and Sciences, &c., formerly held the living.

BARMING (WEST), a hamlet (formerly a parish) in the parish of NETTLESTEAD, hundred of TWYFORD, lathe of AYLESFORD, county of KENT. The living, which was a rectory, has been consolidated with that of Nettlestead, with which the population is returned. The church is desecrated. The river Medway, over which is a modern bridge, flows along the southern border of the hamlet.

BARMOOR, a township in the parish of LOWICK, eastern division of GLENDALÉ ward, county of NORTH-UMBERLAND, 7 miles (N. by E.) from Wooler. The population is returned with the parish. In 1417, the Lords Marchers assembled here, at the head of a force amounting to one hundred thousand men, against the Scots, who, on hearing of their approach, retreated within their own territory. The English army encamped in the vicinity prior to the battle of Flodden, on the night after which the English general slept at Bar Moor wood. A fair was formerly held at Cross Hills, between this place and Lowick.

BARMPTON, a township in that part of the parish of HAUGHTON le SKERNE which is in the south eastern division of DARLINGTON ward, county palatine of DURHAM, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N.E. by N.) from Darlington, containing 105 inhabitants.

BARMSTON, a township in the parish of WASHINGTON, eastern division of CHESTER ward, county palatine of DURHAM, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W.) from Sunderland, containing 79 inhabitants. Here is an iron-foundry, on the banks of the river Wear.

BARMSTON, a parish in the northern division of the wapentake of HOLDERNESSE, East riding of the county of YORK, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. by W.) from Bridlington, containing 205 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of the East riding, and diocese of York, rated in the king's books at £13. 11. 10 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of Sir F. Boynton, Bart. The church is dedicated to All Saints. There is a chapel in the township of Ulrome, which is partly in this parish, and partly in that of Skipsea. The village is pleasantly situated near the North sea, at the northern extremity of Holderness. A school-room, with a house for the master, has been erected by Sir Francis Boynton, Bart., lord of the manor; and an almshouse for four poor persons was founded, in 1726, by his ancestor, Sir Griffith Boynton, who endowed them with £15 per annum.

BARNACK, a parish in the liberty of PETERBOROUGH, county of NORTHAMPTON, 4 miles (N.) from Wansford, containing, with the hamlets of Pilsgate and Southorpe, 649 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Northampton, and diocese of Peterborough, rated in the king's books at £28. 10., and in the patronage of the Bishop of Peterborough. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, is an ancient structure with a square tower, the lower part of which is Norman; other parts of the edifice exhibit several varieties of English architecture. There are extensive quarries of excellent building stone near the village.

BARNACLE, a hamlet in the parish of BULKINGTON, Kirby division of the hundred of KNIGHTLOW, county of WARWICK, 6 miles (N.E.) from Coventry, containing 219 inhabitants.

BARNACRE, a joint township with Bonds, in the parish of GARSTANG, hundred of AMOUNDERNESS, county palatine of LANCASTER, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N.E.) from Garstang, containing, with Bonds, 548 inhabitants.

BARNARD-CASTLE, a market town and chapelry in that part of the parish of GAINFORD which is in the south-western division of DARLINGTON ward, county palatine of DURHAM, 25 miles (S. W. by W.) from Durham, and 244 (N. N. W.) from London, containing 3581 inhabitants. This place is supposed to have originated, soon after the Conquest, from the decay of a more ancient town called Marwood. About the year 1093, William II. having bestowed extensive possessions in the vicinity upon Guido Balliol, a Norman nobleman, who accompanied the Conqueror to England, and ancestor of the kings of Scotland, his eldest son Barnard, about 1178, built here a castle, and, by a grant of privileges, encouraged the erection of houses near it, thus laying the foundation of the present town, to which he imparted his own name. It was formerly a member of the ancient wapentake of Sadberge, and for a certain period was exempt from the jurisdiction of the palatinate, the illustrious family of Balliol, who held it for five successions, having exercised jura regalia within the franchise. Barnard Balliol, son of the founder, having espoused the cause of Galfrid, elect Bishop of Durham, the usurper Comyn despatched hither a party of soldiers, who committed great devastation, and exercised atrocious cruelty upon the inhabitants. Being forfeited to the crown, this barony, with its members, was granted to Guy Beauchamp, Earl of Warwick, and continued in the possession of his descendants until 1398, when it was given by Richard II. to Scroope, Earl of Wiltshire, but was restored, in the following year, to Thomas Beauchamp, Earl of Warwick, and subsequently passed by marriage, with Anna, daughter and coheir of Richard Neville, Earl of Warwick, to Richard, Duke of Gloucester, afterwards Richard III., who, prior to ascending the throne, resided here, and whose crest may still be seen on the walls of the castle. In 1477, he obtained a license to found a college in the castle, for a dean and twelve secular priests, ten clerks, and six choristers, but it does not appear that this design was carried into effect. After frequent grants and reversions, the castle, honour, and privileges, with the parks, lands, and appurtenances, were purchased by an ancestor of the present Marquis of Cleveland, to whom they now belong. During the rebellion of the Earls of Northumberland and Westmorland, in the reign of Elizabeth, the castle, which then belonged to the latter nobleman, was seized and garrisoned by Sir George Bowes, of Streatham, who defended it against the insurgents, till he was relieved by the approach of the royal army. In the great civil war it was held for the king, and was besieged by Cromwell, to whom, after a severe cannonading, the garrison surrendered. After the battle of Newburn, in 1642, part of the Scottish army was quartered here. The ruins of this important baronial edifice occupy an area of nearly seven acres, on an elevated rock near the margin of the river Tees, indicating the strength and extent of the original structure: one of the towers was repaired some years ago, and fitted up as a shot-manufactory, and the inner area has been converted into a garden.

The town is situated on an eminence, rising abruptly from the southern bank of the Tees, the bridge over which was rebuilt about 1771, in which year it was swept away by a flood: it has undergone considerable improvement of late years, by the erection of new streets, and the removal of unsightly objects. The houses are built of white freestone, and have a very handsome appearance: the streets are well paved and lighted, and the inhabitants are amply supplied with water from springs in the neighbourhood. The environs are remarkably pleasant, and the vale of Tees abounds with romantic scenery. There are two book societies, one in conjunction with Staindrop. The principal articles manufactured are carpets, woollen plaids, and hats; and on the banks of the river there are several mills for spinning thread. The market is on Wednesday: fairs are held on the Wednesday in Easter and Whitsun weeks, for cattle and agricultural produce; a fair on St. Mary Magdalene's day has nearly fallen into disuse. The county Magistrates hold a petty session on the first Wednesday in every month; a baronial court for the recovery of debts under 40s. is held quarterly; and constables and other officers are annually appointed at the court leet of the lord of the manor. The town hall, situated in the market-place, is an octagonal structure, erected in 1747, by Thos. Breaks, Esq.: the upper part is used for the transaction of business, and the lower for the market.

The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Durham, endowed with £600 private benefaction, £200 royal bounty, and £1100 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Vicar of Gainford. The chapel, dedicated to St. Mary, is an ancient and spacious cruciform structure, with a square embattled tower rising from the centre; it is partly Norman, and partly in the early and decorated styles of English architecture, with later insertions. There are places of worship for Independents, and Primitive and Wesleyan Methodists. A National school is supported by subscription, and by the interest of £133, bequeathed by Mr. John Dent, for the instruction of ten poor boys. An hospital, for the residence and maintenance of three aged widows, was founded by John Balliol, about the 14th of Henry III., and dedicated to St. John the Baptist; the income is nearly £200 per annum. About two miles north-west of the town there is a chalybeate spring, which is approached by walks through highly varied scenery of the most pleasing description. A Roman coin of the Emperor Trajan was dug up in the churchyard, in 1824. Sir John Hullock, one of the late barons of the Exchequer; William Hutchinson, Esq., author of the History and Antiquities of the County of Durham, and various other works; and George Edwards, Esq., M.D., a political writer of considerable distinction, were natives of this place. Barnard gives the titles of viscount and baron to the Marquis of Cleveland.

BARNARDISTON, a parish in the hundred of RISBRIDGE, county of SUFFOLK, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W. by W.) from Clare, containing 164 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Sudbury, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £7. 10. 5., and in the patronage of the Rev. William Ellis. The church is dedicated to All Saints.

BARNBOW, a township in the parish of BARWICK in ELMETT, lower division of the wapentake of SKYRACK, West riding of the county of YORK, $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. N. E.) from Leeds, containing 273 inhabitants.

BARNBROUGH, a parish in the northern division of the wapentake of STRAFFORTH and TICKHILL, West riding of the county of YORK, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W.) from Doncaster, containing 466 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of York, rated in the king's books at £23, and in the patronage of the Chapter of the Collegiate Church of Southwell. The church is dedicated to St. Peter. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. Here is a school with a small endowment for poor children.

BARNBY, a parish in the hundred of MUTFORD and LOTHINGLAND, county of SUFFOLK, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. by S.) from Beccles, containing 262 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to the rectory of Wheatacre All Saints, in the archdeaconry of Suffolk, and diocese of Norwich. The church is dedicated to St. John the Baptist.

BARNBY, a township in the parish of LYTHE, eastern division of the liberty of LANGBAURGH, North riding of the county of YORK, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. by N.) from Whitby, containing 270 inhabitants.

BARNBY upon DON, a parish in the southern division of the wapentake of STRAFFORTH and TICKHILL, West riding of the county of YORK, comprising the townships of Barnby upon Don and Thorpe in Balne, and containing 617 inhabitants, of which number, 495 are in the township of Barnby upon Don, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. E. by N.) from Doncaster. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of York, rated in the king's books at £9. 12. 6., endowed with £200 private benefaction, £200 royal bounty, and £800 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of J. Gresham, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Peter. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. A school for poor children is endowed with £11 per annum from the produce of land belonging to the parish, and £7. 10. bequeathed by John Martin, in 1798. Frances, Countess of Sutherland, in 1731, devised property, producing about £30 per annum, for the relief of four poor women, and for instructing poor children of Bramwith.

BARNBY in the WILLOWS, a parish in the southern division of the wapentake of NEWARK, county of NOTTINGHAM, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. by S.) from Newark, containing 247 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Nottingham, and diocese of York, rated in the king's books at £5. 9. 9½., and in the patronage of the Chapter of the Collegiate Church of Southwell. The church is dedicated to All Saints.

BARNBY-MOOR, a joint township with Bilby, in that part of the parish of BLYTH which is in the Hatfield division of the wapentake of BASSETLAW, county of NOTTINGHAM, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W.) from East Retford, containing, with Bilby, 182 inhabitants.

BARNES, a parish in the western division of the hundred of BRIXTON, county of SURREY, 5 miles (W. S. W.) from London, containing 1240 inhabitants. The village is pleasantly situated on the southern bank of the river Thames, and contains several well-built houses, particularly on the terrace, facing the river, which commands an extensive view of the opposite bank, and forms a peculiarly interesting promenade, from the constant traffic on the Thames, and the continued succession of pleasure boats passing between London and Richmond, and in other aquatic excursions. At Barn-Elms, in the vicinity, so called from a row of stately elm trees, there is an ancient mansion, called Queen Elizabeth's Dairy, which was afterwards the residence of Jacob Tonson, an eminent bookseller, who built a room for the meetings of the members of the "Kit-Kat-Club," portraits of some of whom adorned the walls; these have been since engraved and published, and among them are several of the most eminent English literati of the early part of the last century. Queen Elizabeth granted the manor-house to Sir Francis Walsingham, who, in 1589, entertained that sovereign and her court here: it was afterwards the residence of the Earl of Essex, who had espoused the daughter of Sir Francis, the widow of Sir Philip Sidney. A court leet is held by the lord of the manor, at which constables and other officers are appointed. The living is a rectory, in the peculiar jurisdiction of the Archbishop of Canterbury, rated in the king's books at £9. 3. 4., and in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of St. Paul's, London. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is an ancient edifice in the early style of English architecture, built of flint and freestone, with a square tower of brick, having an octagonal turret at one angle, which appears to have been added in 1500. There is an endowment, arising from the sum of £114, for the instruction of poor children; and a National school is supported by subscription. In 1653, Edward Rose, of London, left £20 to the poor of this parish, on condition that a tablet, erected to his memory, within a small enclosure planted with rose trees, in the churchyard, should be kept in repair. Robert Beale, who was employed by Elizabeth to communicate to Mary Queen of Scots the sentence which had been passed upon her, and afterwards sent to Fotheringay Castle, to see it carried into effect, died here in 1601. Cowley the poet resided here for some time.

BARNESLEY, a market town and chapelry in the parish of SILKSTONE, wapentake of STAINCROSS, and in the liberty of the honour of PONTEFRAC, West riding of the county of YORK, 14 miles (N.) from Sheffield, 38 (S. by W.) from York, and 177 (N. W. by N.) from London, containing 8284 inhabitants, according to the census of 1821, since which period the population has increased nearly one-third. This town, in Domesday-book called Bernesleye, is pleasantly situated on the acclivity of a hill, in a beautiful and richly-cultivated country, and consists of several streets, the principal of which is spacious, and contains many handsome buildings: the houses in general are built of stone obtained in the immediate neighbourhood. The town is paved, lighted with gas, watched, and regulated by commissioners appointed under the provisions of an act passed in the 3rd of George IV., and amply supplied with water from springs: considerable improvement has recently been made in the entrances and public roads. A subscription library was established in 1808, and a Philosophical Society in 1828; the members of the latter hold their meetings in the grammar schoolroom. The manufacture of steel wire formerly prevailed to a considerable extent, and constituted the staple trade till the close of the last century, when that of linen cloth was introduced, which is at present in a very flourishing state, and employs several thousand looms in the town and adjacent villages. The state of perfection which this branch of manufacture has attained enables the manufacturers to compete successfully with the Scotch and other markets. There are several extensive bleaching establishments, and two large calenders for finishing the cloths. The spinning of yarn is carried on to a limited extent; there are iron foundries; and the making of wire and brass is still continued on a smaller scale. Coal of excellent quality is obtained near the town; and the trade is greatly facilitated by communication with Wakefield and the West riding, by means of the Barnesley Canal Navigation and the river Calder, and with Hull and the Humber by the Dearne and Dove canal and the river Dunn. The market, on Wednesday, is free of toll for all kinds of grain; a smaller market for provisions has lately been established, which is held on Saturday. The fairs are on May 13th and October 11th, for cattle and horses; and there is a great market for live stock on the last Wednesday in February. Constables and other officers are appointed annually at the court leet of the lord of the manor; and a court for the honour of Pontefract is held on the Saturday in every third week, for the recovery of debts under £5. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry and diocese of York, endowed with £15 per annum and £200 private benefaction, and £800 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Archbishop of York. The chapel, dedicated to St. Mary, has, with the exception of the tower, been rebuilt of freestone, dug in the vicinity, under an act obtained in the 59th of George III. A church, dedicated to St. George, was erected in 1823, by grant from the parliamentary commissioners, at an expense of £5918. 11. 4.; it is a neat plain edifice, in the English style of architecture, with a small tower: the living is a perpetual curacy, in the patronage of the Perpetual Curate of Barnesley. There are places of worship for the Society of Friends, Independents, Primitive and Wesleyan Methodists, and Roman Catholics. The free grammar school was founded and endowed, in 1665, by Mr. Thomas Keresforth, of Pule Hill. A National school, for children of both sexes, was erected in 1813, by the trustees of Elliss' charity. Mr. Elliss, in 1711, bequeathed land, directing the produce thereof to be applied, amongst other things, in purchasing books for twenty boys and girls of Barnesley, in compensation to a curate for catechising them, and in apprenticing a few of them. This town has the advantage of a very considerable estate, vested in trustees by Rodolph Bosville; of London, in 1558, who apply the rents for the general benefit of the inhabitants. Edmund Rogers also, by will in 1646, left an estate at Thorpe-Audlin for the benefit of the poorer inhabitants, for whom there is a yearly dole, called Cutler's charity, arising from lands devised by Thomas Cutler, in 1622, and his wife Ellen, in 1636. About a mile from the town are the remains of the Cluniac priory of Monk Bretton, founded in the 3rd of Henry II., by Adam Fitz-Swain, the revenue of which, at the dissolution, was £323. 8. 2.

BARNET (CHIPPING), a market town and parish in the hundred of CASHIO, or liberty of ST. ALBANS, county of HERTFORD, 14 miles (S. W. by S.) from Hertford, and 11 (N.) from London, on the great north road, containing 1755 inhabitants. This place, called also High Barnet, from its situation on the summit of a hill, derives its distinguishing name from the privilege, granted to the monks of St. Albans, of holding a market here. On the 5th of April, 1471, the decisive battle, which terminated in the defeat and death of the Earl of Warwick, and established Edward IV. on the throne, took place on Gladmore heath, a mile north-west of the town, in commemoration of which an obelisk was erected by Sir Jeremy Sambrook, at the junction of the roads from Hatfield and St. Albans, near Hadley common. The town, which is pleasantly situated, consists principally of one street, upwards of a mile in length: the houses, though interspersed occasionally with a few of more respectable appearance, are in general mean, and the inhabitants are but scantily supplied with water. A new road, entering from London, was made in 1826, by means of an embankment across the valley, at an expense of £15,000. The races, formerly held on Barnet common, and for some time discontinued, have recently been revived. The market is on Monday, and is chiefly noted for the sale of pigs; a fair is held on April 8th and 9th, for cattle and horses, and on the 10th is a pleasure fair; another commences on the 4th of September, and continues the three following days, on the last of which the races are held. The magistrates for the liberty hold a meeting here on the first Thursday in every month; and the town is within the jurisdiction of a court, held at St. Albans, for the recovery of debts under 40s.: two constables and two headboroughs are appointed at the court leet of the lord of the manor, held at Easter.

The living is a perpetual curacy, united to the rectory of East Barnet, in the archdeaconry of St. Albans, and diocese of London. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, was built by one of the abbots of St. Albans, in the fifteenth century: it is a venerable structure, in the style of that period, but has undergone several alterations. There is a place of worship for Independents. The free school was founded, in 1573, by Queen Elizabeth, for the gratuitous instruction of nine children; the rest pay 5s. per quarter. It was further endowed in 1677, by Alderman Owen, and, in 1734, by the Rev. Humphrey Hall. There is also a National school, built at the expense of the parent institution, and supported partly by a bequest from Mrs. Allen, in 1725, and partly by subscription. Jesus' hospital, for six poor elderly women, was founded and endowed, in 1679, by James Ravenscroft, and further endowed with the residue of the produce of £500, left by Mrs. Barcock, in 1731, after distributing £10 to the poor. In 1729, Mr. John Garret founded and endowed six almshouses for aged widows; and six others, for aged men or women, were founded by Mr. Palmer, and endowed with part of an estate at Kentish Town, producing about £116 per annum. On Barnet common there is a mineral spring, the water of which contains a considerable portion of calcareous glauber, with a small portion of sea salt, and for the due care of it, Alderman Owen, in 1677, left £1 per annum.

BARNET (EAST), a parish in the hundred of CASHIO, or liberty of ST. ALBANS, county of HERTFORD, 10½ miles (N.) from London, containing 507 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, with the perpetual curacy of Chipping-Barnet annexed, in the archdeaconry of St. Albans, and diocese of London, rated in the king's books at £22. 2. 8½., and in the patronage of the Crown. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a very ancient structure, and formerly belonged to the monastery of St. Albans. A National school is supported by subscription. The village is pleasantly situated near the market town of Chipping-Barnet; the houses are neatly built, and the general appearance of the place pleasingly picturesque; the air is salubrious, but the supply of water is very scanty, and the quality not very good. On a hill opposite to the church, called Monk's Frith Garden, the abbots of St. Albans anciently had a villa; and in the neighbourhood are several mineral springs.

BARNET (FRYERN), a parish in the Finsbury division of the hundred of OSSULSTONE, county of MIDDLESEX, $8\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. by W.) from London, containing, with the hamlet of Colney-Hatch, and a portion of that of Whetstone, 534 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the peculiar jurisdiction and patronage of the Dean and Chapter of St. Paul's, London. The church, dedicated to St. James, is a small and very ancient structure, in the Norman style of architecture: the chancel has been rebuilt within the last seven years. It is supposed that an abbey anciently existed here, and that the old manor-house, now taken down, was the summer residence of the abbots, to whom the manor belonged. The village contains several handsome houses, and the environs abound with pleasing scenery; the land is tithe-free, if cultivated by resident proprietors, but if let to tenants the exemption ceases. Courts leet and baron are held annually on the Friday in Whitsun week. Almshouses for twelve aged persons were founded and endowed with £10 a year, in 1612, by Lawrence Kemp, Esq., of London. There is a school, supported by subscription. John Walker, an eminent philologist, and author of the English Pronouncing Dictionary, was born here, in 1732.

BARNET by the WOLD, a parish in the southern division of the wapentake of YARBOROUGH, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, 5 miles (E. N. E.) from Glandford-Bridge, containing 316 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £6. 4. 2., and in the patronage of the Bishop of Lincoln. The church is dedicated to St. Mary.

BARNEY, a parish in the northern division of the hundred of GREENHOE, county of NORFOLK, 5 miles (E. N. E.) from Fakenham, containing 267 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £6. 13. 4., and in the patronage of Sir J. D. Astley, Bart. The church is dedicated to St. Mary.

BARNHAM, a village in the hundred of BLACKBOURN, county of SUFFOLK, 3 miles (S.) from Thetford, comprising the parishes of St. Gregory and St. Martin, and containing 269 inhabitants: the living of St. Gregory's is rated in the king's books at £7. 11. 10½., and that of St. Martin's at £8. 5. 5.; they now form one consolidated rectory, with those of Euston and Little Fakenham united, in the archdeaconry of Sudbury, and diocese of Norwich, and in the patronage of the Duke of Grafton. The church of St. Gregory is the parochial church; St. Martin's is desecrated.

BARNHAM, a parish in the hundred of AVISFORD, rape of ARUNDEL, county of SUSSEX, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. W. by W.) from Arundel, containing 173 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Chichester, rated in the king's books at £7. 15., endowed with £200 private benefaction, £600 royal bounty, and £200 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Bishop of Chichester. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. The Arundel and Portsmouth canal passes through the parish.

BARNHAM-BROOM, a parish in the hundred of FOREHOE, county of NORFOLK, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. N. W.) from Wymondham, containing 388 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, united, with that of Bixton, to the vicarage of Kimberley, in the archdeaconry of Norfolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £12. 8. 1½. The church is dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul: there was formerly another, dedicated to St. Michael, but it is now desecrated. Here is a small endowment for the instruction of six poor children.

BARNHILL, a hamlet in the parish of MALPAS, higher division of the hundred of BROXTON, county palatine of CHESTER, 10 miles (S. E. by S.) from Chester. The population is returned with the parish. The petty sessions for the hundred are held here.

BARNINGHAM, a parish in the hundred of BLACKBOURN, county of SUFFOLK, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. N. E.) from Ixworth, containing 424 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, with that of Coney-Weston annexed, in the archdeaconry of Sudbury, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £13. 9. 2., and in the patronage of John Vernon, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Andrew. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists.

BARNINGHAM, a parish in the western division of the wapentake of GILLING, North riding of the county of YORK, comprising the townships of Barningham, Hope, and Scargill, and containing 564 inhabitants, of which number, 384 are in the township of Barningham, 2 miles (S. S. W.) from Greta-Bridge. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Richmond, and diocese of Chester, rated in the king's books at £19. 17. 1., and in the patronage of the Crown. The church is dedicated to St. Michael. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. A school, conducted on the National plan, is endowed with about £25 per annum: the schoolroom was rebuilt in 1820.

BARNINGHAM (LITTLE), a parish in the southern division of the hundred of ERPINGHAM, county of NORFOLK, 6 miles (N. W. by N.) from Aylsham, containing 233 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £5. 15. 2½., and in the patronage of J. Browne, Esq. and others. The church is dedicated to St. Andrew. A charter for a market and a fair was granted by Edward I. to Walter de Berningham, who at that time possessed the manor.

BARNINGHAM-NORWOOD, a parish in the northern division of the hundred of ERPINGHAM, county of NORFOLK, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. S. E.) from Holt, containing 82 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Norfolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £6. 13. 4. The Right Hon. W. Wyndham was patron in 1800. The church is dedicated to St. Mary.

BARNINGHAM-WINTER, a parish in the northern division of the hundred of ERPINGHAM, county of NORFOLK, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. E. by E.) from Holt, containing 46 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Norfolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £6. 13. 4., and in the patronage of J. T. Mott, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Peter. A grant of a market and a fair was obtained by Roger le Curzain, in the reign of Edward II.

BARNOLDBY le BECK, a parish in the wapentake of BRADLEY-HAVERSTOE, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. W. by S.) from Grimsby, containing 220 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £14. 13. 4., and in the patronage of the Chapter of the Collegiate Church of Southwell. The church is dedicated to St. Helen. There are two almshouses, and a school for poor children, endowed with £10 per annum; and the children of this parish are also entitled to instruction at the school at Laceby, founded and endowed by Mrs. Sarah Stamford, in 1820.

BARNOLDWICK, a parish in the eastern division of the wapentake of STAINCLIFFE and EWXCROSS, West riding of the county of YORK, comprising the townships of Barnoldwick, Brogden, Coates, and Salterforth, and containing 2350 inhabitants, of which number, 1334 are in the township of Barnoldwick, 9 miles (W. S. W.) from Skipton. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the peculiar jurisdiction of the Lord of the Manor, endowed with £200 private benefaction, £1100 royal bounty, and £1000 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of Sir J. L. Kaye, Bart. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, stands on the verge of a deep glen, whence it was formerly known by the name of Gill Kirk. There are places of worship for Particular Baptists and Wesleyan Methodists. A Cistercian monastery was founded here in 1147, which was afterwards removed to Kirkstall, owing to some dissension among the monks and the inhabitants.

BARNSLEY, a parish in the hundred of BRIGHTWELL'S BARROW, county of GLOUCESTER, $4\frac{1}{4}$ miles (E. N. E.) from Cirencester, containing 318 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, within the peculiar jurisdiction of the Vicar of Bibury, rated in the king's books at £13. 15. 5., and in the patronage of Sir James Musgrave, Bart. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. Here are quarries of good freestone.

Seal and Arms.

BARNSTAPLE, a port, borough, market town, and parish, having separate jurisdiction, locally in the hundred of Braunton, county of DEVON, 38 miles (N. W.) from Exeter, 8 (N. E.) from Bideford, and 193 (W. by S.) from London, containing 5079 inhabitants. This place, a Saxon burgh in the reign of Athelstan, was formerly a port of considerable trade, and a principal depôt for wool, from which circumstance it seems to have derived its name. In 1588, it fitted out three ships for the fleet of Elizabeth, to repel the Spanish Armada; and during the civil war in the reign of Charles I. it was distinguished for its adherence to the cause of the parliament, and was the scene of frequent conflicts, being alternately in the possession of each party, till its final surrender to General Fairfax, in 1646, when it was again taken possession of by Sir Thomas Fairfax. In 1606, it suffered considerably from a great flood, which inundated the town, and did much damage to the property of the inhabitants. Barnstaple is pleasantly situated in a fertile vale, sheltered by a semicircular range of hills, on the eastern bank of the river Taw, over which there is a fine stone bridge of sixteen arches. The town consists of several spacious and well-paved streets, containing many handsome houses, and is plentifully supplied with excellent water, brought by pipes from the distance of half a mile. The air is salubrious, and a walk, extending about a quarter of a mile along the winding bank of the river, which here expands into a fine bay, forms an agreeable promenade, at the end of which is a handsome piazza of the Doric order, surmounted by a statue of Queen Anne. A theatre is occasionally opened, and there are assembly and billiard rooms. The trade of the port consists principally in the importation of deals from North America and the Baltic, lime from Wales, and coal, culm, and other commodities from Bristol; and in the exportation of corn, oak timber, and bark, in which, according to the return made to parliament in 1828, forty-two vessels, averaging fifty-two tons' burden, were employed. The quay, upon which stands the custom-house, is commodious and extensive; but, from the accumulation of sand, by which the navigation of the river is obstructed, it is not accessible to vessels of more than one hundred tons' burden. Within the last few years Barnstaple has obtained the privilege of bonding wine, spirits, and other articles of colonial produce. Manufactories for serge and inferior broad cloth have recently been established; there are others for patent lace, affording employment to about eight hundred persons; and in the vicinity are six tan-yards, a paper-mill, and an iron-foundry; a great quantity of earthenware, bricks, and tiles, is also made here. Limestone abounds in the neighbourhood, and lead-ore has been discovered. The market is on Friday; and there are great markets on the Friday before the 21st of April, and the second Friday in December; a cattle market, for which this place is celebrated, is also held monthly. A fair, for horses, cattle, and sheep, commences on September 19th, and continues three days.

The government, by charter of Edward I., subsequently confirmed and extended by Edward IV., Mary, and James I., is vested in a mayor, high steward, recorder, and deputy-recorder, a senior and a junior alderman, and twenty-two common council-men, assisted by a town-clerk, two serjeants at mace, and subordinate officers. The mayor is elected by a majority of the corporation, annually on the Monday after the festival of St. Faith, and sworn into office in October; on retiring from office he becomes senior alderman, and the following year junior alderman. The mayor, deputy-recorder (who must be a barrister of three years' standing), and the two aldermen, are justices of the peace, and hold a court of session quarterly for the borough, with power to imprison and transport; and a court of record is held, every alternate Monday, for the recovery of debts to any amount. The guildhall is a spacious handsome building, erected by the corporation in 1812; the lower part is appropriated to the use of the market. A new prison, containing twenty cells, has recently been erected upon the improved plan. The freedom of the borough is inherited by birth, or acquired by servitude. The elective franchise was granted in the reign of Edward I., since which time Barnstaple has continued to return two members to parliament: the right of election is vested in the free burgesses generally, in number about six hundred, of whom about one-third are resident: the mayor is the returning officer.

The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Barnstaple, and diocese of Exeter, rated in the king's books at £15. 8. 9., and in the patronage of Lord Wharnccliffe. The church, dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul, is a spacious ancient structure, with a spire. There are places of worship for Particular Baptists, Independents, and Wesleyan Methodists. The free grammar school was founded and endowed, in 1649, by R. Ferris, Esq., and a small annuity was added, in 1760, by the Rev John Wright: the management is vested in the corporation, who appoint the master. The school-house is an ancient building, which formerly belonged to a Cluniac monastery, founded here by Johel de Totnes, soon after the Conquest. John Jewel, Bishop of Salisbury; Thomas Harding, the Jesuit professor at Louvain; and the poet Gay, who was born in the neighbourhood; were educated at this school. A charity school, for clothing and educating fifty boys and twenty girls, was founded in 1710, and is supported by the rent of lands, purchased with several benefactions. The National school, in which one hundred and fifty children are instructed, was founded in 1813, and is supported by subscription; and there is also a school for twenty girls, who are taught reading, sewing, and knitting. Litchdon almshouse, an ancient building, consisting of a centre and two wings, in one of which is a chapel, was founded in 1624, and endowed with a considerable estate, by John Penrose, Esq. for forty aged persons of either sex: it is under the direction of two trustees, and the mayor nominates to the first vacancy that occurs during his office. Horwood's almshouses, for sixteen poor people, founded in 1658, and Paige's almshouses, founded in 1553, and enlarged in 1656, are both endowed by their respective founders. The North Devon infirmary, a lofty modern building south-east of the town, was erected under the patronage of Lord Fortescue, and is supported by subscription. On the quay there is an ancient building, now appended to the custom-house, said to have been a chantry chapel, dedicated to St. Anne.

BARNSTON, a township in the parish of WOODCHURCH, lower division of the hundred of WIRRELL, county palatine of CHESTER, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. by W.) from Great Neston, containing 93 inhabitants. The Grand Trunk canal here passes through a tunnel five hundred and fifty yards long.

BARNSTON, a parish in the hundred of DUNMOW, county of ESSEX, $2\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. E.) from Great Dunmow, containing 218 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Middlesex, and diocese of London, rated in the king's books at £13, and in the patronage of J. Toke, Esq. The steeple of the church was destroyed by lightning in 1665.

BARNSTONE, a chapelry in the parish of LANGAR, northern division of the wapentake of BINGHAM, county of NOTTINGHAM, 1 mile (N.E.) from Langar, with which the population is returned.

BARNTON, a township in that part of the parish of GREAT BUDWORTH which is in the hundred of BUCKLOW, county palatine of CHESTER, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (N.W. by W.) from Northwich, containing 612 inhabitants. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists.

BARNWELL (ALL SAINTS), a parish in the hundred of HUXLOE, county of NORTHAMPTON, $2\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. E. by E.) from Oundle, containing 115 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, united to that of Barnwell St. Andrew by act of parliament in 1821, in the archdeaconry of Northampton, and diocese of Peterborough, rated in the king's books at £15. 6. 8., and in the patronage of Lord Montague.

BARNWELL (ST. ANDREW), a parish in the hundred of POLEBROOK, county of NORTHAMPTON, 2 miles (S. by E.) from Oundle, containing 255 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, with that of Barnwell All Saints united, in 1821, in the archdeaconry of Northampton, and diocese of Peterborough, rated in the king's books at £17. 2. 1., and in the patronage of Lord Montague. The church is an ancient structure in the early style of English architecture, with a tower and spire, and has some portions of a later date. There is an endowed free school for poor children, also an almshouse for fourteen infirm men and women. In the reign of Henry I. a castle was erected here, by Reginald le Moine, of which there are considerable remains, including the principal gateway.

BARNWOOD, a parish in the upper division of the hundred of DUDSTONE and KING'S BARTON, county of GLOUCESTER, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (E. S. E.) from Gloucester, containing 392 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Gloucester, endowed with £30 per annum private benefaction, and £400 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Gloucester. The church is dedicated to St. Lawrence. The Gloucester and Cheltenham railway passes through the parish, which is also intersected by the Roman Fosse-way. There is a small endowment for the instruction of poor children.

BARONY, a township in that part of the parish of ST. ANDREW AUCKLAND which is in the north-western division of DARLINGTON ward, county palatine of DURHAM, containing 479 inhabitants. It is situated on the north side of the river Gaunless, over which there is a bridge to Evenwood. The Bishop of Durham, as lord of the manor, holds courts leet and baron in March and October, at which debts to the amount of 40s. are recoverable.

BARR (GREAT), a chapelry in the parish of ALDRIDGE, southern division of the hundred of OFFLOW, county of STAFFORD, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. E.) from Walsall, containing 763 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Stafford, and diocese of Lichfield and Coventry. The chapel is dedicated to St. Margaret. John Addyes, in 1722, bequeathed property for the erection and endowment of a free school for thirteen boys, which by subsequent benefactions has been augmented for twenty, who receive an English education and are clothed. There is also a girls' school, supported by trifling bequests, in which five children are taught to read, write, and sew.

BARR (PERRY), a hamlet in the parish of HANDSWORTH, southern division of the hundred of OFFLOW, county of STAFFORD, 4 miles (N.) from Birmingham, containing 777 inhabitants.

BARRASFORD, a township in the parish of CHOLLERTON, north-eastern division of TINDALE ward, county of NORTHUMBERLAND, 7 miles (N. by W.) from Hexham, containing 193 inhabitants. Robert de Umfranville, in 1303, obtained license from Edward I. to hold a market here on Wednesdays, and a fair on November 11th, both which have been discontinued.

BARRAWAY, a chapelry in the parish of SOHAM, hundred of STAPLOE, county of CAMBRIDGE, $2\frac{1}{4}$ miles

(S.S.E.) from Ely. The population is returned with the parish. The chapel is dedicated to St. Nicholas.

The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Ely, rated in the king's books at £7. 14. 4., endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Master and Fellows of Trinity College, Cambridge. The church is dedicated to All Saints. The Master and Fellows pay £6 per annum towards the support of a school for poor children.

BARRINGTON, a parish in the southern division of the hundred of PETHERTON, county of SOMERSET, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. E.) from Ilminster, containing 453 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Taunton, and diocese of Bath and Wells, endowed with £800 private benefaction, and in the patronage of the Rev. Dr. W. Palmer. Hemp and flax are extensively cultivated here.

BARRINGTON (GREAT), a parish partly in the hundred of FARRINGTON, county of BERKS, but chiefly in the lower division of the hundred of SLAUGHTER, county of GLOUCESTER, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. W.) from Burford, containing 462 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Gloucester, rated in the king's books at £7. 6. 8., and in the patronage of Lord Dynevor. The church, which stands in the county of Gloucester, is dedicated to St. Mary: it is a handsome edifice, with a tower terminating in battlements and pinnacles, in the latest style of English architecture. The Windrush, a stream tributary to the Thames, runs through the parish. There are quarries of excellent freestone, from which the stone used in the erection and reparation of Westminster Abbey and Blenheim House was dug.

BARRINGTON (LITTLE), a parish in the lower division of the hundred of SLAUGHTER, county of GLOUCESTER, 3 miles (W.N.W.) from Burford, containing 159 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Gloucester, rated in the king's books at £4. 19. 2., and in the patronage of the Crown. The church is dedicated to St. Peter. BARTON, a township in the parish of PRESTON, hundred of AMOUNDERNESS, county palatine of LANCASTER, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. N. W.) from Preston, containing 414 inhabitants.

BARTON, a parish in the northern division of the wapentake of RUSHCLIFFE, county of NOTTINGHAM, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. W. by S.) from Nottingham, containing 403 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Nottingham, and diocese of York, rated in the king's books at £19. 3. 9., and in the patronage of the Archbishop of York. The church is dedicated to St. George. The navigable river Trent runs along the border of the parish. There is an intrenchment on a hill near the village, which, from the coins found, is supposed to have been constructed by the Britons.

BARTON, a parish in West ward, county of WESTMORLAND, comprising the chapelries of Hartsop with Patterdale, and Martindale, and the townships of High Barton, Low Winder, Sockbridge, and Yanwath with Eamont-Bridge, and containing 1212 inhabitants, of which number, 322 are in the township of High Barton, 4 miles (S. W. by S.) from Penrith. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Carlisle, rated in the king's books at £11. 1. 0 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of the Earl of Lonsdale. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a large low structure, beautifully situated in the vale of Eamont. This parish includes part of the lake of Ullswater, from which flows the river Eamont, separating Westmorland from Cumberland: at its western extremity is the lofty mountain Helvellyn, and at its eastern King Arthur's Round Table. Barton Fell contains a great variety of valuable minerals, including jasper, agate, onyx, cornelian, chalcedony, &c., besides spars, and petrifications of fish, shells, leaves, &c. At Hartsop and Patterdale are extensive quarries of fine blue slate, and at the latter place there is a lead mine. A free grammar school was founded, in 1649, by Dr. Lancelot Dawes and Dr. Gerard Langbaine, natives of this parish, and the latter, an industrious antiquary, whose endowment of it has been augmented, by subsequent benefactors, to about £90 per annum: the master has a salary of £60 per annum, and a dwelling-house. Here are several cairns, in one of which two Roman urns were found a few years ago : the vicinity also contains other relics of antiquity and various natural curiosities, and abounds with scenery of the most pleasing and picturesque character.

BARTON, a parish comprising the chapelries of Barton St. Cuthbert and Barton St. Mary (which form one township), and the township of Newton-Morrell, in the eastern division of the wapentake of GILLING, North riding of the county of YORK, and containing 467 inhabitants, of which number, 436 are in the township of Barton, 5 miles (S. W.) from Darlington. The livings of both chapelries are perpetual curacies, in the archdeaconry of Richmond, and diocese of Chester; that of St. Cuthbert's is endowed with £800 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Vicar of Stanwich; and that of St. Mary's is endowed with £400 royal bounty, and £200 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Vicar of Gilling. The neighbourhood abounds with excellent limestone. Mark Smithson, in 1683, endowed a school with £6 per annum, which has been increased by subsequent benefactions : the school-house was purchased in 1705, with a bequest from Thomas Smithson.

BARTON, a township in the parish of HAUKEWELL, western division of the wapentake of HANG, North riding of the county of YORK, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. by W.) from Richmond, containing 106 inhabitants.

BARTON in the BEANS, a township partly in the parish of SHACKERSTONE, partly in that of NAILSTONE, but chiefly in that of MARKET-BOSWORTH, hundred of SPARKENHOE, county of LEICESTER, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. by W.) from Market-Bosworth, containing 177 inhabitants. Here was formerly a chapel, now desecrated.

BARTON in the CLAY, a parish in the hundred of FLITT, county of BEDFORD, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S.) from Silsoe, containing 668 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Bedford, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £26. 9. 7., and in the patronage of the Crown. The church is dedicated to St. Nicholas. There is a place of worship for Particular Baptists. A school is endowed with property producing about £50 per annum, the bequest of Edward Willes, in 1807, for the instruction of forty poor children.

BARTON (ST. DAVID), a parish in the hundred of CATSASH, county of SOMERSET, 5 miles (N. E. by N.) from Somerton, containing 368 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the peculiar jurisdiction and patronage of the Prebendary of Barton in the Cathedral Church of Wells, rated in the king's books at £8, endowed with £200 private benefaction, £400 royal bounty, and £300 parliamentary grant.

BARTON (EARL'S), a parish in the hundred of HAMFORDSHOE, county of NORTHAMPTON, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. W.) from Wellingborough, containing 976 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Northampton, and diocese of Peterborough, rated in the king's books at £10, and in the patronage of the Crown. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a curious edifice, the tower being ornamented with ribs, or mouldings, like that at Barnack, in the Saxon, or Norman, style of architecture : the Norman style, and the early, decorated, and the later English styles, are displayed in other parts of the building. There are places of worship for Particular Baptists and Wesleyan Methodists. The navigable river Nen, by which the Northampton canal communicates with the North sea, passes through the parish.

BARTON (GREAT), a parish in the hundred of THEDWESTRY, county of SUFFOLK, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. E. by E.) from Bury St. Edmund's, containing 702 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Sudbury, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £10. 15. $7\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of Sir H. E. Bunbury, Bart. The church is dedicated to the Holy Innocents.

BARTON on the HEATH, a parish in the Brails division of the hundred of KINGTON, county of WARWICK, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S.) from Shipston upon Stour, containing 201 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Worcester, rated in the king's books at £12. 17. 11., and in the patronage of the President and Fellows of Trinity College, Oxford. The church is dedicated to St. Lawrence. The village is situated on the navigable river Avon. A Sunday school is supported by voluntary contributions, in addition to a rent-charge of £2. 8., given by the Rev. T. Haward, in 1742. In the vicinity is a large stone, called the "Four Shire Stone," where the counties of Gloucester, Worcester, Warwick, and Oxford meet.

BARTON upon HUMBER, a market town comprising the united parishes of St. Mary and St. Peter, in the northern division of the wapentake of YARBOROUGH, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, 34 miles (N.) from Lincoln, and 167 (N.) from London, on the road to Kingston upon Hull, containing, according to the last census, 2496 inhabitants (since increased to above 3000), of which number, 1191 are in the parish of St. Mary, and 1305 in that of St. Peter. This place is said to have been a station of considerable importance during the Saxon and Danish contests, and to have been surrounded by a rampart and a fosse, some remains of which, called the Castle Dykes, are still perceptible. At the time of the Conquest it was noted for its commerce, which continued to flourish until some time after Edward I. bestowed upon Wyke upon Hull the appellation of King's town upon Hull, and made it a free borough, when the trade of Barton began to decline. The town is pleasantly situated at the northern extremity of the Wolds, and on an acclivity rising gently from the southern bank of the river Humber, which is here from two to three miles broad : it consists of several streets, irregularly built, in which, among many old houses, are some of modern structure, and has been recently much improved, by the erection of many new buildings of various descriptions, and of several handsome and respectable dwelling-houses. The trade is chiefly in corn and flour, and there are several manufactories for rope, sacking, starch, plaster of Paris, bricks, and tiles. About six miles lower down the Humber is a ferry to Kingston upon Hull, which has existed from time immemorial, though there is little doubt that it was originally to Hessle, to which place the inhabitants on the Barton side may still demand a passage, at a proper state of the tide, on paying the ancient customary toll; it is noticed in Domesday-book, and was confirmed in the 45th of Edward III. The customary tolls and regulations, according to the records in the Tower, in the reign of Edward III., were as follows : "Every person to pay one penny; for every quarter of hard corn, twopence; for every quarter of malt, one penny; for one man and horse, sixpence; deals by the score, fourpence; nothing to be paid for under a horse-load; the boat, or boats, to return the next tide, if weather serve, and not to take in strangers from Hull, on the market day, to the prejudice of the said inhabitants; two or more of the boatmen to live in Barton; no boat to land upon the green shore but in case of necessity; also, upon request, neither boat to be denied for Hessele, paying the ancient fare; for every boat fivepence, and gift money one penny; and also to land all passengers without paying more than customary due." The ferry, which belongs to the crown, is at present leased to the corporation of Kingston upon Hull, who have also a right of ferry from Hull to Barton, or to any of the parts of Lindsey; the occupiers have at various times attempted to raise the fares, but have been resisted by the inhabitants with success. In 1785, an attempt being made by the lessee to increase the customary tolls, a subscription was raised to try the question, and legal proceedings were instituted; but a compromise was effected, and the fares were reduced to the former amount. Since that period different lessees have attempted to raise the fares, which have been increased for passengers, and more particularly for corn and merchandise; and since the employment of a steam-packet, which the present occupiers have introduced, in addition to the regular ferry boats, and of which the fares are arbitrary, the latter have been in some degree neglected, and the inhabitants have foreborne to enforce their prescriptive rights; but, on the termination of the present lease, which will expire in 1833, they intend to enforce the observance of the ancient customary tolls, and to recover their privileges. The market is on Monday, and on every alternate Monday there is a large cattle market; the fair is on Trinity Thursday. The town is within the jurisdiction of the county magistrates: constables and other officers are appointed at the court leet of the manor, which belongs to the crown. A court baron, formerly held every third week, for the recovery of debts under 40s., has been superseded by a court of requests, for the recovery of debts under £5, which is held monthly, under an act passed in the 47th of George III.

The living is a consolidated vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £19. 4. 8., and in the patronage of Charles Appleby, Esq. The church of St. Peter is an ancient and spacious structure, principally in the decorated style of English architecture, with a tower, the upper stage of which is evidently in the early Norman style, and the lower of a much earlier date, being probably one of the few specimens of Saxon architecture subsisting in England. The church of St. Mary, which is supposed to have been built as a chapel of ease to St. Peter's, having no endowment, is also a spacious edifice, partly in the Norman, but principally in the early style of English architecture, of which latter the tower is an elegant specimen. There are places of worship for Independents, and Primitive and Wesleyan Methodists. The school, for the instruction of poor children in reading, writing, and arithmetic, was founded, in 1722, by Mr. William Long, who endowed it with £7. 12. per annum, to which, in 1735, Mr. Nicholas Fountain added £50. The estates are vested in nine trustees, who have lately introduced the system of mutual instruction, and have added an infant school, the accomplishment of which has been greatly facilitated by the exertions of Robert Brown, Esq., clerk to the trustees. Almshouses, for four aged women of St. Mary's parish, were founded and endowed, in 1669, by Mr. Thomas Holland. About fifteen grey coats are annually given to poor men from the rental of property left for that purpose by Magdalen George; and about thirty suits of blue cloth are annually given to poor men, and thirty dresses of the same colour to poor women, from the rental of the Blue-coat charity estate, given by John Trippe, in 1669.

BARTON upon IRWELL, a township in the parish of ECCLES, hundred of SALFORD, county palatine of LANCASTER, 5½ miles (W. by S.) from Manchester, containing 7977 inhabitants. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. The manufacture of calico and nankeen goods is carried on here. The Duke of Bridgewater's canal crosses the river Irwell at this place, by means of a stone aqueduct of three arches, which was the first in England constructed over a navigable river.

BARTON (ST. MARY), a hamlet in that part of the parish of ST. MARY de LODE, GLOUCESTER, which is in the middle division of the hundred of DUDSTONE and KING'S BARTON, county of GLOUCESTER, containing 670 inhabitants.

BARTON (ST. MICHAEL'S), a hamlet in that part of the parish of ST. MICHAEL, GLOUCESTER, which is in the middle division of the hundred of DUDSTONE and KING'S BARTON, county of GLOUCESTER, containing 337 inhabitants.

BARTON under NEEDWOOD, a parochial chapel in the northern division of the hundred of OFFLOW, county of STAFFORD, 6 miles (S.W. by W.) from Burton upon Trent, containing 1287 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Stafford, and diocese of Lichfield and Coventry, endowed with £430 private benefaction, £200 royal bounty, and £1800 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Dean of Lichfield. The chapel, dedicated to St. James, is a handsome building in the later style of English architecture, erected in the reign of Henry VIII., by Dr. John Taylor, a native of this village. Barton is the head of one of the five wards into which the ancient royal forest of Needwood has been divided: it is in the honour of Tutbury, duchy of Lancaster, and within the jurisdiction of a court of pleas held at Tutbury every third Tuesday, for the recovery of debts under 40s. Courts leet and baron are held annually in October. The Grand Trunk canal passes through the parish: fairs are held on May 3rd and November 28th. Thomas Russell, in 1593, gave a rent-charge of £50. 10. for the establishment of a free grammar school, under the management of a committee: about sixty-five boys are instructed on Dr. Bell's plan, and the master receives a salary of £70 per annum, arising from the endowment, and from voluntary contributions.

BARTON (STEEPLE), a parish in the hundred of WOORON, county of OXFORD, 4½ miles (S.S.W.) from Deddington, containing, with the hamlets of Middle Barton and Sesswell-Barton, 404 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford, rated in the king's books at £7. 9. 4½., and in the patronage of Mr. and Mrs. Mister. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists.

BARTON le STREET, a parish comprising the township of Coneysthorpe, in the wapentake of BULMER, and the townships of Barton le Street and Butterwick in the wapentake of RYEDALE, North riding of the county of YORK, and containing 386 inhabitants, of which number, 176 are in the township of Barton le Street, 4½ miles (W. N. W.) from New Malton. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Cleveland, and diocese of York, rated in the king's books at £14. 18. 6½., and in the patronage of the Marchioness of Hertford. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is said to have been erected with materials from the ruins of St. Mary's abbey, York: it contains some curious specimens of ancient sculpture. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. The parish is bounded on the north by the river Rye.

BARTON le WILLOWS, a township in the parish of CRAMBE, wapentake of BULMER, North riding of the county of YORK, 10½ miles (N. E.) from York, containing 188 inhabitants.

BARTON-BENDISH, a village in the hundred of CLACKCLOSE, county of NORFOLK, 4 miles (N. by E.) from Stoke-Ferry, containing 440 inhabitants. It formerly comprised three parishes, in the archdeaconry of Norfolk, and diocese of Norwich, viz., St. Andrew's, St. Mary's, and all Saints'; the two latter have been united, and form a consolidated rectory, rated in the king's books at £11, and in the patronage of Sir H. Berney, Bart.; the living of St. Andrew's is a rectory, rated at £14, and in the patronage of the Crown. The Church of all Saints' is desecrated. Barton derives its distinguishing name from a dyke, called Bendish, constructed here by the Saxons as a boundary line to the hundred. Richard Jones, in 1783, bequeathed £200 for the instruction of poor children belonging to the united parishes.

BARTON-BLOUNT, a parish in the hundred of APPLETREE, county of DERBY, 11 miles (W.) from Derby, containing 73 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Derby, and diocese of Lichfield and Coventry, rated in the king's books at £4. 19. 1., endowed with £200 private benefaction, £600 royal bounty, and £300 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of F. Bradshaw, Esq. Barton-Blount is in the honour of Tutbury, duchy of Lancaster, and within the jurisdiction of a court of pleas held at Tutbury every third Tuesday, for the recovery of debts under 40s. The manor-house was garrisoned, in October 1644, by Col. Gill, on behalf of the parliamentarians.

BARTON-HARTSHORN, a parish in the hundred and county of BUCKINGHAM, 4½ miles (W. S. W.) from Buckingham, containing 113 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, with that of Chetwood annexed, in the archdeaconry of Bedford, and diocese of Lincoln, endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £600 royal bounty, and in the patronage of E. Lane, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. James.

BARTON-MILLS, a parish in the hundred of LACKFORD, county of SUFFOLK, 1½ mile (S. E.) from Mildenhall, containing 523 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Sudbury, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £4. 15. 10., and in the patronage of the Crown. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. There is a place of worship for Particular Baptists.

BARTON-SEAGRAVE, a parish in the hundred of HUXLOE, county of NORTHAMPTON, 1½ mile (S. E. by E.) from Kettering, containing 223 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Northampton, and diocese of Peterborough, rated in the king's books at £10. 17. 1., and in the patronage of the Duke of Buccleuch. The church, dedicated to St. Botolph, exhibits specimens of very ancient architecture.

BARTON-STACEY, a parish in the hundred of BARTON-STACEY, Andover division of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, 5 miles (S. S. W.) from Whitchurch; comprising the tythings of Barton-Stacey, Bransbury, Drayton, and Newton-Stacey, and containing 581 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Winchester, rated in the king's books at £8. 2. 1., and in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Winchester. The church is dedicated to All Saints. A fair is held here on July 31st. A National school is endowed with £10. 10. per annum, being part of the rental of land, producing about £40 per annum, left for charitable uses by Dorothy and Elizabeth Wright. A Roman road passed through the parish, and there are vestiges of a strong intrenchment at Bransbury.

BARTON-TURF, a parish in the hundred of TUNSTEAD, county of NORFOLK, 5 miles (E. by N.) from Coltishall, containing 371 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, united to the rectory of Irstead; in the archdeaconry of Norfolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £3. 13. 4. The church is dedicated to St. Michael.

BARTON-WESTCOTT, a parish in the hundred of WOOTTON, county of OXFORD, 4½ miles (E.) from Neat-Enstone, containing 253 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford, rated in the king's books at £7, and in the patronage of Thomas Coles and others. The church is dedicated to St. Edward.

BARUGH, a township in the parish of DARTON, wapentake of STAINCROSS, West riding of the county of YORK, 2½ miles (W. N. W.) from Barnesley, containing 396 inhabitants. Here is a small endowed school, also an almshouse for two poor widows.

BARUGH-AMBE, a township in the parish of KIRKBY-MISPERTON, PICKERING lythe, North riding of the county of YORK, 5½ miles (S. W.) from Pickering, containing 241 inhabitants. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists.

BARWELL, a parish in the hundred of SPARKENHOE, county of LEICESTER, 1½ mile (N. E. by N.) from Hinckley, containing, with the chapelries of Potters-Marston and Stapleton, 1371 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Leicester, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £20. 10. 7½., and in the patronage of the Rev. George Mettam. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. A school for teaching and clothing twenty children is endowed with about £20 per annum, the bequest of Gabriel Newton, in 1760.

BARWICK, a parish in the hundred of SMITHDON, county of NORFOLK, 4½ miles (S. S. W.) from Burnham-Westgate, containing 29 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Norfolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £6, endowed with £400 royal bounty, and in the patronage of Mrs. Ann Hoste. The church, now desecrated, was dedicated to St. Mary.

BARWICK, a parish in the hundred of HOUNSBOROUGH, BERWICK, and COKER, county of SOMERSET, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (S. by E.) from Yeovil, containing 400 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Wells, and diocese of Bath and Wells, rated in the king's books at £7. 14. 7., and in the patronage of John Newman, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Mary Magdalene.

BARWICK in ELMETT, a parish in the lower division of the wapentake of SKYRACK, West riding of the county of YORK, comprising the townships of Barnbow, Barwick, Kiddal with Potterton, Morwick with Scholes, and Roundhay, and containing 1667 inhabitants, of which number, 593 are in the township of Barwick, 8 miles (N. E. by E.) from Leeds. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of York, rated in the king's books at £33. 12. 6., and in the patronage of the King, as Duke of Lancaster. The church is dedicated to All Saints. A school is endowed with £14 per annum for the instruction of fourteen poor children. Here was anciently a castle of considerable extent and importance, supposed to have been a residence of some of the Northumbrian monarchs; the site was encompassed by a fortification, including an area of upwards of thirteen acres: the only remains are, a portion of the groundworks, and a mount, called Hall Tower Hill.

BARWICK-BASSETT, a parish in the hundred of CALNE, county of WILTS, $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. N. E.) from Calne, containing 162 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, united to the vicarage of Calne, in the peculiar jurisdiction of the Prebendal Court of Calne, annexed to the Treasurership in the Cathedral Church of Salisbury, in the archdeaconry of Wilts, and diocese of Salisbury. The church is dedicated to St. Nicholas. Henry Webb, in 1775, endowed a school with about £13 per annum, for the instruction of poor children.

BASCHURCH, a parish in the hundred of PIMHILL, county of SALOP, 8 miles (N. W. by N.) from Shrewsbury, containing 1277 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Salop, and diocese of Lichfield and Coventry, rated in the king's books at £10. 16., and in the patronage of the Crown. The church is dedicated to All Saints. The Ellesmere canal passes through the parish. Here is a school for teaching and clothing poor children, endowed with upwards of £140 per annum, arising from land bequeathed by Eleanor Harries, in 1716: there is also another small charity school. Vestiges of a Roman camp may be traced in the neighbourhood.

BASFORD, a township in the parish of WYBURNBURY, hundred of NANTWICH, county palatine of CHESTER, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E.) from Nantwich, containing 86 inhabitants.

BASFORD, a parish in the northern division of the wapentake of BROXTOW, county of NOTTINGHAM, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W. by N.) from Nottingham, containing 3599 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Nottingham, and diocese of York, rated in the king's books at £8. 17. 7., endowed with £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Crown. The church, dedicated to St. Leodgarius, is situated at the southern extremity of the village, and was re-pewed in 1819, when two hundred and twelve additional free sittings were added by the Incorporated Society for the enlargement of churches and chapels, at an expense of £200. There are three places of worship for Wesleyan Methodists and those of the New Connexion, and one for Baptists, to all of which Sunday schools are attached. The house of industry, for thirty-two parishes of the county, stands in this parish, and is a neat modern stone building, capable of containing from two to three hundred persons. Basford abounds with numerous springs of soft water, which renders it peculiarly advantageous for bleaching cotton hose and lace, the manufacture of which is carried on to a great extent. The beautiful process of gassing lace was invented by Mr. Samuel Hale of this village, which is secured to him by a valuable patent obtained in 1817: there are various cotton-mills, bleaching and dye houses, corn-mills, &c.

BASFORD, a township in the parish of CHEDDLETON, northern division of the hundred of TOTMONSLOW, county of STAFFORD, 3 miles (S. by E.) from Leek, containing 282 inhabitants.

BASHALL-EAVES, a township in that part of the parish of MITTON which is in the western division of the wapentake of STAINCLIFFE and EWGROSS, West riding of the county of YORK, 3 miles (W. by N.) from Clitheroe, containing 348 inhabitants. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists.

BASILDON, a chapelry in the parish of LAINDON, hundred of BARSTABLE, county of ESSEX, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. E. by S.) from Billericay, containing 142 inhabitants. The chapel is dedicated to the Holy Cross.

BASING, a parish in the hundred of BASINGSTOKE, Basingstoke division of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, 2 miles (E. N. E.) from Basingstoke, containing 1073 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to the vicarage of Basingstoke, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Winchester. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a large ancient structure with a central tower; it contains the family vault of the Paulets, in which all the dukes of Bolton of that family have been interred. National schools for children of both sexes have been established. This place is remarkable for having been the scene of the defeat of King Ethelred I. by the Danes, in 871. At the period of the Norman survey, Hugh de Port held fifty-five lordships in this county, of which Basing was the head. The castle was rebuilt, in a sumptuous manner, by Sir William Paulet, Knt., a lineal descendant from Hugh de Port, created Marquis of Winchester by Edward VI., and one of the most polite noblemen of the age: here, in 1560, he entertained Queen Elizabeth, who again honoured his great grandson William, the fourth marquis, with a visit, in 1601. John, the fifth marquis, was the nobleman who distinguished himself for his gallant defence of his house at Basing, in the cause of Charles I., through a series of sieges which lasted for two years, at the end of which, in October 1645, it was stormed and taken by Cromwell, who ordered it to be burnt to the ground. The fortress and its outworks occupied an area of about fourteen acres and a half, through which the Basingstoke canal now passes: the remains consist principally of the north gateway and part of the outer wall. The river Loddon also runs through the parish.

BASINGSTOKE, a market town and parish, having separate jurisdiction, locally in the hundred of Basingstoke, and in the Basingstoke division of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, $17\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. E.) from Winchester, and $45\frac{1}{2}$ (W. S. W.) from London, on the great western road, containing 3165 inhabitants. In the early part of the Saxon dynasty, Basingstoke was inferior to Old Basing; but at the time of the Conquest it had obtained the superiority, since, in the record of Domesday, it is described as a royal demesne, and as being in possession of a market. In 1261, Henry III., at the request of Walter de Merton, founded an hospital here for six poor priests, giving preference to those from Merton College, Oxford. In the reign of Henry VIII., Sir William, afterwards Lord, Sandys, in conjunction with Fox, Bishop of Winchester, instituted a guild, and erected a beautiful chapel here, which he dedicated to the Holy Ghost. This fraternity was dissolved in the reign of Edward VI., and the revenue was vested in the crown; but in the reign of Mary it was re-established, and the revenue appropriated to the maintenance of a priest, for the celebration of divine service, and the instruction of young men and boys belonging to the town. During the civil war in the reign of Charles I., it was suppressed by Cromwell, and the estates were seized by the parliament; but through the intercession of Dr. Morley, Bishop of Winchester, they were restored in 1670, and appropriated to their former use. Of the chapel, and the buildings connected with it, there are some remains on an eminence at the south-western side of the town, consisting of the southern and east walls, and a hexagonal tower at the north-west angle. The town is pleasantly situated in a fertile and well cultivated district, near the source of the small river Loddon, and consists of several streets, containing neat and well-built houses: it is paved under an act of parliament granted in 1815, and is amply supplied with water. Races, which continue for two days, and are well attended, take place annually in September. The trade is principally in corn and malt, which is carried on extensively, and greatly facilitated by the situation of the town at the junction of five principal roads, and by the Basingstoke canal, which communicates with the river Wey, near its confluence with the Thames: this canal was completed in 1796, at an expense of £180,000. The market is on Wednesday, and has lately been made a pitched market for corn: fairs are held on the Wednesday next after Whitsuntide, and October 11th, which latter is also a statute fair; a fair for the sale of cheese and cattle is also held on Basingstoke down, on Easter-Tuesday. The government, by charter of incorporation granted by James I., and confirmed by Charles I., is vested in a mayor, high steward, recorder, seven aldermen, and seven burgesses, assisted by a chamberlain, who is usually the eldest member of the corporation, a town-clerk, two serjeants at mace, and subordinate officers. The mayor, and two aldermen appointed by the corporation, are justices of the peace. The corporation hold courts of quarter session for the town and parish, and have power to hold a court of record for the recovery of debts under £10, but this court is falling into disuse. The county magistrates hold a petty session here for the division, on the first and third Wednesdays in every month; and a court leet is held under the lord of the manor, the jurisdiction of which extends over nineteen tythings. Basingstoke sent members to parliament from the 23rd of Edward I. to the 4th of Edward II., when, it is supposed, the privilege ceased on the solicitation of the inhabitants.

The living is a discharged vicarage, with the perpetual curacies of Basing and Upper Nately annexed, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Winchester, rated in the king's books at £30. 16. 5½., endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the President and Fellows of Magdalene College, Oxford. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a spacious and handsome structure, in the later style of English architecture, with a low embattled tower: it contains a small parochial library, the gift of Sir George Wheeler. There are places of worship for the Society of Friends, those in the Connexion of the late Countess of Huntingdon, Independents, and Wesleyan Methodists. The free grammar school, originally founded by Sir William Sandys, in connexion with the guild of the Holy Ghost, was re-established, after the dissolution of the fraternity in the reign of Edward VI., by Queen Mary, and has now a revenue exceeding £200: the master is appointed by the crown, and the usher by the corporation. There are twelve boys at present on the foundation, of whom those belonging to the town pay 15s., and those in the neighbourhood £1. 1., per quarter: the schoolroom is part of an ancient edifice, adjoining the remains of the chapel of the Holy Ghost, and supposed to have been originally the parish church. Dr. Joseph Warton, a poet and refined critic, and his brother Thomas, the poet-laureat, received here the early part of their education, under their father, Thomas Warton, B. D., some time Professor of Poetry in the University of Oxford, and subsequently master of this school. The Blue-coat school, in which ten boys are clothed, maintained, and educated, was founded and endowed, in 1646, by Mr. Richard Aldworth. A National school for one hundred boys was established by Dr. Sheppard, late vicar of Basingstoke; and another, for one hundred girls, by his widow, who erected a schoolroom, at an expense of £500; they are supported partly by endowment and partly by subscription. Almshouses for eight aged men or women, each of whom receives £6. 18. per annum, were founded and endowed by Sir James Deane, Knt., in 1607. Three almshouses, for aged widows of the Independent congregation, were founded and endowed by Mr. Joseph Page, in 1808; and several unendowed tenements, given by different individuals, are assigned rent-free to the poor of the parish, who participate in the advantages derivable from various other benefactions. On an eminence in the vicinity of the town is an ancient encampment of an elliptical form, one thousand one hundred yards in circumference, called Aubrey Camp. John de Basingstoke, a learned Greek scholar, and the intimate friend of Matthew Paris; Sir James Lancaster, an eminent navigator, who in the reign of Elizabeth explored the Arctic Sea; and Thomas Warton, above mentioned; were natives of this place.

BASINGTHORPE, a parish in the wapentake of BELTISLOE, parts of KESTEVN, county of LINCOLN, 3½ miles (N. W.) from Corby, containing, with Westby, 115 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £8. 17. 6. Sir W. Manners was patron in 1819. The church is dedicated to St. Thomas à Becket.

BASLOW, a chapelry in the parish of BAKEWELL, hundred of HIGH PEAK, county of DERBY, 3 miles (S. E.) from Stoney-Middleton, containing 872 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the peculiar jurisdiction of the Dean and Chapter of Lichfield, endowed with £800 royal bounty, and £1000 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Duke of Devonshire. The chapel, which is chiefly in the later style of English architecture, has a tower and low spire at the western end of the north aisle. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. Baslow is in the honour of Tutbury, duchy of Lancaster, and within the jurisdiction of a court of pleas held at Tutbury every third Tuesday, for the recovery of debts under 40s. About half a mile from the village is Stanton-Ford school, for the education of ten children, endowed with about £15 per annum, and a house and garden for the master.

BASSALEG, a parish partly in the lower, but chiefly in the upper, division of the hundred of WENTLOOG, county of MONMOUTH, 2½ miles (W.) from Newport, comprising the hamlets of Duffrin, Graig, and Rotherstone, and containing 1329 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Llandaff, rated in the king's books at £14. 13. 6½, and in the patronage of the Bishop of Llandaff. The church is dedicated to St. Basil. There is a place of worship for Particular Baptists. The river Ebn, and the Monmouthshire canal, pass through the parish, which is partly bounded by the river Severn. A free school is endowed with £20 per annum. On the brow of a hill, a mile from the village, there is a circular intrenchment, called Craeg y Saesson, supposed to have been a Saxon camp, a mile from which is one called Pen y Park Newydd, probably a fortress of the Britons. A priory was founded here in 1101, which became a cell to the abbey of Glastonbury.

BASSENTHWAITE, a parish in ALLERDALE ward below Derwent, county of CUMBERLAND, 5 miles (N. W. by N.) from Keswick, containing 537 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Carlisle, and in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Carlisle. The church is dedicated to St. Bridget. The parish includes a portion of the lofty mountain Skiddaw, which is situated at its south-eastern extremity: it is intersected by the river Derwent, and contains the beautiful lake of Bassenthwaite, or Broadwater, which covers about fifteen hundred acres of ground, being enriched throughout with scenery of a sublime character. There is a mine of antimony in the neighbourhood, and lead-ore has also been found. A school-house has been erected by subscription, but it has no endowment.

BASSETT-HOUSE, an extra-parochial liberty, in the hundred of SPARKENHOE, county of LEICESTER, containing 15 inhabitants.

BASSILDON, a parish in the hundred of MORETON, county of BERKS, 7½ miles (N. W. by W.) from Reading, containing, exclusively of the chapelry of Ashamstead, 686 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Berks, and diocese of Salisbury, rated in the king's books at £7. 14. 4½, and in the alternate patronage of the Rev. R. B. Fisher and J. Hopkins, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Bartholomew. In Domesday-book mention is made of two churches here. The river Thames separates the parish from Oxfordshire. In the reign of Edward II., a weekly market, and a fair on St. Barnabas' day were granted. A school was endowed with a cottage and a rent-charge of £4 by William Allen, in 1720, for the instruction of ten poor children.

BASSINGBOURNE, a parish in the hundred of ARMINGFORD, county of CAMBRIDGE, 3¼ miles (N. W. by N.) from Royston, containing, with the hamlet of Kneesworth, 1213 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Ely, rated in the king's books at £7. 0. 10., and in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Westminster. The church is dedicated to St. Peter. A room adjoining the north aisle has been appropriated to the reception of a parochial library, founded in 1717, by Edward Nightingale. A fair is held on the festival of St. Peter and St. Paul. There is an endowment of about £13 per annum for the instruction of poor children.

BASSINGHAM, a parish in the lower division of the wapentake of BOOTHBY-GRAFFO, parts of KESTEVEN, county of LINCOLN, 9 miles (S. W. by S.) from Lincoln, containing 613 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £26. 16. 3., and in the patronage of the President and Fellows of Corpus Christi College, Oxford. The church is dedicated to St. Michael. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. The rector allows an annuity of £4 for teaching poor children. The several manor-houses in the parish are occupied as farm-houses.

BASSINGTON, a township in the parish of EGLINGHAM, northern division of COQUETDALE ward, county of NORTHUMBERLAND, 3½ miles (N. W. by W.) from Alnwick, containing 12 inhabitants.

BASTON, a parish in the wapentake of NESS, parts of KESTEVEN, county of LINCOLN, 3¼ miles (N. N. W.) from Market-Deeping, containing, with portions of certain extra-parochial places in the fens, 682 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £6. 1. 3., and in the patronage of the Crown. The church is dedicated to St. John the Baptist.

BASTWICK, a hamlet in the parish of REFFS, western division of the hundred of FLEGG, county of NORFOLK, 5 miles (N. N. E.) from Acle. The population is returned with the parish. Here was anciently a chapel, which has long been in ruins.

BASWICH, a parish in the eastern division of the hundred of CUTTLESTONE, county of STAFFORD, 2¼ miles (E. S. E.) from Stafford, comprising the chapelries of Acton-Trussel and Bednall, and the townships of Brockton, Milford, and Walton, and containing 1376 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the peculiar jurisdiction of the Prebendary of Whittington and Baswich in the Cathedral Church of Lichfield, endowed with £400 private benefaction, and £2000 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of J. Inge and J. N. Seal, Esqrs., alternately. The church is dedicated to the Holy Trinity. The Staffordshire and Worcestershire canal passes through the parish.

BATCOMBE, a parish in the hundred of YETMINS-TER, Sherborne division of the county of DORSET, 10 miles (S. by W.) from Sherborne, containing 177 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, united in 1772 to that of Frome-Vauchurch, in the archdeaconry of Dorset, and diocese of Bristol, rated in the king's books at £9.9.9½. The church is dedicated to St. Mary.

BATCOMBE, a parish, forming a detached portion of the hundred of WHITESTONE, county of SOMERSET, 3¼ miles (N. by E.) from Bruton, containing 792 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, with the perpetual curacy of Upton-Noble annexed, in the archdeaconry of Wells, and diocese of Bath and Wells, rated in the king's books at £26.14.4½, and in the patronage of the Duke of Buckingham. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. A rent-charge of £2 was left by Mr. Jarvis, for the instruction of six poor children.

Arms.

BATH, a city having separate jurisdiction, locally in the hundred of Bath-Forum, county of SOMERSET, 12 miles (E. by S.) from Bristol, 19 (N.N.E.) from Wells, and 106 (W.) from London, on the direct road to Bristol, containing 36,811 inhabitants. The name of this city is obviously derived from its medicinal springs, the efficacy of which has been celebrated from remote antiquity. It is stated to have been a British town prior to the Roman invasion, and to have been named Caer Badon, or the place of baths, from an accidental discovery of the medicinal properties of its waters by Bladud, son of Lud Hudibras, King of Britain, who, according to the fabulous histories of those times, having been banished from court on account of leprosy, came to this place, and, being cured of that disease by using the waters, is said, after his accession to the throne, to have built a palace here, and to have encouraged the resort of persons affected with cutaneous disorders. So generally was this opinion entertained even till the eighteenth century, that his statue was erected in the king's bath, with an inscription to that effect, in 1699. The researches of modern historians, however, have induced them to reject this tradition, as entirely destitute of support, and to ascribe the foundation of the city to the Romans, in the reign of Claudius, who, having ascertained the healing quality of its waters, constructed, on a skilful and extensive plan, their balnea, consisting of frigidaria, tepidaria, olothesia, sudatoria, &c., for the better enjoyment of the luxury of the bath, and gave to the station the name Aqua Solis. They erected a temple to Minerva, with many votive altars, and numerous other buildings, the remains of which, discovered at various periods, strikingly indicate their splendour and magnificence. They surrounded the city with walls twenty feet in height, and of prodigious thickness, including an area in the form of an irregular pentagon, of which the larger diameter was one thousand two hundred feet, and the smaller one thousand one hundred and forty. In the centre were the prætorium, the baths, and the temple; and in the walls were four gates terminating the principal streets, from which they constructed roads leading to the neighbouring stations, Verlucio, Ischalis, Abona, &c. After the departure of the Romans from Britain, Bath, then called Caer Palladur, the city of the waters of Pallas, remained in the possession of the Britons for upwards of a century, being disturbed only by one or two unsuccessful attacks of the Saxon chieftains, Ælla and Cerdic, who were bravely repulsed by the renowned King Arthur.

In the year 577, the Saxons, having nearly overrun all the rest of the kingdom, fell with irresistible fury on the western part of England; and having gained the memorable battle of Deorham, about eight miles distant, Bath fell a prey to their ravages, and was abandoned to indiscriminate plunder. Its temple was destroyed, its altars were overthrown, and its baths and other splendid monuments of Roman grandeur reduced to a heap of ruins. How long it continued in this state of desolation is uncertain, but probably the Saxons, after having retained uninterrupted possession of it for a time, turned their attention to its restoration: they rebuilt the walls and other fortifications upon the original foundations, with the old materials, cementing them with a liquid substance, which time has rendered harder than stone. It is probable that they also directed their attention to the baths, which they soon restored, for the Saxon names of the city were Hat Bathur, hot baths, and Ace mannes ceaster, city of invalids. After their conversion to Christianity, a nunnery was erected here, in 676, by King Osric, which was destroyed during the wars of the Octarchy, and on its site a college of Secular canons was founded, in 775, by Offa, King of Mercia, who had taken Bath from the king of Wessex, and annexed it to his own dominions: he also rebuilt the conventual church of St. Peter, in which Edgar was crowned king of England, by Dunstan, Archbishop of Canterbury, in 973, and the anniversary of his coronation continued to be celebrated in the time of Camden, in commemoration of the many privileges which he granted to the citizens on that occasion. Edgar converted the college into a Benedictine monastery, which, with the church, was again demolished by the Danes.

At the time of the Norman survey, Bath contained one hundred and seventy-eight burgesses, of whom sixty-four held under the king, ninety under different feudatories of the crown, and twenty-four under the abbot of St. Peter's. In the first year of the reign of William Rufus, Geoffrey, Bishop of Coutances, and Robert de Mowbray, who had risen in support of the claim of Robert, Duke of Normandy, to the throne of England, obtained possession of the city by assault, and reduced the greater part of it to ashes. From this calamity it soon recovered, under the favour of John de Villula, who, on his promotion to the see of Wells, about the year 1090, purchased the city from Henry I. for five hundred marks, and built a new and spacious church here for that see, removing the episcopal chair to this place, where, during the festival of Easter in 1107, he had the honour of entertaining Henry I. In the turbulent reign of Stephen, Bath suffered greatly from its proximity to Bristol, then the headquarters of the Empress Matilda, and was alternately occupied by the adherents of both parties. It continued in the possession of its bishops until 1193, when Bishop Savaric transferred it to Richard I., in exchange for the abbey of Glastonbury: this monarch made it a free borough, and invested it with many privileges, in consequence of which it began to participate in the commerce of the country, and to increase in wealth and importance. The manufacture of woollen cloth, which was introduced into England in the year 1330, was established here under the auspices of the monks, in consequence of which the shuttle was introduced into the arms of the monastery. During the civil war in the reign of Charles I., Bath was fortified for the king; but the Marquis of Hertford, who commanded the royal forces, having retired into Wales, it fell into the hands of the parliamentarians, and became the head-quarters of the army raised by Waller in that part of the country, to retrieve the loss which his party had sustained in the battle of Statton. In 1643, the battle of Lansdown, in the immediate neighbourhood, took place, in which the royalists, notwithstanding many local disadvantages, drove the parliamentary forces from the field, and compelled them to retire into the city; in commemoration of which, a monument was erected on the spot by an ancestor of the present Marquis of Lansdowne, in 1720. After this battle the royalists regained possession of the city, which they held till it was finally surrendered to the parliament, in 1645. On the restoration of Charles II., the citizens presented a congratulatory address through the celebrated William Prynne, then one of their representatives; and in the autumn of 1663, the king paid a visit to Bath, on which occasion his chief physician having recommended the internal use of the waters, the adoption of this practice became general. After the suppression of Monmouth's rebellion, four persons, who had been condemned by Judge Jeffreys, were executed here.

The city continued within the limits prescribed to it by the Romans till the year 1720, and its suburbs consisted merely of a few scattered houses: celebrated only for the medicinal properties of its hot springs, it was for several years visited merely by invalids. The perseverance of Mr. John Wood, an enterprising architect, who was encouraged by the proprietors of land in the vicinity, about the year 1728, first led to its improvement, and the excellent quarries of freestone in the neighbourhood facilitated the execution of an enterprise which has embellished it with splendid edifices, and raised it to the highest rank as a place of fashionable resort. The town is pleasantly situated on the banks of the river Avon, along which its buildings extend more than two miles, decorating the acclivities, and crowning the summits, of that fine range of hills by which it is environed. Over that part of the Avon which skirts the eastern side of the town are two stone bridges, one of ancient, the other of modern, erection; and a handsome iron bridge has recently been constructed, connecting Walcot with Bathwick, and affording a direct entrance from the London road into the most improved part of the town. Among the earliest of the modern improvements is Queen's square, the houses in which are decorated with columns and pilasters of the Corinthian order; in the centre is an obelisk seventy feet high, erected in 1738, by Beau Nash, to commemorate the visit of the then Prince and Princess of Wales, who occupied a house in the square. The Circus is a noble range of uniform edifices, embellished with successive series of double pillars of the Doric, Ionic, and Corinthian orders, and enclosing an extensive area, disposed in shrubberies, with a gravel walk round a reservoir in the centre, from which the houses are supplied with water. The Royal Crescent is characterised by a simple grandeur of elevation, and adorned by a lofty colonnade of the Ionic order, rising from a rustic basement, and supporting a cornice with a rich entablature; a lawn of more than twenty acres slopes gradually to the margin of the Avon, commanding a fine view of the city, the beautiful vale below it, and the hills on the opposite side of the river. The North and South Parades are handsome ranges of building, with terraces raised on arches, and commanding extensive and varied prospects. The Orange-grove, formerly the chief place of fashionable amusement, now principally composed of lodging-houses, has been planted with trees, and in the centre is an obelisk, commemorating the restoration of the Prince of Orange to health by drinking the Bath waters. Behind the Royal Crescent are St. James' square, Lansdown Crescent, and Camden, Portland, and Somerset Places, with Mount Sion, an extensive range of houses on the summit of the Beacon-hill, Belle-Vue, Cavendish Crescent, and Lansdown Place; besides which are the Paragon, Belmont, and Belvidere, rising above each other. In the new town, on the eastern bank of the Avon, is Laura Place, a neat range of buildings in the form of a lozenge, intersected diagonally by Great Pultney-street, a noble series of mansions, at the extremity of which are Sydney Gardens, occupying an extensive area surrounded by several ranges of building forming Sydney Place, not inferior in beauty and elegance to the most splendid part of the city. The improvements in this part of the town will speedily be extended by means of a subscription, which has been raised for that purpose.

A grand pump-room, the centre of attraction during the fashionable season, was erected in 1797; it is a handsome building, eighty-five feet in length, forty-eight in width, and thirty-four in height. The interior, which is lighted by a double range of windows, is decorated with pillars of the Corinthian order, supporting a rich entablature and a lofty coved ceiling: at the west end is a handsome orchestra, and at the eastern, a well-executed marble statue of the celebrated Beau Nash, under whose superintendence for many years, as master of the ceremonies, the elegant amusements of this place were regulated, upon a system combining the most liberal urbanity with the most refined decorum. The principal entrance is through a handsome portico of four lofty columns of the Corinthian order, supporting a triangular pediment, under the tympanum of which is inscribed "APIETON MEN YADP." The king's bath contains three hundred and sixty-four tons of water, and is conveniently fitted up with seats and recesses, having also a handsome colonnade of the Doric order, with the statue of Bladud, the traditional patron of the waters. The queen's bath, adjoining it, has also suitable apartments. The cross bath, so called from a cross erected in the centre of it, and the hot bath, so named from its superior degree of heat, the mean temperature being 117° of Fahrenheit, have the convenience of dry and vapour baths; and a small pump-room has been recently erected. Besides these public baths, which are now principally used by the hospital patients, there are private baths belonging to the corporation, and the abbey baths, the property of Earl Manvers, which are chiefly resorted to by the wealthier visitors. The waters contain carbonic acid and nitrogen gases, sulphate and muriate of soda, sulphate and carbonate of lime, and silicious earth, with a minute portion of oxyde of iron, and are efficacious in gout, rheumatism, palsy, biliary obstruction, and cutaneous disorders. The Bath Literary and Philosophical Institution was established in 1820: the buildings, occupying the site of the lower assembly-rooms, which were burnt down in 1820, are of the Doric order, and comprise a library, lecture-room, laboratory, and two rooms for a museum, exclusively of the housekeeper's apartments: it is open to both visitors and inhabitants. The Bath and West of England Society for the encouragement of Agriculture, the Arts, Manufactures, and Commerce, by the distribution of premiums and medals, was instituted in 1777, at the suggestion of Mr. Edmund Rack. The public subscription library, established in 1800, contains an extensive and well-assorted collection of books in the various branches of science and general literature: it is conducted under judicious regulations, and is liberally supported: there are also numerous circulating libraries. The Mechanics' Institution, recently formed, occupies a commodious building at the corner of York and Abbey streets.

The chief sources of amusement are the subscription assemblies and concerts, which are held during the season, under the superintendence of a master of the ceremonies, whose office being equally honourable and lucrative, has been warmly contested by the successive candidates. The rooms are superbly elegant: the ball-room is one hundred and five feet long, forty-three wide, and twenty-two high; the card-rooms, library, and rooms for refreshment, are furnished in a style of unrivalled splendour. The subscription concerts, of which there are nine during the season, are conducted upon a scale of the most comprehensive liberality. The lower assembly-rooms, which were destroyed by fire in 1820, were nearly equal to the upper rooms in elegance of decoration and convenience of arrangement. The city assemblies, for those who are not eligible as subscribers to the upper rooms, are held, by permission of the corporation, in the banquet-room of the guildhall, every alternate Monday. The theatre, a well-adapted and handsome edifice, in the centre of the city, among the buildings of which it is distinguished by the loftiness of its elevation, is handsomely fitted up, and splendidly decorated: it contains three tiers of boxes; the ceiling is divided into compartments embellished with exquisite paintings by Cassali, which were removed from Fonthill Abbey. The building was completed in 1805, and is regularly open during the season; it has been long and deservedly eulogized for the excellence of the performances, and many actors who have attained the highest degree of eminence on the London stage have made their debüt here. Sydney Gardens, the Vauxhall of Bath, are laid out with great taste and beauty; they afford an agreeable promenade at all times, and, during the summer, attract fashionable and numerous assemblages to public entertainments and exhibitions of fireworks, upon which occasions they are brilliantly illuminated. The Subscription Club-house, in York-buildings, containing a spacious suite of elegant rooms, was established in 1720, upon the plan of most of the superior club-houses in London, the members of which establishments are eligible as subscribers without ballot: the annual subscription is six guineas and a half. The Bath and West of England Subscription-rooms, in Pulteney-street, upon a similar plan, and uniting with it the accommodations of an hotel, are fitted up in a very superior style; the members of the York club, and those of the principal club-houses of London, are eligible as subscribers, the annual subscription being two guineas and a half. There are also subscription billiard-rooms in Milsom-street, to which those only are admissible who are eligible to the assembly-rooms. The Lodge of Freemasons hold their meetings in York-street, where a hall was erected in 1817, which may be ranked among the architectural ornaments of the city. There are two extensive riding-schools, well conducted on moderate terms, in one of which is a spacious covered ride for invalids in unfavourable weather. Lansdown and Claverton down afford delightful equestrian excursions, displaying much variety, and abounding in rich and interesting scenery. The races take place on Lansdown, the week after Ascot races; and there is a spring meeting in April, for half-bred mares.

The town, by means of the river, which is navigable to Bristol, and the Kennet and Avon canal, by which it maintains an inland communication with London and the intermediate places, is favourably situated for trade; but the only branch of manufacture carried on is that of coarse woollen cloth, called Bath-coating, and kersey-mere, which is made in the neighbourhood. The markets are held on Wednesday and Saturday, in an area behind the guildhall, the wings of which form the principal entrances; the market house is an extensive and commodious range of building: the corn and cattle markets are held in Walcot, and the coal market in Loo-close, where there is a weighing machine, and an officer in attendance to see all transactions equitably concluded. The fairs are on February 14th and July 10th.

Corporate Seal.

This city enjoyed, under Edgar and other Saxon monarchs, many valuable privileges, which were afterwards confirmed by Richard I., subsequently recognized and enlarged by Queen Elizabeth (who gave the citizens a charter of incorporation), and finally by George III., who made such modifications in the charter as the increasing importance of the place required. The government is vested in a mayor, recorder, two bailiffs (who act as sheriffs), a chamberlain, deputy-chamberlain, ten aldermen, and twenty common council-men, assisted by a town-clerk, two serjeants at mace, and subordinate officers. The mayor, who is also coroner and clerk of the market, and the two bailiffs, are chosen annually from among the aldermen, on the Monday before Michaelmas day; the mayor, aldermen, and two senior common council-men, are justices of the peace. The freedom of the city is obtained by gift from the corporation, who have power to choose citizens or free burgesses from among the inhabitants generally. The elective franchise was conferred in the reign of Edward I., since which time the city has continued to return two members to parliament: the right of election is vested solely in the corporation, and the mayor is the returning officer: the influence of the Marquis of Bath prevails in the return of one of the members. The corporation hold a court of session quarterly, and a court of record every Monday, for all personal actions arising within the city and liberty: a court of requests, for the recovery of debts under £10, is held every Monday, by commissioners appointed under an act of the 45th of George III., the jurisdiction of which extends over the city and liberty, the parish of Walcot, and the several parishes and places in the hundreds of Bath-Forum and Wellow, and the liberties of Hampton, Claverton, and Easton with Amrill, in the county of Somerset. The guildhall is an elegant structure of freestone; the front is decorated with a portico of four lofty Corinthian columns, rising from a rustic basement, and supporting a triangular pediment, with a rich entablature and cornice, in the tympanum of which are the city arms, and on the apex a finely sculptured figure of Justice; above the cornice is a handsome balustrade, with urns: this elegant building comprises, on the ground floor, a handsome vestibule, sessions hall, offices for the courts of record and requests, and for the chamberlain and town clerk; and, in the upper story, a magnificent suite of apartments for civic entertainments. In the mayor's room is a beautiful head of Minerva, or of Apollo, of gilt brass; it was discovered in 1727, at the depth of sixteen feet below the surface of the ground, in Stall-street, and is thought to be part of a mutilated statue, the remainder of which is supposed to be buried near the same spot. The prison is a spacious building, occupying an area sixty feet in front, and eighty feet in depth, with a large court-yard, and cells in which delinquents are confined previously to their committal to the county gaol.

Jointly with Wells, Bath is the head of a diocese, which is co-extensive with the county of Somerset. The Abbey church, dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul, is a venerable and finely proportioned cruciform structure, in the later style of English architecture, of which it forms one of the purest specimens: from the intersection, an irregularly quadrilateral tower rises to the height of one hundred and sixty-two feet. It occupies the site, and is built partly with the materials, of the conventual church of the monastery founded by Osric, which had subsisted, under different forms of government, for more than eight hundred years. This church having become dilapidated, Bishop Oliver King (as it is said, admonished in a dream, of which a memorial is sculptured on the west front), began to rebuild it in 1495; but dying before it was completed, and the citizens refusing to purchase it from the commissioners of Henry VIII., the walls were left roofless, till Dr. James Montague, Bishop of the diocese, aided by a liberal contribution from the nobility and gentry resident in the county, completed it, in the year 1606. There are some remains of the monastery on the south side of the Abbey Church, consisting chiefly of the gatehouse in which James II., Mary, consort of William III., Queen Anne and her consort, George, Prince of Denmark, successively resided: the revenue, at the dissolution, was £695. 6. 1½. By charter of Elizabeth, the several parishes of St. Peter and St. Paul, or the Abbey parish, St. James, and St. Michael, were consolidated into one rectory, to which the vicarages of Widcomb and Lyncomb were annexed. The living is in the archdeaconry of Bath, and diocese of Bath and Wells, rated in the king's books at £20. 17. 11., and in the patronage of the Mayor and Corporation. St. James' church, rebuilt in 1768, is an elegant structure in the later style of English architecture. St. Michael's, erected in 1744, is of the Doric order, with a handsome dome. The parochial church of Walcot, a spacious edifice within the liberty of the city, was rebuilt in 1780, and has lately received an addition of two thousand one hundred sittings, of which number, one thousand eight hundred are free, and towards defraying the expense of which the Incorporated Society for building and enlarging churches and chapels granted £1000. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Bath, and diocese of Bath and Wells, rated in the king's books at £6. 19. 9½., and in the patronage of the Lord of the Manor. Christ-church was erected by subscription, in 1798, for the especial accommodation of the poor; it is a fine building in the later style of English architecture: the living is a perpetual curacy, exempt from the jurisdiction of the Archdeacon, and in the patronage of the Bishop of the diocese. St. Mary Magdalene's, an ancient edifice overspread with ivy, on Beachen Cliff; and St. Michael's chapel, near the cross, are parochial chapels, the former in the gift of the Crown, and the latter in the patronage of the Rector of Bath. St. Mary's chapel, in Queen-square, built by subscription in 1735, is a handsome edifice in the Grecian style of architecture; the exterior is of the Doric, and the interior of the Ionic, order. The Octagon chapel, in Milsom-street, was erected in 1767, and is much admired for the elegance of its style. Margaret chapel, in Margaret-buildings, is a spacious and handsome structure in the early style of English architecture. The chapel in Lansdown Place, erected in 1794, and dedicated to All Saints, is a good specimen of the decorated style; there are twelve fine windows, in which are painted the heads of the twelve Apostles, and the east window is ornamented with a painting of the Last Supper. Kensington chapel, a neat modern building near the London road, was erected by subscription, in 1795; and Laura chapel, an elegant and well arranged edifice in Henrietta-street, was built by tontine subscription, in 1796. There are places of worship for Baptists, the Society of Friends, Independents, Methodists, Moravians, Unitarians, and Roman Catholics.

The free grammar school was founded by Edward VI., in 1552, and endowed with lands belonging to the dissolved religious houses: the management is vested in the corporation, who appoint the master, and allow him a salary of £60 per annum, and an excellent house. The rectory of Charlcombe was annexed to the mastership of this school by the late Rev. William Robins, for the instruction of ten additional boys, sons of freemen, or inhabitants of the city, in classical and commercial learning. The Blue-coat charity school, for fifty boys and fifty girls, was founded in 1711, by Robert Nelson, Esq., and is chiefly supported by subscription: an apprentice-fee of £6 is given with each boy, and one of £5 with each girl, on leaving the school. There are also two other free schools for girls, besides one for the instruction of poor children of Bath and Bath-Forum, a National school, and a Roman Catholic free school. The Bath hospital, open to the poor from every part of the kingdom, whose maladies require the use of the Bath waters, is supported by subscription, and is under the direction of a president and governors, incorporated by act of parliament, who have a common seal, and are empowered to fill up vacancies in their own body. The Bath United hospital, combining the objects of the late city dispensary and casualty infirmary, recently established, and for which a spacious building has been erected near the cross bath, and the infirmary in Kingston-buildings, for curing diseases of the eye, are supported by subscription. There are three societies for the relief of women during child-birth: an asylum for the support of young females, and for instructing them in household work: a house of protection for orphans and destitute females; an establishment for aged, and an asylum for young females; and charitable institutions of various kinds, adapted to the wants of the distressed poor, and to the mitigation of almost every species of calamity, all which are liberally supported and judiciously regulated. St. John's hospital, for the maintenance of six aged men and six women, was founded in the reign of Henry II., by Reginald Fitz-Jocelyn, who endowed it with lands then producing £22 per annum; the management is vested in the corporation: attached to this institution is a neat chapel, in which the master, who must be a clergyman of the established church, officiates daily, and receives a liberal stipend. Partis' College, a capacious range of building, occupying three sides of a quadrangle, on the upper road to Bristol, and comprising a chapel and separate dwellings for thirty decayed gentlewomen, ten of whom must be either the widows or daughters of clergymen, was founded and endowed by Mrs. Partis, in fulfilment of the intention of her husband, Fletcher Partis, Esq., who died before it was carried into effect: each of the inmates has a house containing four apartments, a garden, and a liberal pecuniary allowance.

The remains of antiquity, found at different times in this city, are of British, Roman, and Saxon origin, and clearly demonstrate the fact of its having been severally occupied by those people. Among the British antiquities are celts, or stone hatchets, hand millstones, boars' teeth, and amber beads, found in their burial-places, a small silver coin, having on the obverse a rude head in profile, and on the reverse a star, or wheel. Among the Roman was found, in 1753, a pedestal with a Latin inscription: in 1755, parts of the Roman baths, and several of the large tubulated bricks, which conveyed the heat to the sudatoria, were discovered; and in 1790, a votive altar, fragments of fluted Corinthian columns, basso-relievos, and other relics of the temple of Minerva, besides numerous coins of the emperors Nero, Trajan, Adrian, Antonine, Gallienus, Claudius, Gothicus, Maxentius, and Constantine, with some of Carausius, who assumed the Roman purple in Britain, were found. On digging the foundation for the new bridge over the Avon to Walcot, the remains of an old ford were observable, and a leaden vessel was found, containing some hundreds of denarii, and several small brass coins from the time of the Emperor Valens to that of Eugenius: for the reception of these, a room was appropriated by the corporation, in which they are deposited, with a due regard to classification. The Saxon remains, exclusively of coins, coffins, &c., consist of what is still visible in the city walls, erected by them on the Roman foundation, in which are inserted fragments of the ruined temple, pieces of sculpture, and parts of triumphal arches, intermixed with the original materials. In a stone coffin was also found a small copper box, in the form of a rouleau, divided into two parts, the upper part being covered by a slide, probably intended for perfume, and the lower part filled with small silver coins resembling the early Saxon scatta. John Hales, who, in 1612, was appointed Greek Professor at Oxford, and who, in the year following, pronounced the funeral oration of Sir Thomas Bodley, founder of the Bodleian library, was a native of this city, and received the rudiments of his education in the grammar school. Benjamin Robins, a celebrated mathematician, and the writer of the account of Commodore Anson's voyage round the world, was born here in 1707. Closely connected with Bath for several years, though not a native, was Ralph Allen, Esq., of Prior Park, an elegant mansion, a few miles to the south, which was in his time the resort of several of the wits and literati of the age: this gentleman, supposed to be the original of Fielding's Allworthy, in his novel of Tom Jones, amassed a splendid fortune by being the first who farmed the cross-posts throughout the kingdom, and having been elected a member of the corporation of Bath, exercised great influence in the regulation of its municipal affairs: he died in 1777, and was interred at Bathampton, in the south aisle of the church, where a tablet has been erected to his memory. Bath gives the title of marquis to the family of Thynne, of Long-leat House.

BATHAMPTON, a parish in the hundred or liberty of HAMPTON and CLAVERTON, though locally in the hundred of Bath-Forum, county of SOMERSET, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (N. E. by E.) from Bath, containing 243 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, consolidated with that of Bath-Ford, in the archdeaconry of Bath, and diocese of Bath and Wells, rated in the king's books at £7. 17. 1., and endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty. The church is dedicated to St. Nicholas. The parish is within the jurisdiction of the court of requests held at Bath every Monday, for the recovery of debts under £10.

BATHEALTON, a parish in the hundred of MILVERTON, county of SOMERSET, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S.) from Wiveliscombe, containing 105 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Bath, and diocese of Bath and Wells, rated in the king's books at £7. 2. 6., and in the patronage of the Bishop of Bath and Wells. The church is dedicated to St. Bartholomew. A mile westward from it is a circular intrenchment, within the area of which some Roman coins have been discovered.

BATH-EASTON, a parish in the hundred of BATH-FORUM, county of SOMERSET, 3 miles (N. E.) from Bath, containing, with a portion of the liberty of Easton and Amrill, 1330 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, with the perpetual curacy of St. Catherine annexed, in the archdeaconry of Bath, and diocese of Bath and Wells, rated in the king's books at £9. 6. 5., and in the patronage of the Dean and Canons of Christ Church, Oxford. The church, which has a beautiful tower, is dedicated to St. John the Baptist. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. The village, divided into Upper and Lower Bath-Easton, is situated on the London road, between the Lower Avon and Lansdown, and at the base of a steep hill, on the summit of which there are vestiges of an intrenchment, nearly circular, supposed to have been constructed by the Saxons, when they besieged Bath, in 577; some antiquaries are of opinion that this hill was anciently crowned by a temple, erected by Bladud, in honour of Apollo. The parish is within the jurisdiction of the court of requests held at Bath every Monday, for the recovery of debts under £10. Here is a school for eight boys, with an endowment of £5. 5. per annum, the bequest of John Hellier, in 1712. The Roman Fosse-way passes through the parish: a variety of fossil shells has been found in the quarries on Lansdown. At a villa here resided Sir John Miller, whose lady established a literary festival for the recitation of prize poems, which were published, under the title of "Poetical Amusements:" she died in 1781, and was interred in the Abbey church at Bath.

BATH-FORD, a parish in the hundred of BATH-FORUM, county of SOMERSET, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. N. E.) from Bath, containing 688 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, with that of Bathampton consolidated, in the archdeaconry of Bath, and diocese of Bath and Wells, rated in the king's books at £8. 18., endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Bristol. The church is dedicated to St. Swithin. The village is situated in a picturesque neighbourhood, on the banks of the Avon, which was anciently crossed by a ford. The parish is within the jurisdiction of the court of requests held at Bath every Monday, for the recovery of debts under £10. Here are vestiges of a Roman camp, and a tumulus; and, in 1691, a Roman hypocaust, with a Mosaic pavement, altar, urns containing coins, and other ancient relics, were discovered.

BATHLEY, a township in the parish of NORTH MUSKHAM, northern division of the wapentake of THURGARTON, county of NOTTINGHAM, 4 miles (N. N. W.) from Newark, containing 172 inhabitants.

BATHWICK, a parish in the hundred of BATH-FORUM, county of SOMERSET, $\frac{1}{2}$ a mile (N. E.) from Bath, containing 4009 inhabitants. The living comprises a rectory and a vicarage, with the rectory of Wolley annexed, in the archdeaconry of Bath, and diocese of Bath and Wells: the rectory is rated in the king's books at £3. 6. 8., and the vicarage at £8. 3. 4., and in the patronage of the Marquis of Cleveland. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, was erected in 1820; it is a handsome and spacious structure in the decorated style of English architecture, with a beautiful altar-piece, painted and presented to the parish by Mr. B. Barber. This elegant suburb to the city of Bath, at the beginning of the last century, consisted only of a few scattered houses unpleasantly situated on an extensive marsh, frequently inundated by the river Avon. From the discovery here of a large portion of those interesting relics which are deposited in the museum at Bath, this place appears to have formed, at a remote period of antiquity, no inconsiderable part of that city, and to have retained its importance, during the successive occupation of Bath by the Britons, Romans, and Saxons. Since the last census, it has greatly increased in extent and population, and now contains some of the most elegant ranges of building which adorn that city: Pulteney-street, Laura Place, and Sydney Place and Gardens, are all in this parish, and several beautiful villas and handsome residences have been erected on the acclivities of the hill, extending nearly a mile, in a direction towards the pleasant and retired village of Claverton. Bathwick is connected with Bath by two handsome bridges over the river Avon, and appears to be rather an integral part of the city itself, than an appendage to it. The Kennet and Avon canal, in its course through Sydney Gardens, has been made available to the introduction of a pleasing variety into the grounds; and an elegant stone bridge of one arch, with a handsome iron palisade, which has been erected over it, forms an interesting feature in the scenery of this enchanting place. In decorating these gardens, an entire pig of lead, weighing 195lb., and bearing the official stamp "IMP. HADRIANI AUG.," and several smaller pieces of that metal, were found; from which circumstance, it is very probable that this was the site of some Roman lead-works. There is a manufactory for broad cloth in the parish; and, in addition to the Kennet and Avon canal, the Somersetshire coal canal passes through it. Bathwick is in the liberty of the city of Bath, and within the jurisdiction of a court of requests held there every Monday, for the recovery of debts under £10.

BATLEY, a parish comprising the chapelry of Morley, and the township of Batley, in the lower division of the wapentake of AGBRIGG, and the chapelry of Gildersome, and the township of Churwell, in the wapentake of MORLEY, West riding of the county of YORK, and containing 9154 inhabitants, of which number, 3717 are in the township of Batley, 7 miles (N. W. by W.) from Wakefield. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of York, rated in the king's books at £16. 11. 8., endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Earl of Cardigan and Lord Grey de Wilton. The church, dedicated to All Saints, and said to have been erected in the reign of Henry VI., contains several splendid monuments to the memory of the deceased lords of the manor. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. The manufacture of blankets, carpets, coverlets, flushing, and woollen cloth, prevails to a great extent within the parish. A free school for the education of sixty children, endowed with £120 per annum and a house for the master, was founded by the Rev. William Lee, in 1612: the school-room has lately been rebuilt. A school for fifteen girls is supported by the produce of a fund raised by subscription; and one for five poor children has a small endowment, left by Joshua Scholefield, in 1806.

BATSFORD, a parish in the upper division of the hundred of KIFTSGATE, county of GLOUCESTER, 2 miles (N. W.) from Moreton in the Marsh, containing 108 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Gloucester, rated in the king's books at £13. 3. 9., and in the patronage of the Dean and Canons of Christ Church, Oxford. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, was rebuilt and enlarged in 1822, at the expense of Lord Redesdale. This parish enjoys the benefit of an endowed school at Moreton in the Marsh.

BATTERLEY, a township in that part of the parish of BARTHOMLEY which is in the northern division of the hundred of PIREHILL, county of STAFFORD, 6½ miles (N. W. by W.) from Newcastle under Line, containing 242 inhabitants.

BATTERSBY, a township in the parish of INGLEBY-GREENHOW, western division of the liberty of LANGBAURGH, North riding of the county of YORK, 5½ miles (E. by S.) from Stokesley, containing 87 inhabitants.

BATTERSEA, a parish partly in the eastern, but chiefly in the western, division of the hundred of BRIXTON, county of SURREY, 4 miles (S.) from London, containing, with the hamlet of Penge, 4992 inhabitants. This place, in Domesday-book called Patricesey, or Peters-ey, was so named from having anciently belonged to the abbey of St. Peter, at Westminster: it was formerly of much greater extent than it is at present. The family of St. John had a venerable mansion here, of which there are still some remains: it was the favourite resort of Pope, who, when visiting his friend Lord Bolingbroke, usually selected as his study, in which he is said to have composed some of his celebrated works, a parlour wainscoted with cedar, overlooking the Thames. The village is pleasantly situated on the southern bank of the river, over which there is a wooden bridge, connecting it with Chelsea: the houses are irregularly built, and in detached situations; the inhabitants are supplied with water from springs. The neighbourhood has long been celebrated for the production of vegetables for the London market, especially asparagus, which was first cultivated here; but the quantity of land appropriated to that purpose has, within the last twenty years, been considerably diminished. On part of the site of Bolingbroke house a horizontal air-mill was erected, in 1790, of a conical form, one hundred and forty feet in height, and having a mean diameter of fifty feet: it was originally applied to the bruising of linseed for oil, and subsequently to the grinding of malt for the distilleries, which were at that time in extensive operation here. A silk-manufactory has recently been established, but the principal business is confined to the market-gardeners, of whom there is still a considerable number in the neighbourhood. A fair was formerly held at Easter, but it has lately been suppressed. The county magistrates hold a meeting at Wandsworth, an adjoining parish, where also a court of requests, for the recovery of debts under £5, is held, under an act obtained in the 31st of George II., the powers of which were extended to the present sum by an act in the 46th of George III.; its jurisdiction includes this parish. The lord of the manor also holds a court leet at Wandsworth, at which a headborough and constables for Battersea are appointed.

The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Surrey, and diocese of Winchester, rated in the king's books at £13. 15. 2½., and in the patronage of Earl Spencer. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, was handsomely rebuilt of brick in 1777; it has a tower surmounted by a small spire, and, standing on the margin of the river, forms an interesting object from the water: the window over the altar is decorated with portraits of Henry VII., his grandmother Margaret Beauchamp, and Queen Elizabeth, in stained glass; and the interior contains some interesting sepulchral monuments, among which are, one by Roubilliac, to the memory of Viscount Bolingbroke and his lady, and one to the memory of Edward Winter, an officer in the service of the East India Company, on which is recorded an account of his having, singly and unarmed, killed a tiger, and, on foot, defeated forty Moors on horseback. Collins, author of the Peerage and Baronetage of England; his grandson David Collins, Lieutenant-Governor of New South Wales, and author of a History of the English Settlement there; and William Curtis, a distinguished botanical writer, were buried here. A chapel of ease, in Battersea Fields, was erected in 1828, at the expense of £2969. 2. 10., defrayed partly by a rate, and partly by grant from the parliamentary commissioners; it is a neat building in the later style of English architecture, and contains five hundred and ninety-six sittings, of which three hundred and eighty-four are free. There are places of worship for Baptists and Wesleyan Methodists. A school, for the instruction of twenty boys, was founded and endowed by Sir Walter St. John, in 1700. A National school for ninety boys and sixty girls, and an infant school, are supported by subscription. Battersea Rise, a part of the common between Clapham and Wandsworth, is ornamented with several handsome villas, one of which was the residence of that eminent citizen, Sir John Barnard, who died in 1764.

BATTISFORD, a parish in the hundred of BOSMERE and CLAYDON, county of SUFFOLK, 2½ miles (W. S. W.) from Needham-Market, containing 421 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Suffolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £8. 0. 7½., and in the patronage of G. Paske, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. Here was anciently a preceptory of the Knights Hospitallers, the revenue of which, at the dissolution, was £53. 10.

BATTLE, or BATTEL, a market town and parish in the hundred of BATTLE, rape of HASTINGS, county of SUSSEX, 7 miles (N. W.) from Hastings, 63 (E. by N.) from Chichester, and 56 (S. E.) from London, containing 2852 inhabitants. This place, previously called Epiton, derives its present name from the memorable battle fought there, October 14th, 1066, between Harold, King of England, and William, Duke of Normandy. Though generally called the battle of Hastings, it took place at this town, where, in fulfilment of a vow, William the Conqueror founded a magnificent abbey for monks of the Benedictine order, and raised the high altar on the very spot where Harold and his valiant brothers fell, covered with wounds, by the side of the English standard. William conferred many extraordinary privileges upon this abbey, in which were preserved, until its suppression, the sword and royal robe worn by him on the day of his coronation, and the celebrated roll on which the names of the warriors who accompanied him to England were inscribed: he conferred on it the privilege of sanctuary, raised it to the dignity of a mitred abbey, and invested its abbots with the power of saving a criminal from execution, if accidentally passing at the time. At the dissolution, its revenue was £987. 0. 10½. : there are still considerable remains ; the gatehouse, a beautiful specimen of the decorated style of English architecture, is in entire preservation, and many parts of the conventual buildings have been retained in the modern mansion of Battle Abbey. After the establishment of the abbey a town arose in its vicinity, which rapidly increased, and had become a place of considerable importance in the reign of Henry I., who conferred upon it many privileges, among which was the grant of a market. In 1347, the French having effected a landing at Rye, the abbot of Battel, assisted by the inhabitants, marched to that place, and drove the enemy to their ships with great slaughter. The town is situated in a beautiful valley, bounded on the west, south, and south-east by wood-crowned eminences, and consists of several streets : near the centre stands the magnificent gateway of the abbey. The houses in general are ancient and of mean appearance, but there are several modern and handsome structures ; the town is lighted, and well supplied with water. The manufacture of fine gunpowder, established at a very early period, and for which this town has attained the highest celebrity, is carried on to a very great extent. The market is on Thursday : the fairs are on Whit-Monday and November 22nd ; a great number of horned cattle are sent from this part of the country to the London market. The town is within the jurisdiction of the county magistrates, who hold their petty sessions here for the district ; but this being a franchise, the inhabitants are exempt from serving on juries at the assizes and sessions for the county. A coroner and other officers are appointed at the court leet of the lord of the manor. The living is a vicarage, in the diocese of Chichester, and an exempt deanery, still retaining the exercise of its jurisdiction ; it is rated in the king's books at £24. 13. 4., and is in the patronage of Sir Godfrey V. Webster, Bart. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a spacious structure, partly in the Norman, and partly in the early and later styles of English architecture. There are places of worship for Baptists, Wesleyan Methodists, and Unitarians. In 1791, Mrs. Elizabeth Langton bequeathed £1500 for the instruction of fifteen boys and fifteen girls, the interest of which is paid to a master ; and there are three Sunday schools. Southward of the abbey grounds is a place called Tellman Hill, where William is said to have mustered his army the evening before the battle ; and to the north is another, named Callback Hill, from which it is said he recalled his troops from pursuing the vanquished enemy : numerous other spots in the vicinity have names relating to circumstances connected with the battle.

BATTLEFIELD, a parish in the liberties of SHREWSBURY, county of SALOP, 3½ miles (N. N. E.) from Shrewsbury, containing 64 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Salop, and diocese of Lichfield and Coventry, endowed with £400 private benefaction, and £800 royal bounty, and in the patronage of J. Corbett, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Mary Magdalene. A fair for horned cattle and sheep is held on the 2nd of August. This place derives its name from a sanguinary battle fought here, on the 22nd of July, 1403, between Henry IV. and the rebels under Percy, Earl of Northumberland, in which nearly two thousand three hundred gentlemen (among whom was Lord Henry Percy, the valiant Hotspur), and about six hundred private soldiers, were slain. Henry, in grateful commemoration of the victory, immediately founded on the spot a college for Secular clerks, the revenue of which, at the dissolution, was £54. 10. 4.

BATTLES DEN, a parish in the hundred of MANSHEAD, county of BEDFORD, 3 miles (S. S. E.) from Woburn, containing 151 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, with that of Potsgrove annexed, in the archdeaconry of Bedford, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £12. 9. 7., and in the patronage of Sir G. P. Turner, Bart. The church is dedicated to St. Peter. This place affords the title of baron to Earl Bathurst.

BAUGHURST, a parish forming a detached portion of the hundred of EVINGAR, Kingsclere division of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, 7 miles (N. W. by N.) from Basingstoke, containing, with the tythings of Ham and Inhurst, 434 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the peculiar jurisdiction of the Incumbent, rated in the king's books at £7. 12. 1., and in the patronage of the Bishop of Winchester. This parish is within the jurisdiction of the Cheyney Court held at Winchester every Thursday, for the recovery of debts to any amount.

BAULKING, a chapelry in the parish of UFFINGTON, hundred of SHRIVENHAM, county of BERKS, 3½ miles (S. E. by S.) from Great Farringdon, containing 155 inhabitants. The chapel is dedicated to St. Nicholas.

BAUMBER, or BAMBURGH, a parish in the northern division of the wapentake of GARTREE, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, 4 miles (N. W.) from Horncastle, containing 319 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Lincoln, endowed with £400 royal bounty, and £400 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Duke of Newcastle. The church is dedicated to St. Swithin.

BAUNTON, a parish in the hundred of CROWTHORNE and MINETV, county of GLOUCESTER, 1½ mile (N. by E.) from Cirencester, containing 129 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Gloucester, endowed with £400 royal bounty, and in the patronage of John Masters, Esq. The Roman Fosse-way passes along the eastern border of the parish.

BAVERSTOCK, a parish in the hundred of CAWDEN and CADWORTH, county of WILTS, 4 miles (W.) from Wilton, containing 135 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Salisbury, rated in the king's books at £11. 10. 2½., and in the patronage of the Rector and Fellows of Exeter College, Oxford. The river Nadder runs through the parish, in which there is a spring called Merrywell, the water of which is efficacious in curing diseases of the eye. The rector supports a school for poor children.

BAVINGTON (GREAT), a township in the parish of KIRK-WHELPINGTON, north-eastern division of TINDALE ward, county of NORTHUMBERLAND, 14 miles (N. N. E.) from Hexham, containing 74 inhabitants. There is a place of worship for Scotch Presbyterians.

BAVINGTON (LITTLE), a township in the parish of THOCKRINGTON, north-eastern division of TINDALE ward, county of NORTHUMBERLAND, 12 miles (N. N. E.) from Hexham, containing 78 inhabitants.

BAWBURGH, a parish in the hundred of FOREHOE, county of NORFOLK, 4½ miles (W.) from Norwich, containing, with Bowthorpe, 456 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Norfolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £13. 17. 6., endowed with £400 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Norwich. The church is dedicated to St. Wolstan, whose birthplace this was, and who died here in 1016. His relics were enshrined in it, and became the resort of numerous pilgrims, whose presents were a source of great emolument to the vicar and officiating priests, who, in 1309, rebuilt the church, which has a round tower. An ancient hermitage, with a chapel attached to it, stood near the bridge.

BAWDESWELL, a parish in the hundred of EYNSFORD, county of NORFOLK, 4 miles (W. by S.) from Reepham, containing 590 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Norfolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £7, and in the patronage of Sir J. Lombe, Bart. The church is dedicated to All Saints. A school for the instruction of twelve boys has an endowment of about £10 per annum, arising from land bequeathed by John Leeds, in 1730.

BAWD RIP, a parish in the northern division of the hundred of PETERSTON, county of SOMERSET, 3½ miles (N.E. by E.) from Bridg-water, containing 372 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Wells, and diocese of Bath and Wells, rated in the king's books at £15. 19. 7., and in the patronage of Sir Henry Nicholls, Knt., surviving trustee of Admiral Sir H. Nicholls.

BAWDSEY, a parish (formerly a market town) in the hundred of WILFORD, county of SUFFOLK, 8½ miles (S. E. by S.) from Woodbridge, containing 414 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Suffolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £6. 13. 4., and in the patronage of the Crown. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. In the 11th of Edward I. permission was obtained for a market to be held here on Friday, but it has been discontinued: there is a fair on September 8th. Bawdsey haven, at the mouth of the river Deben, affords convenient anchorage for small vessels. On the eastern side of the parish, which is bounded by the North sea, are two Martello towers, a fort, a signal-house, and a landmark.

BAWSEY, a parish in the Lynn division of the hundred of FREEBRIDGE, county of NORFOLK, 3 miles (E. by N.) from Lynn-Regis, containing 34 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £4, and in the patronage of Philip Hammond, Esq. The church, dedicated to St. James, is desecrated.

BAWTRY, a market town and chapelry in that part of the parish of BLYTH which is in the southern division of the wapentake of STRAFFORTH and TICKHILL, West riding of the county of YORK, 41½ miles (S. by E.) from York, and 153½ (N. by W.) from London, on the great north road, containing 1027 inhabitants. This town is situated on the river Idle, which separates the counties of York and Nottingham, and near the Roman road leading from Agelocum, Littleborough, to Danum, Doncaster. It consists of three streets, the principal of which is very spacious, and contains many handsome and well-built houses; it is partly paved, and amply supplied with water from springs and from the river, over which a neat substantial stone bridge was erected in 1811, at an expense of £4000. The trade, which has greatly declined since the construction of the Chesterfield canal, and the erection of a bridge over the Trent at Gainsborough, arises chiefly from the inland navigation, and consists in supplying London, Hull, and other places, with corn, oak timber, and stone, of which last, that called the Roche Abbey stone is much esteemed by statuary and architects. The river is navigable for craft of from twelve to twenty-four tons' burden, by which means the town is supplied with coal, grocery, &c. The market is on Thursday: fairs for horses, horned cattle, and sheep are on the Thursday in Whitsun-week, and Old Martinmas-day. The magistrates for the West riding hold petty sessions here for the district, and constables and other officers are appointed at the court leet of the lord of the manor. The chapel, dedicated to St. Nicholas, was erected in the reign of Henry II., and rebuilt in 1686: the tower, which is strengthened by buttresses, and crowned with pinnacles, was added in 1712. There are places of worship for Independents and Wesleyan Methodists. A small school-room has been built by subscription on the waste land adjoining the town, in which eight boys are taught reading, writing, and arithmetic. At Scrooby, one mile from the town, was a palace belonging to the Archbishops of York, in which Cardinal Wolsey resided, and afterwards Archbishop Sandys, whose daughter is interred in the chancel of the chapel: the remains have been converted into a farm-house.

BAXTERLEY, a parish in the Atherstone division of the hundred of HEMLINGFORD, county of WARWICK, 4 miles (W. by S.) from Atherstone, containing 210 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Coventry, and diocese of Lichfield and Coventry, rated in the king's books at £5, and in the alternate patronage of the Crown and John Boulton, Esq. Coal and limestone are said to exist, but are not worked, in this parish.

BAYDON, a parish in the hundred of RAMSBURY, county of WILTS, 4½ miles (N.) from Ramsbury, containing 313 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the peculiar jurisdiction of the Dean of Salisbury, endowed with £800 private benefaction, and £1000 royal bounty, and in the patronage of Sir Francis Burdett, Bart. The church is dedicated to St. Nicholas. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists.

BAYFIELD, a parish in the hundred of HOLT, county of NORFOLK, 2½ miles (N.W.) from Holt. The population is returned with Glandford. The living is a discharged sinecure rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £4, and in the patronage of Henry Jodrell, Esq. The church, which was dedicated to St. Margaret, has long been desecrated.

BAYFORD, a parish in the hundred and county of HERTFORD, 3 miles (S.S.W.) from Hertford, containing 307 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to the rectory of Essendon, in the archdeaconry of Huntingdon, and diocese of Lincoln. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a neat brick edifice recently erected, containing an ancient octangular font ornamented with quatrefoils and roses.

BAYHAM, a hamlet in that part of the parish of FRANT which is in the hundred of ROTHERFIELD, rape of PEVENSEY, county of SUSSEX, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W.) from Lamberhurst. The population is returned with the parish. Here are some remains of a monastery of Premonstratensian canons, which is described in the article on FRANT. Bayham gives the title of viscount to the Marquis of Camden, who has a seat here.

BAYLEHAM, a parish in the hundred of BOSMERE and CLAYDON, county of SUFFOLK, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. by E.) from Needham-Market, containing 237 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Suffolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £12. 4. 9½., and in the patronage of N. Lee Acton, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Peter. The Stow-Market and Ipswich canal bounds the parish on the north-east.

BAYNTON, a joint tything with West Coulston, in the parish of EDINGTON, hundred of WHORWELSDOWN, county of WILTS. The population is returned with West Coulston.

BAYSWATER, a hamlet in the parish of PADDINGTON, Holborn division of the hundred of OSSULSTONE, county of MIDDLESEX, 1 mile from Cumberland-gate, London, on the Uxbridge road. The population is returned with the parish. Bayswater, which may now be considered as a suburb to the metropolis, is desirable as a place of residence from its vicinity to Kensington Gardens, which are situated on the south: it is lighted with gas, and the inhabitants are supplied with water from a reservoir originally constructed for the use of Kensington Palace, and subsequently granted to the proprietors of Chelsea water-works, on the condition that the supply to the palace should be regularly continued. Sir John Hill, M.D., a voluminous writer, resided here many years, and cultivated the plants from which he prepared his medicines, on the spot now occupied by the proprietor of the Bayswater tea-gardens. An episcopal chapel was built by Mr. Edward Orme, in 1818.

BAYTON, a parish in the lower division of the hundred of DODDINGTREE, county of WORCESTER, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (S. E. by S.) from Cleobury-Mortimer, containing 466 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, united to that of Mamble, in the archdeaconry of Salop, and diocese of Hereford, rated in the king's books at £5. 0. 2½., endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty. The church is dedicated to St. Bartholomew.

BAYWORTH, a hamlet in the parish of SUNNINGWELL, hundred of HORMER, county of BERKS. The population is returned with the parish. Here was formerly a chapel of ease to the rectory of Sunningwell, but it has gone to decay.

BEACHAMPTON, a parish in the hundred and county of BUCKINGHAM, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. E. by E.) from Buckingham, containing 251 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Buckingham, and diocese of London, rated in the king's books at £14. 16. 5½., and in the patronage of the Master and Fellows of Caius College, Cambridge. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. The river Ouse runs through the parish. William Elmer founded a free grammar school in 1652, and endowed it with £35 per annum; he also bequeathed, in addition to other benefactions, £5 per annum for apprenticing a poor boy. Sir Simon Benet left £10 per annum for clothing six poor men.

BEACHAMWELL, county of NORFOLK. — See BEECHAMWELL.

BEACONSFIELD, a market town and parish in the hundred of BURNHAM, county of BUCKINGHAM, 36 miles (S. E. by S.) from Buckingham, and $23\frac{1}{4}$ (W. by N.) from London, containing 1736 inhabitants. This place, which is situated on a hill, is supposed to have derived its name from a beacon formerly erected there. The town consists chiefly of four streets, which meet in a convenient market-place in the centre. The principal street extends nearly three quarters of a mile along the turnpike road leading from Uxbridge to Wycombe: the houses in general are well built, and of handsome appearance, and the inhabitants are amply supplied with water. The environs, in which there are some handsome seats, abound with beautiful scenery; and the air is remarkably salubrious. The market is on Thursday; and the fairs, chiefly for horses, horned cattle, and sheep, are held on February 13th, and on Holy Thursday. Constables and other officers are appointed at the court leet of the lord of the manor. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Buckingham, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £26. 2. 8½., and in the patronage of the President and Fellows of Magdalene College, Oxford. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is an ancient building of stone and flint, with a tower: it formerly belonged to the Augustine monastery at Burnham, founded by Richard, Earl of Cornwall, in 1165, the revenue of which, at the dissolution, was £91. 5. 11. Within the church is a mural tablet to the memory of Edmund Burke, who died at his seat called Gregories, in this parish, and was interred here; and in the churchyard there is a monument of white marble, to the memory of Edmund Waller, the poet, who died October 21st, 1687.

BEADLAM, a township in that part of the parish of KIRKDALE which is in the wapentake of RYEDALE, North riding of the county of YORK, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E.) from Helmsley, containing 143 inhabitants.

BEADNELL, a chapelry in the parish, and northern division of the ward, of BAMBROUGH, county of NORTHUMBERLAND, $10\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. S. E.) from Belford, containing 213 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Northumberland, and diocese of Durham, endowed with £400 private benefaction, £800 royal bounty, and £200 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Perpetual Curate of Bambrough. The chapel is a small handsome structure with a spire. The village is pleasantly situated on the sea-shore, having a small harbour, and several vessels are employed in conveying lobsters, herrings, and other fish to London. Races were annually held here until 1826, when they were removed to Belford. The trustees of Lord Crewe's charity allow a schoolmaster £5 per annum, and the use of a house and garden, for educating seven boys.

BEAFORD, a parish in the hundred of SHEBBEAR, county of DEVON, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. E. by E.) from Great Torrington, containing 582 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Barnstaple, and diocese of Exeter, rated in the king's books at £11. 15. 7½., and in the patronage of J. Russel, Esq. The church is dedicated to All Saints.

BEAGHALL, a township in the parish of KELLINGTON, lower division of the wapentake of OSGOLDCROSS, West riding of the county of YORK, 6 miles (E. N. E.) from Pontefract, containing 546 inhabitants.

BEAKSBOURNE, a parish within the cinque-port liberty of HASTINGS, of which it is a member, though locally in the hundred of Bridge and Petham, lathe of ST. AUGUSTINE, county of KENT, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. S. E.) from Canterbury, containing 311 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Canterbury, rated in the king's books at £6, and in the patronage of the Archbishop of Canterbury. The church is dedicated to St. Peter.

BEALINGS (GREAT), a parish in the hundred of CARLFORD, county of SUFFOLK, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W.) from Woodbridge, containing 339 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Suffolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £10. 4. 7., and in the patronage of Lord Henniker. The church is dedicated to St. Mary.

BEALINGS (LITTLE), a parish in the hundred of CARLFORD, county of SUFFOLK, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. by S.) from Woodbridge, containing 262 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Suffolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £6. 7. 3½., endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of G. Thompson, Esq. The church is dedicated to All Saints. Here is an endowment of about £10 per annum, for the instruction of poor children.

BEAMINSTER, a market town and chapelry in the parish of NETHERBURY, hundred of BEAMINSTER-FORUM and REDHONE, Bridport division of the county of DORSET, $17\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. N. W.) from Dorchester, and $137\frac{1}{4}$ (W. S. W.) from London, containing 2806 inhabitants. During the civil war in the reign of Charles I., Prince Maurice, commanding a party of royalists engaged in besieging Lyme, took up his quarters in this town, which, in a few days after, was nearly reduced to ashes by fire, stated by some historians to have been occasioned by accident, whilst others assert that it was the result of a quarrel between the French and the Cornish men in the service of the king, who set fire to it in five different places. It was rebuilt by means of a parliamentary grant of £2000, but was again nearly destroyed by a fire which occurred in 1684: in 1781, it experienced a similar calamity, but the greater part of the buildings having been insured, it soon recovered its former prosperity. The town is pleasantly situated on the river Birt, which is formed by the union of several small springs that rise in the immediate vicinity: the houses are in general modern and well built, and the inhabitants are amply supplied with water. The manufacture of woollen cloth, which formerly flourished here, is at present on the decline, and that of sail-cloth is now the principal source of employment: there is also a pottery for the coarser kinds of earthenware. The market, granted to William Ewel, prebendary of Sarum, in the 12th of Edward I., is on Thursday; and a fair is held on September 19th, for cattle. Constables and other officers are appointed at the court leet of the lord of the manor. The quarter sessions for the county, now held at Bridport, were formerly held here; and, in 1638, an order of session was issued for building a house of correction at the expense of the division. The town-hall is a neat and commodious edifice, in which the public business is transacted.

This chapelry contains the manors of Beaminster Prima and Beaminster Secunda, forming two prebends in the Cathedral Church of Salisbury; the former is rated in the king's books at £20. 2. 6., and the latter at £22. 5. 7½. The chapel, founded in honour of the Nativity of the Blessed Virgin, is a stately edifice in the later style of English architecture, with a fine tower, one hundred feet high, and richly ornamented with sculptured designs of the Crucifixion, the Resurrection, the Ascension, and other subjects of scriptural history. There is a place of worship for Independents. The free school was founded in 1684, by Mrs. Frances Tucker, who endowed it with £20 per annum for the master, leaving also £30 per annum for apprenticing boys, one or two of whom she directed should be put to the sea service. The endowment now produces £150 per annum; the master's salary has been advanced to £40, and the present number of scholars is one hundred, who are instructed on Dr. Bell's system: it is under the direction of trustees, each of whom, on his appointment, receives £10. The Rev. Samuel Hood, father of Lords Hood and Bridport, was master of this school early in the eighteenth century, and subsequently a prebendary in the Cathedral Church of Wells. An almshouse for eight aged persons was founded, in 1630, by Sir John Strode, of Parnham, Knt., the income of which amounts to £20 per annum. Gilbert Adams, of Beaminster, Esq., in 1626, gave £200 to the poor of the parish, directing the produce to be applied to their use, at the discretion of his executors; and the Rev. William Hillary, in 1712, bequeathed the reversion, after ninety-nine years, of land in the parish of Corscombe, worth £30 per annum, for the benefit of twelve distressed families in the parish. Dr. Thomas Spratt, Bishop of Rochester, and the Rev. Thomas Russel, Fellow of New College, Oxford, who distinguished himself by his defence of Warton's History of English Poetry, were natives of this town.

BEAMISH, a township in that part of the parish of CHESTER le STREET which is in the middle division of CHESTER ward, county palatine of DURHAM, $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. S. W.) from Gateshead, containing, with part of Tanfield Colliery, 1643 inhabitants. There is a great quantity of coal in this township, which also contains some iron-ore.

BEAMSLEY, a township partly in that portion of the parish of ADDINGHAM, but chiefly in that portion of the parish of SKIPTON, which are in the upper division of the wapentake of CLARO, West riding of the county of YORK, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. by N.) from Skipton, containing 312 inhabitants. An hospital for thirteen poor women was founded here by Margaret, Countess of Cumberland, under letters patent granted in the 35th of Elizabeth, and endowed with property which, in 1820, produced £357. 9. 4. per annum, from which sum, twelve of the alms-women receive annuities of £16 each, and the thirteenth, one of £18: they have separate apartments, and there is a chapel in which prayers are read daily.

BEANLEY, a township in the parish of EGLINGHAM, northern division of COQUETDALE ward, county of NORTHUMBERLAND, $9\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. N. W.) from Alnwick, containing 160 inhabitants. This was formerly the head of a barony, the lord of which had the power of inflicting capital punishment; Gallow-Haw, on the western side of the Breamish, having been the place of execution. On an elevated spot, called Beanley Plantation, are vestiges of an encampment, having a double fosse and rampart; the road which led to it is plainly discernible. Percy's Cross, erected in memory of Sir Ralph Percy, an officer attached to the Lancastrian party, who fell in battle against the Yorkists, in 1464, stands on Hedgeley moor, a short distance from the village.

BEARD, a hamlet in the parish of GLOSSOP, hundred of HIGH PEAK, county of DERBY, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N.W. by N.) from Chapel en le Frith, containing 332 inhabitants.

BEARL, a township in the parish of BYWELL ST. ANDREW, eastern division of TINDALE ward, county of NORTHUMBERLAND, 4 miles (E.) from Corbridge, containing 56 inhabitants.

BEARLEY, a parish in the Snitterfield division of the hundred of BARLICHWAY, county of WARWICK, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N.N.W.) from Stratford upon Avon, containing 230 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Worcester, endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £600 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Vicar of Wootton-Waven. The church is dedicated to St. Mary.

BEARSTEAD, a parish in the hundred of EY-HORNE, lathe of AYLESFORD, county of KENT, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E.) from Maidstone, containing 566 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Canterbury, rated in the king's books at £6. 7. $4\frac{1}{2}$., endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Rochester. The church is dedicated to the Holy Cross. A fair is held here on September 14th.

BEARSTON, a township in that part of the parish of MUCKLESTON which is in the Drayton division of the hundred of BRADFORD (North), county of SALOP, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N.E. by N.) from Drayton in Hales, containing 79 inhabitants.

BEARWARD-COTE, a township in the parish of ETWALL, hundred of APPLETREE, county of DERBY. The population is returned with the parish.

BEAUCHIEF-ABBEY, an extra-parochial liberty, formerly part of the parish of Norton, in the hundred of SCARSDALE, county of DERBY, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W. by N.) from Dronfield, containing 97 inhabitants. The liberty, comprising about one thousand acres, was, by a deed executed at a court held at Richmond, March 14th, 1601, exempted from assessment for taxes. The living is a donative, in the patronage of P. Pegge Burnall, Esq. The chapel is a small edifice, erected about 1660, with the exception of the tower, which formed part of a monastery of Premonstratensian canons, founded here in 1183, by Robert Fitz-Ranulph, and dedicated to St. Thomas à Becket, the revenue of which, at the dissolution, was £157. 10. 2.

BEAUDESERT, a parish in the Henley division of the hundred of BARLICHWAY, county of WARWICK, $\frac{1}{2}$ mile (E.) from Henley in Arden, containing 209 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Worcester, rated in the king's books at £7. 16. $0\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of the Crown. The church, dedicated to St. Nicholas, is partly in the Norman, and partly in the early English, style of architecture, with a richly ornamented Norman arch between the nave and the chancel. A castle was erected here, soon after the Conquest, by Thurstan de Montfort, which was dismantled during the war between the houses of York and Lancaster; the site is still distinguishable. In the reign of Stephen, the lord of the manor obtained a grant for a market and a fair. The Rev. Richard Jago, a poet of some note, was born here in 1715, during the incumbency of his father.

BEAULIEU, a liberty in the New Forest (East) division of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N.E.) from Lymington, containing, with an extra-parochial district within its limits, 1206 inhabitants. The living is a donative, in the patronage of Lord Montagu. The chapel, dedicated to St. Bartholomew, is a plain edifice of stone with strong buttresses, and was formerly the refectory of the ancient abbey, the church of which, situated to the south-east, has been entirely destroyed. There is a place of worship for Particular Baptists. Beaulieu is situated on a river of the same name, which rises in the New Forest, at the foot of a hill about a mile and a half to the north-east of Lyndhurst, and is navigable hence for vessels of fifty tons' burden to the Isle of Wight channel, which bounds the parish on the south. On reaching the village, it spreads into a wide surface, covering several acres, on the eastern side of which is the spot where the famous abbey formerly stood, the outer walls of which, or a large part of them, still remain. It was founded, in 1204, by King John, for thirty monks of the reformed Benedictine order, and was dedicated to the Blessed Virgin Mary: its revenue, at the dissolution in 1540, was £428. 6. 8. It possessed the privilege of sanctuary, and afforded an asylum to Margaret of Anjou, wife of Henry VI., after the battle of Barnet; and to Perkin Warbeck, in the reign of Henry VII. Various immunities, among which is exemption from arrest for debt, are still attached to the manor. The ruins stand in a beautiful valley, nearly circular in form, bounded by well-wooded hills, and surrounded by a stone wall, nearly entire in many places, and mantled with ivy. The entrance is by an ancient stone gateway, near which is an edifice of a square form, called the Palace, originally built for the abbot's lodging, but converted into a family seat after the dissolution. Over the entrance is a canopied niche, and the hall is handsomely vaulted. Eastward from the building is a long structure, supposed, from the extent and height of the apartments, to have been the dormitory, and beneath are several good cellars; the ancient kitchen is also standing. Near the abbey was a building, called an hospital, inhabited by the knights of St John of Jerusalem, where travellers and persons in distress were relieved, the revenue of which, at the dissolution, was £100. This hospital was founded a little previously to the abbey, and, from the beauty of its situation, gave the name of Beaulieu to the place; it stood at the distance of about half a mile from the water's edge, at high water mark, on rising ground, having a gentle slope to the water, and commanding, toward the right, a view of Hurst Castle and the Needles; to the left, of Spithead, and the entrance to Portsmouth harbour. About two miles distant, and very near the sea-shore, is Park farm, anciently one of the granges attached to Beaulieu abbey, which, like others appertaining to that establishment, possessed the privilege of having divine service celebrated in it, under a bull of Pope Alexander I. The chapel is remaining, though much dilapidated, and adjoins the farm-house, a massive stone building of equal antiquity; its length is forty-two feet, and breadth about fourteen; the interior is divided into two compartments by a stone screen, which reaches to the roof. At a short distance from this, on the road to Beaulieu, are the ruins of the extensive barn and the chapel of St. Leonard, the former, measuring in length two hundred and twenty-six feet, in breadth seventy-seven, and in height sixty, and formerly the principal grange belonging to the abbey. Buckler's Hard is a populous village in this liberty, situated on the Beaulieu river, chiefly inhabited by workmen employed in ship-building: many vessels of war have been built at this place. Beaulieu has long been noted for the manufacture of coarse sacking: near the village of Sowley, in this liberty, are two large mills belonging to some iron-works. Fairs for horses and horned cattle are held on April 15th and September 4th.

BEAU-MANOR, an extra-parochial liberty, in the western division of the hundred of GOSCOTE, county of LEICESTER, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. by N.) from Mountsorrel, containing 96 inhabitants.

BEAUMONT, a parish in the ward and county of CUMBERLAND, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W. by W.) from Carlisle, containing 323 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, to which that of Kirk-Andrews upon Eden was united in 1692, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Carlisle, rated in the king's books at £8. 1. 8., endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £400 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Earl of Lonsdale. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, stands upon a lofty hill. The river Eden and the Carlisle canal run through the parish. At the hamlet of Sandsfield, on the western bank of the Eden, vessels of sixty tons' burden, belonging to the port of Carlisle, receive and discharge their cargoes. The poor children of this parish are entitled to instruction in a school, erected by subscription, in the parish of Kirk-Andrews upon Eden, to which Thomas Pattinson, in 1785, gave a small endowment. The celebrated wall of Severus crossed this parish.

BEAUMONT, a parish in the hundred of TENDRING, county of ESSEX, $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. E. by S.) from Manningtree, containing, with the parish of Moze, 434 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, to which that of Moze was united in 1678, in the archdeaconry of Colchester, and diocese of London, rated in the king's books at £18, and in the patronage of the Governors of Guy's Hospital. The church is dedicated to St. Leonard. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. This parish lies near the extremity of an inlet of the North sea, between the Naze and Harwich.

BEAUMONT-LEYS, an extra-parochial liberty, in the western division of the hundred of GOSCOTE, county of LEICESTER, 2 miles (N. N. W.) from Leicester, containing 14 inhabitants.

BEAUSALL, a chapelry in the parish of HATTON, Snitterfield division of the hundred of BARLICHWAY, county of WARWICK, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. N. W.) from Warwick, containing 269 inhabitants.

BEAWORTH, a tything in the parish of CHERITON, hundred of FAWLEY, Fawley division of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. by W.) from New Alresford, containing 136 inhabitants. This tything is within the jurisdiction of the Cheyney Court held at Winchester every Thursday, for the recovery of debts to any amount.

Vol. I.

BEAWORTHY, a parish in the hundred of BLACK TORRINGTON, county of DEVON, $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. W. by W.) from Hatherleigh, containing 299 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Totness, and diocese of Exeter, rated in the king's books at £6. 6., endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of Sir William Molesworth, Bart. The church is dedicated to St. Alban.

BEBBINGTON, a parish in the lower division of the hundred of WIRRAL, county palatine of CHESTER, comprising the townships of Higher Bebbington, Lower Bebbington, Poulton with Spittle, Storeton, and Tranmore, and containing 1678 inhabitants, of which number, 216 are in the township of Higher Bebbington, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. N. E.), and 316 in that of Lower Bebbington, $5\frac{1}{2}$ (N. E. by N.), from Great Neston. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Chester, rated in the king's books at £30. 13. 4., and in the patronage of the Rev. S. Feilden and another. The church, dedicated to St. Andrew, is partly Norman, and partly in the early, decorated, and later styles of English architecture, with a tower surmounted by a spire: the nave is separated from the south aisle by a range of Norman arches, resting on massive cylindrical columns, and the chancel, with its lateral aisles, is of the later English style. Attached to the eastern end of the church is a room, used for a school, which was founded in 1655, and endowed by the parishioners with twenty acres of land, the rent of which, amounting to £25 per annum, is applied to the instruction of the poor children of Lower Bebbington. Strata of excellent freestone exist in this parish, which is of a much whiter quality than that found in any other part of the county. The navigable river Mersey runs along the northern border of the parish.

BEBSIDE, a township in the parish of HORTON, eastern division of CASTLE ward, county of NORTHUMBERLAND, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. E. by E.) from Morpeth, containing 123 inhabitants. It is situated on the southern bank of the river Blyth, on the opposite side of which, in the parish of Bedlington, are extensive iron-works.

BECCLES, a market town and parish in the hundred of WANGFORD, county of SUFFOLK, 44 miles (E. N. E.) from Bury St. Edmund's, and 110 (N. E. by N.) from London, containing 3493 inhabitants. This town, which suffered greatly from fire in 1586, is pleasantly situated on the river Waveney, by which it is bounded on the north and west. It consists of several spacious streets, diverging from the market-place, well paved and lighted: the houses in general are handsome and well built, and the inhabitants are amply supplied with water. The environs, which abound with pleasing scenery, afford agreeable walks; and the theatre and assembly-rooms form two handsome ornamental buildings. Races are held annually, on a fine course near the town, on which there are two commodious stands. The trade is principally in corn and malt, which is carried on to a considerable extent: the river Waveney is navigable from Yarmouth, and a design is now in progress for connecting it, by means of Leething lake, with the sea at Lowestoft. The market is on Saturday: the fairs are on Whit-Monday for cattle, and October 2nd for horses and pedlary; there are also statute fairs. Adjoining the town is a common, upwards of one thousand four hundred acres in extent, affording, under certain regulations, free pasturage for cattle. Under a charter of incorporation, granted by Queen Elizabeth in 1584, a portreeve, steward, twelve principal, and twenty-four inferior, burgesses are elected; the portreeve is appointed annually, by rotation, from among the principal burgesses. None of the members of the corporation exercise magisterial authority, the town being wholly within the jurisdiction of the county magistrates, who hold a quarterly court of session for the district. The town hall is a commodious building, and the gaol has recently been enlarged and improved. The living is a rectory, with the vicarage of St. Mary Endgate (the church of which is in ruins), in the archdeaconry of Suffolk, and diocese of Norwich, and in the patronage of the Earl of Gosford; the rectory is rated in the king's books at £21. 12. 3½., and the vicarage at £7. 6. 8. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a spacious and elegant structure, in the later style of English architecture; the porch is a fine specimen of beautiful design and elaborate execution, and the interior is appropriately ornamented. The tower, which is detached from the main building, is highly enriched with sculpture; it was built by subscription, and upon it are sculptured the arms of the donors, among which are those of Yallop, Rede (Thomas Rede having been at that time rector of the parish, and a principal contributor towards its erection), Leman, and Garneys: the churchyard commands an interesting and extensive view. There are places of worship for Baptists, Independents, and Methodists. A grammar school was founded, in 1774, and endowed by the Rev. Dr. Fauconberge, a native of the town, with an estate in the parish of Corton, producing about £200 per annum; it is under the control of the Bishop of Norwich, the Archdeacon of Suffolk, and the Rector of Beccles, who appoint the master: there are at present no scholars on the foundation, nor is there any place appropriated as a school-room for gratuitous instruction. Dr. Routh, the learned President of Magdalene College, Oxford, received the rudiments of his education at this place. A free school was founded, in 1631, and endowed with one hundred acres of land, by Sir John Leman, Knt., alderman of London, for the instruction of forty-eight boys in reading, writing, and arithmetic; and a National school, in which one hundred and twenty children of both sexes are instructed, is supported by subscription. An ancient hospital for lepers, of uncertain foundation, with a chapel dedicated to St. Mary Magdalene, was granted, in 1676, to the corporation of Beccles, for the benefit of the poor. The corporation also hold in trust for the poor a large tract of land, which was originally granted by Henry VIII., in 1540, after the dissolution of the abbey of Bury St. Edmund's (to which the manor formerly belonged), to William Rede and his heirs, in trust for the benefit of himself and other inhabitants of the town. Beccles was the birth and burial place of William de Roos, of Roos Hall, a man of considerable note; he attended Edward I. in the war with the Scots, and was present with that prince at the siege of Kaerlevrock, where he displayed great bravery.

BECCONSALL, a joint chapelry with Hesketh, in the parish of CROSTON, hundred of LEYLAND, county palatine of LANCASTER, 11 miles (N. by E.) from Ormskirk, containing, with Hesketh, 476 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Chester, endowed with £400 private benefaction, and £600 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Rector of Croston.

BECHTON, a township in that part of the parish of SANDBACH which is in the hundred of NANTWICH, county palatine of CHESTER, 2½ miles (S. E.) from Sandbach, containing 759 inhabitants. The Grand Trunk canal passes close to the salt-works here.

BECKBURY, a parish within the liberties of the borough of WENLOCK, county of SALOP, 7 miles (N. E. by N.) from Bridgenorth, containing 285 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Salop, and diocese of Hereford, rated in the king's books at £5. 3. 4., and in the patronage of the Crown. The church is dedicated to St. Milburgh.

BECKENHAM, a parish in the hundred of BROMLEY and BECKINGHAM, lathe of SUTTON at HONE, county of KENT, 1½ mile (W.) from Bromley, and 10 (S. S. E.) from London, containing 1180 inhabitants. The name of this place, compounded of the Saxon terms Bec, a brook, and Ham, a dwelling, is derived from a small stream which passes through the parish, and falls into the river Ravensbourne. In the reign of Henry VIII., Charles Brandon, Duke of Suffolk, entertained that monarch, when on his journey to visit Anne of Cleves, with great pomp at the manor-house in this place. The village, which is pleasantly situated, contains some neat dwelling-houses, and in the neighbourhood are many handsome villas. The Croydon canal passes along the north-western angle of the parish. A fair, chiefly for toys, is held on the Monday before St. Bartholomew's day. Beckenham is within the jurisdiction of a court of requests held every alternate Tuesday at Bromley, for the recovery of debts not exceeding 40s. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Rochester, rated in the king's books at £16. 18. 9., and in the patronage of John Cator, Esq. The church, dedicated to St. George, is a neat structure, erected about the beginning of the seventeenth century, with a lofty spire, which having been destroyed by lightning, in 1790, was recently rebuilt. Mrs. Mary Watson, in 1790, bequeathed property, for the instruction of poor children, after the death of two annuitants, which took place in 1807, at which period it was vested in the purchase of £1401. 12. 7. New South Sea Annuities, producing an annual dividend of £42. 0. 10., the whole of which not being annually expended, the accumulation, amounting to £294. 16. 2., was, in 1818, applied in aid of a subscription for the erection of National schools for boys and girls of the parish, in which the children upon Mrs. Watson's foundation are now instructed. Capt. Leonard Bowyer, in 1717, also gave £100, the interest of which is paid out of the rental of land belonging to the parish, for the education of four additional scholars. To the east of the church are three unendowed almshouses, erected by Anthony Rawlins, Esq., in 1694. Dr. Asheton, the projector of a plan for providing for widows by survivorship, was rector of the parish towards the close of the seventeenth century.

BECKERMET (ST. BRIDGET'S), a parish in ALLERDALE ward above Derwent, county of CUMBERLAND, containing, with the township of Calder in Copeland 545 inhabitants. The village of Great Beckermets lies partly in this parish and partly in that of Beckermets St. John, $2\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S.) from Egremont. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Richmond, and diocese of Chester, endowed with £600 royal bounty, and £200 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Rev. H. J. Todd. The church stands about half a mile south-west of the village. This parish is situated on the north bank of the Calder, adjoining the ocean, and contains the sequestered ruins of Calder abbey, described under Calder-Bridge. Freestone is obtained here.

BECKERMET (ST. JOHN'S), a parish in ALLERDALE ward above Derwent, county of CUMBERLAND, $2\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S.) from Egremont, containing 549 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Richmond, and diocese of Chester, endowed with £300 private benefaction, £1200 royal bounty, and £200 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Rev. H. J. Todd. The church is a small ancient edifice. A portion of the town of Egremont is included within this parish, in which also stands a private residence, called Woto-Bank, with the etymology of which is connected an interesting fabulous tale, made by Mrs. Cowley the subject of a romantic poem, entitled "Edwina," published in 1794.

BECKETT, a tything in the parish and hundred of SERIVENHAM, county of BERKS, $4\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. W. by S.) from Farringdon. The population is returned with the parish. The manor, soon after the Conquest, became the property of the crown, and the manor-house was occasionally made a royal residence. Dr. Shute Barrington, the late Bishop of Durham, was born here in 1734.

BECKFORD, a parish in the hundred of TIBALDSTONE, county of GLOUCESTER, 6 miles (E. N. E.) from Tewkesbury, containing, with the hamlets of Bengrave, and Grafton, 442 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, with the perpetual curacy of Ashton under Hill annexed, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Gloucester, rated in the king's books at £16. 16. 10 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of the Rev. John Timbrill, D.D. The church, a very ancient structure, is dedicated to St. John the Baptist. Freestone abounds in the parish. Here was an Alien priory of Augustine canons, the revenue of which, at the dissolution, was £53. 6. 8.

BECKHAM (EAST), a parish in the northern division of the hundred of ERPINGHAM, county of NORFOLK, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. by S.) from Cromer, containing 48 inhabitants. The church, which was dedicated to St. Helen, has long been desecrated: it is a picturesque ruin, the southern porch and the walls of the nave and chancel, the only parts now remaining, being covered with ivy: the inhabitants resort to the church at West Beckham.

BECKHAM (WEST), a parish in the southern division of the hundred of ERPINGHAM, county of NORFOLK, 4 miles (E.) from Holt, containing 154 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the peculiar jurisdiction and patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Norwich, endowed with £600 royal bounty. The church is dedicated to All Saints: the tower is circular at the base and octangular above.

BECKHAMPTON, a tything in the parish of AVEBURY, hundred of SELKLEY, county of WILTS, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W.) from Marlborough. The population is returned with the parish. Here was formerly a chapel, now desecrated.

BECKINGHAM, a parish in the wapentake of LOVEDEN, parts of KESTEVEN, county of LINCOLN, 5 miles (E.) from Newark, containing 430 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, with the perpetual curacy of Straggles-thorpe annexed, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £41. 6. 8., and in the patronage of Robert Moody, Esq. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is partly Norman, and partly in the early style of English architecture: the tower, ornamented with pinnacles, is in the later English style.

BECKINGHAM, a parish within the liberty of SOUTHWELL and SCROOBY, though locally in the North-clay division of the wapentake of Bassetlaw, county of NOTTINGHAM, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles (W. by N.) from Gainsborough, containing 515 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the peculiar jurisdiction of the Chapter of the Collegiate Church of Southwell, rated in the king's books at £6. 15. 3., and in the patronage of the Prebendary of Beckingham. The church is dedicated to All Saints. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. The navigable river Trent runs along the border of the parish. A school for ten poor children is endowed with about £15 per annum. Dr. William Howell, the historian, was born here.

BECKINGTON, a parish in the hundred of FROME, county of SOMERSET, 3 miles (N. E.) from Frome, containing 1645 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, with that of Standerwick annexed, in the archdeaconry of Wells, and diocese of Bath and Wells, rated in the king's books at £19. 11. 0 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of the Rev. Henry Sainsbury. The church, dedicated to St. George, contains the remains of Samuel Daniel, poet-laureat and historian, who died here in 1619; and William Huish, rector of this parish, and one of the editors of the Polyglott Bible, who died in 1688. There are places of worship for Particular Baptists and Wesleyan Methodists. The manufacture of cloth was formerly extensively carried on in this parish, and still exists to a limited degree. Thomas Beckington, Bishop of Bath and Wells, and a distinguished statesman, was born here, in 1645.

BECKLEY, a parish partly in the hundred of ASHENDON, county of BUCKINGHAM, and partly in the hundred of BULLINGTON, county of OXFORD, $4\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. E.) from Oxford, containing, with the chapelry of Studley with Horton, 825 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford, rated in the king's books at £8, endowed with £400 private benefaction, £800 royal bounty, and £1300 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Dean and Canons of Christ Church, Oxford. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. The manor was part of the private property of Alfred the Great: in the thirteenth century it belonged to Richard, Earl of Cornwall, who had a castellated mansion here, a portion of the site of which is now occupied by a dovecote, supposed to be a relic of the fortress. A court baron is held annually by the lord of the manor, who claims paramount authority over seven villages within the tract called Otnoor, for enclosing which an act was obtained in 1815. Here is a school with a small endowment, for the instruction of six poor children. The Roman road from Alchester to Wallingford passed through the parish, and fragments of Roman pottery have been found in the vicinity.

BECKLEY, a parish in the hundred of GOLDSBUR, rape of HASTINGS, county of SUSSEX, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W.N.W.) from Rye, containing 1371 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Lewes, and diocese of Chichester, rated in the king's books at £11. 6. 8., and in the patronage of the Master and Fellows of University College, Oxford. The church is dedicated to All Saints. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. The river Rother bounds this parish on the north, separating the counties of Kent and Sussex.

BEDALE, a parish comprising the market town of Bedale, the townships of Aiskew, Burrel with Cowling, Crakehall, and Firby, and the hamlet of Rands-Grange, in the eastern division of the wapentake of HANG, and the township of Langthorne in the wapentake of HALLIKELD, North riding of the county of YORK, and containing 2631 inhabitants, of which number, 1137 are in the town of Bedale, $33\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N.W.) from York, and 223 (N.N.W.) from London. This town, which is of prepossessing appearance, is pleasantly situated on the banks of a stream flowing into the river Swale near Scruton, and consists of one principal street. The houses are in general of brick, and irregularly built; the air is pure, and the neighbourhood, which is well cultivated, affords many pleasant walks and much picturesque scenery. The market is on Tuesday: fairs are held on Easter-Tuesday, Whit-Tuesday, and July 5th and 6th, for horses, horned cattle, and sheep; and October 10th and 11th, and the last Monday but one before Christmas-day, for cattle, sheep, hogs, and leather. Constables and other officers are appointed at the court leet of the lord of the manor. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Richmond, and diocese of Chester, rated in the king's books at £89. 4. 9½., and in the alternate patronage of Miss Pierse and Miles Stapleton, Esq. The church, dedicated to St. Gregory, is a spacious and venerable structure, in the early style of English architecture, with a square embattled tower crowned with pinnacles, of remarkable strength, having been used as a place of security from the incursions of the Scots. Within the church are several interesting monuments, one of which is to the memory of Sir Brian Fitz-Alan, Lord-Lieutenant of Scotland in the reign of Edward I., who resided here in a castle near the church, of which there are no remains. There are three places of worship for Methodists, and one each for Particular Baptists and Roman Catholics. A free grammar school, supposed to have existed here prior to the dissolution of religious houses, was endowed by Queen Elizabeth with £7. 11. 4. per annum, to which the Countess of Warwick added £13. 6. 8. per annum. The latter sum is now given to the National school, for the instruction of eighty boys, to which also is appropriated the produce of £100, bequeathed by William Heaton, in 1709, for preparing eight boys for the grammar school, which is in the churchyard. An hospital for six aged men was founded by Dr. Samwaies, in 1698, and endowed with £55. 3. 2.; it is a neat stone building, containing six apartments, to each of which a garden, comprising half an acre, is allotted: there are also almshouses for three aged women, founded by Richard and Thomas Young, in 1667, besides many bequests for the poor. Sir Christopher Wray, Lord Chief Justice of the court of King's Bench in the reign of Elizabeth, was a native of this place.

BEDBURN (NORTH), a township in that part of the parish of ST. ANDREW AUCKLAND which is in the north-western division of DARLINGTON ward, county palatine of DURHAM, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N.W. by W.) from Bishop-Auckland, containing 351 inhabitants. This township is situated between the river Wear and the Bedburn rivulet, and abounds with picturesque and romantic scenery: at its north-western extremity is an ancient earthwork, called "The Castles," of an oblong form; surrounded by a lofty rampart of loose pebble stones, with an outer ditch, supposed to have been a British fortress. At Bedburn Forge is a manufactory for edge-tools, spades, &c., which, prior to the year 1820, was used for bleaching linen cloth and yarn by a chemical process.

BEDBURN (SOUTH), a township in that part of the parish of ST. ANDREW AUCKLAND which is in the north-western division of DARLINGTON ward, county palatine of DURHAM, $8\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. by N.) from Bishop-Auckland, containing 366 inhabitants.

BEDDINGHAM, a parish in the hundred of TORNORE, rape of PEVENSEY, county of SUSSEX, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S.E.) from Lewes, containing 255 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, with that of West Firle united, in the archdeaconry of Lewes, and diocese of Chichester, rated in the king's books at £9. 10. 10., and in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Chichester. The church is dedicated to St. Andrew. The parish is within the liberty of the duchy of Lancaster.

BEDDINGTON, a parish in the second division of the hundred of WALLINGTON, county of SURREY, 2 miles (W.) from Croydon, containing, with the hamlet of Wallington, 1327 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Surrey, and diocese of Winchester, rated in the king's books at £13. 16. 8., and in the patronage of Mrs. Anne Paston Gee. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a handsome edifice, with a fine tower, chiefly in the later style of English architecture, it was built in the reign of Richard II., and contains, together with several stalls, some handsome monuments to the memory of the Carew family, of which Sir Nicholas Carew, who was beheaded in 1539, for an alleged conspiracy against Henry VIII., was a member. The Croydon railway crosses the northern angle of the parish. The first orange-trees produced in England are said to have been planted here. A charity school is supported by subscription.

BEDFIELD, a parish in the hundred of HOXNE, county of SUFFOLK, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W.N.W.) from Framlingham, containing 319 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Suffolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £14, and in the patronage of the Earl of Stradbroke. The church is dedicated to St. Nicholas.

BEDFONT (EAST), a parish in the hundred of SPELTHORNE, county of MIDDLESEX, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W.S.W.)

from Hounslow, containing, with the hamlet of Hatton, 771 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Middlesex, and diocese of London, rated in the king's books at £6. 13. 4., and in the patronage of the Bishop of London. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. Opposite the entrance are two yew-trees, the branches of which, meeting at the top, form an arch, and have been fantastically cut so as to represent two cocks in a fighting attitude; in the thick foliage of one of them appears the date 1704 (an eccentric individual having made a bequest in that year for keeping them thus trimmed), and in that of the other are seen the initials H.I.G.R.T.

Seal and Arms..

BEDFORD, a borough and market town, having separate jurisdiction, in the county of BEDFORD, of which it is the capital, 50 miles (N. N. W.) from London, containing 5466 inhabitants. This place, called by the later Britons Lettuydur, and by the Saxons Bedanford (both which terms are expressive of its character as a place of public accommodation at the passage of a river), derives its name from its situation near an ancient ford on the river Ouse. In 571, a battle was fought here, between the Britons and the West Saxons, the latter being commanded by Ceolfulf, brother of Ceawlin, third king of Wessex, in which the Britons were defeated with considerable loss. The town having been almost destroyed by the Danes, was restored by Edward the Elder, who greatly enlarged it by erecting buildings on the opposite side of the river; but in 1010, it suffered again from an irruption of the Danes, who committed most dreadful ravages in their progress through the country. After the Conquest, Payne de Beauchamp, third baron of Bedford, built a strong castle here, which was besieged and taken by Stephen in the war with the Empress Matilda; and when the barons took up arms against King John, William de Beauchamp, who then possessed it, having taken part with the insurgents, delivered the castle into their possession, but it was subsequently besieged and ultimately taken for the king by Falco de Breant, upon whom that monarch bestowed it, as a reward for his services. In the reign of Henry III., Falco having committed excessive outrages, for which he was fined £3000 by the king's itinerant justiciaries at Dunstable, seized the principal judge and imprisoned him in the castle, which, after a vigorous siege and an obstinate defence, memorable in the history of those times, was taken, and, by the king's order, demolished, with the exception of the inner part, which was given for a residence to William de Beauchamp, to whom Henry restored the barony, which he had forfeited in the preceding reign. Of this fortress, only a part of the intrenchments, and the site of the keep, now converted into a bowling-green, remain. The ancient barons of Bedford were Lord Almoners at the coronation of the kings of England, and, as an inheritor of part of the barony, the Marquis of Exeter officiated at that of George IV., receiving the usual perquisite of a silver alms-bason, and the cloth upon which the sovereign walked from Westminster Hall to the Abbey. During the civil war in the reign of Charles I., this town, which had been garrisoned for the parliament, surrendered to Prince Rupert, in 1643; the parliamentary troops, under Col. Montague, afterwards entered it by stratagem, and carried off some money and horses, which had been brought thither for the use of the royalists.

The town is pleasantly situated in a fertile vale, watered by the river Ouse, over which a handsome stone bridge of five arches was erected in 1813, at an expense of £15,137, replacing a former bridge of great antiquity; it consists of one spacious street, nearly a mile in length, intersected at right angles by several smaller streets; the houses, many of which are ancient, are in general well built, interspersed with several of modern erection. A crescent is at present being formed on the northern side of the bridge, and the general appearance of the town is rapidly improving: it is well paved and lighted, and amply supplied with water. Races are held in the spring and autumn; assemblies take place during the winter; and a small theatre is opened occasionally. The principal branches of manufacture are those of lace and straw-plat, in which many women and children are employed; and a considerable trade in corn and coal, by means of the Ouse, is carried on with Lynn-Regis and the intermediate places. The market days are Monday, for cattle; and Saturday, for corn and provisions; the former market is held in the southern, and the latter in the northern, division of the town. The fairs are on the first Tuesday in Lent, April 21st, July 5th, August 21st, October 12th, and December 19th, for cattle; and there is a wool fair on the 17th of November. The government, by charter of incorporation, granted by Charles II., by which the prescriptive privileges of the borough were confirmed, is vested in a mayor, recorder, deputy-recorder, two bailiffs (who act as sheriffs), two chamberlains, an indefinite number of aldermen, and thirteen common council-men, assisted by a town clerk, three serjeants at mace, and subordinate officers. The mayor, who is a justice of the peace, and the two bailiffs, are elected annually from among the freemen: the aldermen, whose number is by custom limited to twelve, are chosen from among those who have served the office of mayor. The corporation hold a court of session quarterly, at which the deputy-recorder, or, in his absence, the mayor, presides. The borough gaol has been pulled down, an arrangement having been made whereby offenders committed by the magistrates for the borough are sent to the county gaol; and a lock-up house has been built for the temporary confinement of disorderly persons. The borough first sent representatives to parliament in the 23rd of Edward I., since which time it has returned two members: the right of election is vested in the freemen and burgesses, whether resident or not, and in inhabitants, being householders and not receiving alms, in number about four hundred: the mayor and bailiffs are the returning officers. The assizes and quarter sessions for the county are held in this town. The sessions-house, rebuilt in 1753, is a neat stone edifice, in St. Paul's square; the county gaol and old house of correction, rebuilt in 1801, is a handsome structure, surrounded by a high stone wall at the north-western entrance into the town; it contains a tread-mill for grinding corn, worked by prisoners sentenced to hard labour. The county penitentiary, or new house of correction, a large brick building on the road to Kettering, was erected in 1819. The house of industry, erected by act of parliament, in 1796, at an expense of £5000, is under the control of thirteen directors resident in the town, to whom, by an act passed in the 34th of George III., the expenditure of the poor rates is entrusted. The county lunatic asylum, a handsome brick building on the road to Ampthill, was erected by act of parliament, in 1812, at an expense of £13,000, and will accommodate sixty-five patients; private patients are admitted on paying 14s. each per week. The county infirmary, on the same road, is a substantial brick building, with a stone front, towards the erection and endowment of which the late Samuel Whitbread, Esq. gave £10,000, Lord Hampden £1000, and the Duke of Bedford contributes £100 per annum. The Marquis of Tavistock, at the parliamentary election for the county in 1826, presented £2000 to this institution, in lieu of entertaining the freeholders.

The town comprises the parishes of St. Cuthbert, St. John, St. Mary, St. Paul, and St. Peter Martin, within the archdeaconry of Bedford, and diocese of Lincoln. The living of St. Cuthbert's is a discharged rectory, rated in the king's books at £5. 9. 4½., endowed with £400 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Crown. The living of St. John's is a rectory not in charge, in the patronage of the Corporation: the church is a neat structure in the later style of English architecture, with a handsome tower, but it has been much modernized. The living of St. Mary's is a rectory, rated in the king's books at £11. 4. 9½., endowed with £400 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Bishop of Lincoln: the church is in the later style of English architecture, with a plain square tower. The living of St. Paul's is a vicarage, rated in the king's books at £10, and in the patronage of Lord Cartaret: the church is a spacious and venerable structure, partly in the early, and partly in the decorated, style of English architecture, having a handsome tower surmounted by an octagonal spire, and a north and south porch in the later style: the interior, which is chiefly in the early English style, contains a stone pulpit, embellished with gilt tracery, on a blue ground, and some interesting monuments and brass plates: over the south porch there is a chamber, in which the records of the corporation are deposited, and over the northern side of the chancel, a library of valuable books. The living of St. Peter's Martin is a rectory, rated in the king's books at £11. 13. 1½., and in the patronage of the Crown: the church is an ancient edifice, with a tower, the upper part of which has been recently restored, and having, at the southern entrance, a beautiful Norman arch. There are places of worship for Baptists, Independents, Wesleyan Methodists, and Moravians.

The free grammar school was founded in 1556, and endowed with property, consisting of some houses and land in Bedford, and in the united parishes of St. George the Martyr and St. Andrew above the Bars, Holborn, London, by Sir William Harpur, a native of this town, and lord mayor of London in 1561, whose statue, in white marble, is placed in a niche over the entrance. It has eight scholarships of £80 per annum each, tenable for four years, in either of the Universities of Oxford, Cambridge, or Dublin, six of which are restricted to boys whose parents are inhabitants of the town, and the remaining two are open to all scholars on the foundation. The school is under the inspection of the Warden and Fellows of New College, Oxford, who appoint the master and the usher, and under the management of eighteen trustees resident in the town, six of whom retire annually, in rotation, six others being elected in their stead. Under the same endowment there are an English school for boys, a National school for boys and girls, and an hospital for the maintenance and education of fifty children of both sexes; an apprentice fee of £30 each is given annually with ten of the boys and one of £15 each with five of the girls, who, at the expiration of their apprenticeship, on producing a certificate of good conduct, receive a sum not less than £10, nor exceeding £20 each, to assist in setting them up in business. From the same fund were founded and endowed, twenty almshouses, each containing four apartments, for ten aged men and ten aged women, decayed housekeepers, each of whom receives a weekly allowance of 10s., and £3 annually for clothing; and forty-six additional almshouses have since been erected, on the northern side of Harpur-street, for aged men and women, who receive a weekly allowance of 7s. each, and £2 annually for clothing: small pensions are also granted to the widows who quit the almshouses on the death of their husbands. The sum of £800 is annually given, in marriage portions of £20 each to maidens of good character, resident in the town, £500 for the relief of decayed housekeepers, and other pecuniary donations to the poor, all arising from the same endowment, which, owing to the increased rental of the estate, yields an annual income of more than £11,000. A school, for ten boys and ten girls, was founded in 1727, and endowed with lands producing £46. 10. per annum, by Mr. Alexander Leith; and a Blue-coat school, now united to the National school, was founded in 1760, and endowed with £33. 15. 6. per annum, by Alderman Newton, of Leicester, for twenty-five boys, for clothing whom the endowment is now appropriated. Eight almshouses, for unmarried persons of either sex, were founded and endowed in 1679, by Mr. Thomas Christie. An hospital, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, was founded and endowed by the inhabitants of Bedford, in the reign of Edward II., for a master and ten brethren; its revenue, at the dissolution of religious houses, was £21. 0. 8., but the charity was then confirmed, and the mastership is now annexed to the rectory of St. John's. A monastery of uncertain foundation existed here at a very early period, in the chapel of which Offa, king of Mercia, who had been a great benefactor to it, was buried; the chapel being afterwards undermined by the Ouse, sunk with the tomb of that monarch into the river. Near St. Paul's church stands an ancient building, supposed to have been one of the prebendal houses noticed by Leland: about three quarters of a mile west of the town, on the bank of the river, are some remains of the conventual buildings of Caldwell priory, which was founded in the reign of John, by Robert, son of William de Houghton, for brethren of the order of the Holy Cross, the revenue of which, at the dissolution, was £148. 15. 10. At Newenham, a mile east of the town, are considerable remains of a priory of Black canons, which, in the reign of Henry II., was removed thither from Bedford, where it had been originally founded by Simon Beauchamp; and at Elstow church, formerly Helenstowe, two miles distant, on the road to Clophill, are the interesting ruins of a nunnery, founded by Judith, niece of William the Conqueror, and dedicated to the Holy Trinity, and to St. Helen, mother of Constantine the Great, the revenue of which, at the dissolution, was £325. 2. 1. John Bunyan, author of the Pilgrim's Progress, was confined for twelve years and a half in the county gaol at Bedford, from which he was ultimately released on the intercession of the Bishop of Lincoln. Bedford confers the title of duke on the noble family of Russell.

BEDFORD, a township in the parish of LEIGH, hundred of WEST DERBY, county palatine of LANCASTER, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (E. S. E.) from Leigh, containing 2830 inhabitants. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. The manufacture of muslin and fustian is extensively carried on here.

BEDFORDSHIRE, an inland county, bounded on the north and north-east by Huntingdonshire, on the east by the county of Cambridge, on the south-east and south by that of Hertford, on the south-west and west by that of Buckingham, and on the north-west by that of Northampton. It lies between the parallels of $51^{\circ} 50'$ and $52^{\circ} 21'$ (N. Lat.), and between the meridians of $10'$ and $42'$ (W. Lon.), and includes four hundred and sixty-three square miles, or two hundred and ninety-six thousand three hundred and twenty statute acres. The population, in 1821, amounted to 83,716.

At the period of the Roman conquest of Britain, this territory, with that included in the adjoining counties of Hertford and Bucks, was inhabited by the Cassii; and on the consolidation of the Roman dominion, it formed part of the division of southern Britain, called by these conquerors Flavia Casariensis. During the long and sanguinary wars between the Britons and the invading Saxons, the former were defeated in a great battle fought near Bedford, in the year 580, by Cuthwulf, brother of Ceawlin, King of the West Saxons, who compelled them to abandon the districts lying immediately below the Chiltern hills, where several of their principal towns were situated, one of which, on the banks of the Ouzel in this county, was called by the Saxons Lygeanburgh, since corrupted into Leighton-Buzzard. During the Saxon Octarchy, the northern parts of this county appear to have been occupied by the South Mercians, and the southern by the East Saxons. From this period, there is no particular mention of this territory until the reign of Edward the Elder, when it was frequently the scene of contention during the furious incursions of the Danes. About the year 919, Edward came to Bedford, received the submission of the inhabitants of the surrounding country, built a fortress on the southern side of the river Ouse, and then departed after a stay of four weeks. In 921, the Danes entering from Huntingdonshire, stationed themselves at Tempsford, which place they fortified; and, in an excursion thence, attacked the town of Bedford, but the inhabitants made a vigorous sortie, and put them to flight with great slaughter. In the summer of the same year, Edward assembled a great force, and closely besieging these ravagers at Tempsford, took that city, as it is styled in the Saxon Chronicle, destroyed their fortress, and put to death their king, with a great number of his chief men. In 1009, the Danes made an incursion through the southern part of the shire to Oxford; and in the following year their army burned the towns of Bedford and Tempsford; but, in 1011, this territory was recovered by King Ethelred. In 1017, however, the power of the Danes again prevailed, and under Canute it was included in the Danelege, or Danish jurisdiction.

The first event of national importance which occurred within the limits of the county subsequently to the Conquest, was the capture of the castle of Bedford by King Stephen, in 1138, from the Beauchamps, by whom it had been held in opposition to him. The same family held this fortress against King John, who sent his favourite, Fulk de Breant, to besiege it; and after he had taken it, gave it him as a reward for his good services. All the other castles of this county appear to have been destroyed by John, in his famous march northward; and, a few years afterwards, Bedford castle itself was taken and destroyed by Henry III., one of whose justices itinerant had been arbitrarily imprisoned in it by Fulk. Thus left entirely without fortresses, this county was the scene of no important event during the wars of the Roses. In the great contest between Charles I. and the parliament, Bedfordshire was one of those counties in which, according to Lord Clarendon, the king had no visible party, nor a single fixed quarter; and was one of the first that associated to oppose him. It was included in the great district of the "Eastern Associates," for the embodying of which a special license was passed by the parliament, at the end of November, 1642, when the Earl of Manchester was appointed their commander-in-chief, under whom Cromwell commanded the horse. A strong party of royalist forces took possession of Bedford, in October, 1643: soon after, Col. Montague entered the town by a stratagem, and carried off some money and horses intended for the use of the king.

Bedfordshire is in the diocese of Lincoln, and province of Canterbury: it forms an archdeaconry, in which are included the deaneries of Bedford, Clapham, Dunstable, Eaton, Fleet, and Shefford; and contains one hundred and twenty-three parishes, of which fifty-six are rectories, sixty vicarages, and seven perpetual curacies and donatives. For purposes of civil government it is divided into nine hundreds, namely, Barford, Biggleswade, Clifton, Flitt, Manshead, Redbornestoke, Stodden, Willey, and Wixamtree. It contains the borough, market, and county town of Bedford, the corporate and market town of Dunstable, and the market towns of Ampthill, Biggleswade, Harrold, Leighton-Buzzard, Luton, Potton, and Woburn. Two knights are returned to parliament for the shire, and two burgesses for the borough of Bedford. The county is included in the Norfolk circuit, and the assizes and sessions are held in the shire-hall at Bedford, at which town are the county gaol and old house of correction, and the penitentiary, or new house of correction. There are forty-one acting magistrates. The parochial rates raised in the county for the year ending March 25th, 1827, amounted to £92,340. 11., and the expenditure to £91,359. 14., of which £81,959. 18. was applied to the relief of the poor. The form of this county is a very irregular parallelogram, the circumference of which is deeply indented by projecting, and in some instances nearly insulated, portions of the adjoining shires. The scenery is mostly of a pleasing, but rarely of an impressive, kind: the loftier elevations afford cheering views of rich level tracts, watered by the slowly winding Ouse and the smaller rivers. Of these, the prospect from Ridgmont, over Buckinghamshire; that from Millbrook churchyard, over the Vale of Bedford; that from the ancient encampment called Totternhoe Castle, near Dunstable, across part of Bedfordshire and Buckinghamshire; and that afforded by a ride along the downs, from Streatley to Barton, are the most interesting. The most striking range of hills is that of chalk, which extends across the southern part of the county from Hertfordshire into Buckinghamshire, and forms the spacious downs of Luton and Dunstable. The climate, like the surface of the county, has hardly any striking peculiarities, but it is for the most part mild and genial, and favourable to the growth of corn. The crops on the colder soils of the more elevated lands to the north of Bedford, on the chalk hills the southern extremity of the county, are, of course, much later in arriving at maturity than those of the richer vales. The prevailing winds blow from the south-west; and the ungenial effects of those from the opposite quarter, blowing over the extensive levels of Huntingdonshire, Cambridgeshire, and Norfolk, are experienced with unmitigated severity.

Every species of soil commonly seen on the uplands of Great Britain, from the strongest clay to the lightest sand, may be found in this county. Although the various kinds are frequently found in remarkably small patches, and so intermixed that no accurate delineation of them can be given, yet the most extensively characteristic divisions may be described as follows. In the whole of the southernmost part of the county, separated from the rest of it by a line drawn from south-west to north-east, from the border of Buckinghamshire, near Eaton-Bray, to that of Hertfordshire, to the east of Barton, the prevailing soil is chalk, having a stratum of flint about six inches thick, at the depth of a foot from the surface, below which is a bed of clay, varying in thickness from six to ten feet, beneath which is found the hard chalk rock. This district is terminated on the north and north-west by the Chiltern hills, forming the abrupt extremity of the chalk strata in this direction; and contains about thirty-six thousand acres, of which four thousand acres of those elevated tracts, known by the names of Dunstable downs, Luton downs, Warden White hills, &c., are almost in a natural state. Some of the hills at Luton consist of clay towards their summits, with chalk and gravel on their declivities towards the vales; and at Sundon and Streatley, the chalky basis is covered to various depths by strata of clay, gravel, or gravelly loams. North-westward of the Chiltern hills lies a long tract of clays, extending without interruption from Billington, on the south-eastern confines of the county, north-eastward to Cockayne-Hatley, at its easternmost extremity, on the border of Cambridgeshire. These, like the other clays in the northern parts, are mostly stiff and tenacious, but interspersed with small portions of gravel, and loams on a wet basis. The clays near the Chiltern hills contain, in general, a mixture of chalk, whence they are called white-lands. This district again, on the north-west, is bounded by the sandy belt, which forms so distinguishing a feature in the geology of Bedfordshire, and extends, with only a small interval in the valley of the Ivel, from Leighton-Buzzard, on the confines of Buckinghamshire, by Woburn, Ampthill, and Biggleswade, to Pottun, on those of Cambridgeshire. Its length is about twenty-five miles, while its ordinary breadth is about three, but in some places as much as five, and in others not more than one. Very little sand is found out of its limits, which include about forty-two thousand acres: its surface is generally hilly, with clay and various loams in the intersecting vales, and sometimes clay on the tops of the hills, which variations, from the prevailing sandiness of the tract, added to the ferruginous peats of Tingrith, Flitwick, Westoning, Flitton, Mauldon, &c., reduce the real amount of sandy surface to not more than thirty thousand acres. Many of the hills are too high and steep to be susceptible of profitable cultivation; and with regard to many others, the clay, or marl, necessary for their improvement, can be obtained only at inconvenient distances. Great efforts, however, have been made towards improvement, and only a very small portion of it remains unenclosed. The colour of this sand, though in some spots black, white, or grey, is in general a brownish yellow, which tinge it receives from the iron either combined with it, or loosely adhering to the surface of the particles of which it consists. The white and black sands are invariably barren, their natural vegetable produce being almost entirely heath, or ling, as it is called in this county, and the quantity of fern and natural grasses intermingled with it is very inconsiderable. Extensive tracts of gravelly loams are distributed over parts of the county, the principal of which are on the borders of the rivers Ouse and Ivel, and comprise an area of about thirty-four thousand acres. Indeed the soils of the meadows on the banks of the Ouse and Ivel consist entirely of gravels of various degrees of fineness, mixed with clay and sand. The continuous gravelly soils of these vales commence on the course of the Ouse, near Bletsoe, and on that of the Ivel, in the vicinity of Clifton; but they also frequently appear on the slopes of the hills enclosing the winding vale of the former river above Bletsoe, as far as ~~Tusley~~. In some places the subsoil of gravel is covered with a thick black mould, or reddish brown earth, both of which are of the highest fertility: in other places the upper soil is rendered sharp by the proximity of the gravel to the surface, which makes it necessary to cultivate upon it such crops as are best adapted for light land. The land immediately adjoining the rivers, by the waters of which it is annually inundated, consists every where of meadows of never-failing fertility, producing every year abundant crops of hay and after-grass, without the aid of manure. Northward of the gravel, at the foot of the hills which bound the vale of the Ouse on the north, there is in most places a breadth of between one and two miles of peculiarly productive black and brown soils, resting on a substratum of mild clay. The rest of the county northward of the sandy tract above described consists of clays of almost every variety, but for the most part stiff and tenacious; and, with the clayey district which separates the sand from the chalk, comprises an extent of nearly one hundred and ninety-eight thousand acres. Part of these clays occupies the southern portion of the Vale of Bedford, adjoining the gravelly soils above mentioned, which vale is separated by a range of hills on the east and south from the sandy tracts. Many of the summits and declivities of these hills have a peculiar shallow, light, clayey soil on a clayey, or marly, substratum, denominated woodland, the surface of much of which is occupied by woods. From the neighbourhood of Bedford to the northern extremity of the shire, the face of the county is tolerably uniform; and, on the upland districts, having only gentle descents, is much of this woodland, which is extremely difficult of profitable culture, and produces only the coarsest grasses. Gently rising hills of brownish clay of very various qualities bound the Vale of Bedford immediately on the north; and the smaller vallies of this part of the county have sometimes remarkably fertile soils on a substratum of gravel, more particularly that which extends from the neighbourhood of Risley through the parishes of Swineshead, Pertenhall, and Little Staughton.

The improvements that have taken place in modern times in the agriculture of this county, which have not, however, been introduced very extensively, are mainly owing to the exertions of the late Duke of Bedford. It has long been noted for its abundant produce of wheat and barley, the Vale of Bedford being one of the finest corn districts in the county. Rye and oats are very little cultivated, as beans are considered to be more profitable, and on the clay soils are less exhausting than oats. Winter and summer tares are grown in every part of the county; as also are turnips on the sandy, gravelly, and chalky soils, and sometimes on the woodlands. Much clover is sown; ray-grass, commonly called in this county bents, is in general use on the sandy lands; and sainfoin is cultivated by many farmers in the enclosed parts of the chalk district. The natural meadows on the banks of the rivers are distinguished for their richness, but the quantity of pasture land is not very considerable. In the southern parts of the county, and in the neighbourhoods of Ampthill and Woburn more especially, are many large dairy farms, the produce of which, being chiefly butter, is sent in considerable quantities to the London market. Very little butter is made in the northern parts of the county besides what is required for home consumption, much of the grass land being of very poor quality. The breeding and fattening of calves is carried on to a considerable extent in the neighbourhood of Biggleswade: the calves of the dairy district are sold at Leighton market, for the purpose of suckling. The irrigation of grass land was introduced by the late Duke of Bedford, and various examples of its beneficial effects may be seen in the parishes of Woburn, Crawley, Ridgmont, Flitwick, and Maulden. Marl and clay are in common use as manures on the light sandy soils; chalk and lime, in the southern parts of the county; and peat-ashes and peat dust, in different places, more particularly in the chalk district. In addition to these and the common farm-yard manures, the farmers in the southern part of the county obtain various light dressings for their land from London. The cattle are of a mixed and generally of an inferior kind, partaking of the various qualities of the Holderness, Lancashire, Leicestershire, and Alderney sorts. The sheep are also of mixed breeds: and their fleeces are of a very indifferent kind of wool, and weigh from three to four pounds. Many of the swine partake more or less of the qualities of the Berkshire kind. The farmers are chiefly supplied with horses by dealers who bring two-years-old colts from the fens of Huntingdonshire and Lincolnshire. In the southern part of the county, many road teams are kept for the purpose of conveying the produce of the soil to the metropolis, and bringing back manure. The villages of Sandy and Gritford have long been celebrated, in this and the adjacent counties, for the excellence and abundance of the culinary vegetables grown in their vicinities: for this they are chiefly indebted to the excellence of the soils in their vale lands, which consist of a fine deep sandy loam of a yellowish brown, and from the best garden grounds in the county. The soils of some parts of the parish of Potton appear to be little inferior to those of Sandy for horticultural purposes; and portions of excellent garden ground are found in other situations in the sandy district, where its surface is but little elevated, as at Biggleswade, Campton, Clop-hill, Maulden, &c. The produce of the extensive horticultural grounds at Sandy is sent to the surrounding markets, to the distance of sixty miles, and in some instances even still further. The orchards are generally very small: those of cherries are most common in the southern parts of the county. The woods occupy about seven thousand acres, and are almost wholly situated on the slopes of the hills, which consist of cold wet woodland clays. A considerable portion of them clothes the hills which extend from Ampthill towards Blunham, between the sandy district and the Vale of Bedford. Others, again, are seen on the western side of the vale, at Holcutt and Marston, and nearly all the rest are dispersed over the north-western parts of the county; while, on the contrary, in many parts of the southern and eastern districts of it, wood is rarely seen. Various extensive plantations have been made by different proprietors, among which may be more particularly specified those of the Earl of Upper Ossory and Francis Moore, Esq., on the sandy district, near the western confines of the county; those of the Duke of Bedford, around Woburn Abbey; those of Lord Carteret, near his seat at Hawnes; and those of Lord St. John, in the neighbourhood of his seat at Melchbourn. Some of the sandy hills, which admit of little other improvement, have been applied in various places to the growth of furze, or whins, for the use of the bakers, lime-burners, &c. The high chalky downs, which meet the eye on every side in the southernmost part of the county, in the neighbourhoods of Luton and Dunstable, comprise about four thousand acres of bleak and barren land, which in many parts consists of nothing but a mass of hard chalk, called hurlock, or clunch, with a slight covering of loamy soil, barely sufficient to nourish a scanty crop of indifferent herbage. The northern acclivities of the Chiltern hills are, in many places, the steepest in the county, and totally inaccessible to the plough. Excepting this tract, the waste lands of Bedfordshire occupy a very small proportion of its surface.

The mineral productions are of very inferior importance. A bed of hard limestone follows the course of the river Ouse, from Turvey to Bedford, and abounds with the different kinds of shells and other marine exuviae commonly found imbedded in the yellow limestone. This is quarried for the various purposes of building, &c. At Totternhoe, near Dunstable, is a considerable quarry of freestone; and in some of the strata which cover the principal bed of stone are found cornua ammonis and other shells. A small quantity of iron-stone has been observed in some pits at Bromham; and some of the strata in the sand pits of Liddington, &c., contain a considerable proportion of the same mineral. Small quantities of imperfect coal have been found in the parish of Goldington. Nautili and other shells are found in a chalk pit at Caddington; sharks' teeth, ammonites, belemnites, &c., in a light-coloured clay near Leighton; and echini in the fields near Eaton-Bray. The manufactures are almost entirely confined to the platting of straw and the making of thread-lace, the latter being pursued in every part of the county, excepting only in the southern districts, where it has been superseded by the straw manufacture. Straw-platting was formerly confined to the chalk district, at the southernmost extremity of the county, but was so much encouraged about the commencement of the present century, as to spread rapidly over the whole southern part of it, as far as Woburn, Ampthill, and Shefford. Here many of the males, and nearly the whole female population, are employed in this manufacture; in like manner as those of the middle and northern parts of the county are in the making of thread-lace. A considerable quantity of mats is made in the vicinity of the Ouse, to the north-west of Bedford. The chief exports are the produce of the manufactures, grain, butter, and calves; the imports are horses, and the various kinds of ordinary supplies for domestic use.

The principal rivers are the Ouse and the Ivel. The former flows into this county from Buckinghamshire, in the parish of Turvey, becomes navigable at Bedford, and, passing by Tempsford, enters Huntingdonshire between Eaton-Socon and St. Neots: its course through Bedfordshire is remarkably tortuous, and about forty-five miles long. The fish in it are pike, perch, bream, chubb, bleak, cray-fish, eels, dace, roach, and gudgeon: the eels, which are particularly fine, are most abundant at Stoke mill; the bleak, at Bedford bridge. The Ivel rises near Baldock in Hertfordshire, enters the county in the vicinity of Stotfold, and, being joined by other powerful streams from the west, becomes navigable at Biggleswade, and falls into the Ouse at Tempsford. The Lea has its source near Houghton-Regis, in this county, and, flowing south-eastward through the parish of Luton, enters Hertfordshire between East and West Hide, in its progress towards the Thames. The Ouzel rises near Whipsnade, on the southern confines of the county, and, leaving Eaton-Bray on the right, takes a north-westerly course by Leighton-Buzzard, forming for a considerable distance the line of boundary between the counties of Bedford and Buckingham, in the latter of which it continues its course. The Grand Junction canal crosses a small western portion of Bedfordshire, in the valley of the Ouzel, near Leighton-Buzzard, to which town and to the neighbouring country it gives all the advantages of a cheap medium of traffic with the metropolis and with the north-western counties of England, in the articles of corn, coal, iron, &c.

The roads of the gravelly districts are in general very good; those of the sandy tract, being chiefly made and repaired with sandy gravel, are frequently loose and heavy; those of the north-western part of the county, which are mostly repaired with the limestone above-mentioned, are usually rough and uneven; while the principal roads of the clay districts afford to the traveller a sufficient idea of those of the adjacent country, which, in winter, are nearly impassable. The great northern road from London to Glasgow enters near the forty-first milestone, runs through Biggleswade and Tempsford, and passes into Huntingdonshire two miles beyond Eaton-Socon. The great road from London to Chester and Holyhead enters near the thirty-third milestone, and passing through Hockliffe, or Hockley in the Hole, quits it at the forty-second milestone for Buckinghamshire: the road to Liverpool branches off near Hockliffe, and enters the latter county two miles beyond Woburn. The road from London to Higham-Ferrers and Kettering runs into the county from Hertfordshire, near the thirty-sixth milestone, and, passing through Bedford, enters Northamptonshire about eleven miles beyond it. A road from London to Bedford enters at the twenty-seventh milestone.

This county contained the Roman station called by Antonine Durocobriæ, and by Richard of Cirencester Forum Diana, at Dunstable; and that called by Ptolemy Σαλιναι, and by Ravennas Salinæ, near the village of Sandy. It was intersected by the great Roman roads, the Iknield-street and the Watling-street; by a military way, which runs for a considerable distance within its south-eastern borders; and by several vicinal ways. The Iknield, or Ikening, street, supposed to be of ancient British construction, and to have been afterwards adopted as a medium of communication by the Romans, enters Bedfordshire on its south-eastern border, from the country of the Iceni, from whom it derived its name, and crosses the turnpike-road from Luton to Bedford about the sixteenth milestone, where a branch bears off to the right through Great Bramingham and Houghton to the British camp at Maiden-Bower, near Dunstable, while the main road pursues its course along the side of the hills, and passing through the town of Dunstable, soon after enters Buckinghamshire. The Watling-street cannot, in this part of its course, be distinguished from the great road from London to Chester and Holyhead, which is carried along it from the southern to the western confines of the county: near Dunstable, through which it passes, various Roman coins have been discovered. The third great Roman road through Bedfordshire was that which enters it near Baldock in Hertfordshire, in the line of the present north road, which, however, diverges to the right at the village of Stretton, to pass through Biggleswade, while the Roman road continues its course direct to the station Salinæ, near the village of Sandy, the site of which is now called Chesterfield. Hence it may be traced pursuing the same direction across the road from Everton to Tempsford, through Tempsford marsh, by a tumulus on the hill beyond, called the Hen and Chickens, and to the left of Hardwick, to the Roman station at Godmanchester in Huntingdonshire. The station near Sandy appears to have communicated by different vicinal ways with others in the adjoining counties; and on its site have been found coins and every other ordinary relic of Roman occupation. On a hill overlooking this spot is a large Roman camp of an irregular oblong form; but the most remarkable military intrenchment is that called Totternhoe Castle, situated on the brow of a high hill, about two miles to the north-west of Dunstable, and consisting of a lofty circular mount surrounded by two distinct ramparts: a little south-eastward of this is a camp in the form of a parallelogram, about five hundred feet long, and two hundred and fifty broad. About a mile from Dunstable is the large circular encampment called Maiden-Bower, about two thousand five hundred feet in circumference, and formed by a single ditch and rampart: another extensive fortification of the same kind, and nearly of a circular form, is seen near Leighton-Buzzard: and a third circular intrenchment, one hundred and twelve feet in diameter, is situated about four miles from Bedford, adjoining the road from that town to Eaton-Socon.

At the period of the Reformation, this county contained fourteen religious houses, besides a preceptory of the Knights Hospitallers, six hospitals, and one college of priests. There are considerable remains of Elstow abbey and Dunstable priory; and smaller vestiges of Warden abbey, of the Grey friars' monastery at Bedford, and of the priories of Bushmead, Harrold, Newenham, and Caldwell. The most ancient specimens of ecclesiastical architecture are seen in the church of Elstow, anciently belonging to the monastery at that place, which was founded, and the present church built, soon after the Norman Conquest. The parish church of Dunstable, also originally conventual, and built in the reign of Henry I., yet exhibits considerable remains of its original style of architecture. The other churches possessing any remarkable architectural feature are those of St. Peter at Bedford, Caddington, Little Barford, Puddington, and Thurleigh, all of which have doorways of Saxon architecture; and those of Biggleswade, Eaton-Bray, Eaton-Socon, Felmersham, Leighton-Buzzard, Luton, Marston, Northill, Odell, Studham, Willington, and Wymington. Many of the churches have richly ornamented niches, and contain fonts curiously decorated, and in some instances of great antiquity. Hardly any traces of mural fortresses now exist, excepting the strong earthworks which yet mark their ancient sites. The most remarkable of these are situated at Arlsey, Bedford, Bletsoe, Cainhoe, Mepershall, Puddington, Ridgmont, Risinghoe, Sutton, Thurleigh, Toddington, and Yielding. Among the mansions of the landed proprietors, those most worthy of particular notice are, Woburn Abbey, Ampthill Park, Luton Hoo Park, Wrest Park, Brogborough Park, Bletsoe Park, and Melchbourn Park. There are mineral springs at Barton, Bedford, Bletsoe, Blunham, Bromham, Bushmead, Clapham, Cranfield, Holcutt, Milton-Ernest, Odell, Pertenhall, Risley, Silsoe, and Turvey; they possess different properties, some being saline, others chalybeate, but none of them are much frequented.

BEDHAMPTON, a parish in the hundred of PORTSDOWN, Portsdown division of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, $\frac{3}{4}$ of a mile (W.) from Havant, containing 413 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Winchester, rated in the king's books at £10. 3. 9., and in the patronage of Andrew Reid, Esq. This parish is within the jurisdiction of the Cheyney Court held at Winchester every Thursday, for the recovery of debts under 40s.

BEDINGFIELD, a parish in the hundred of HOXNE, county of SUFFOLK, 4 miles (S. S. E.) from Eye, containing 318 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Suffolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £8, and in the patronage of J. J. Bedingfield, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Mary.

BEDINGHAM, a parish in the hundred of LONDON, county of NORFOLK, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W. by W.) from Bungay, containing 343 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Norfolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £5, endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the presentation of R. Stone, Esq. on the nomination of the Bishop of Norwich. The church is dedicated to St. Andrew. Another church, dedicated to St. Mary, formerly stood in the churchyard; and the living consisted of medieties, which have long been united.

BEDLINGTON, a parish in the eastern division of CHESTER ward, county palatine of DURHAM, of which it is a detached portion, lying at the south-eastern corner of Castle ward, county of Northumberland, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. E. by E.) from Morpeth, comprising the townships of Bedlington, North Blyth with Chambois, Choppington, Netherton, East Sleekburn, and West Sleekburn, and containing 1862 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Northumberland, and diocese of Durham, rated in the king's books at £13. 6. 8., and in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Durham. The church, dedicated to St. Cuthbert, whose remains rested here for one night in 1069, when the monks fled from Durham, at the menacing approach of the Conqueror, was enlarged and repaired in 1818. There are places of worship for Primitive and Wesleyan Methodists and Presbyterians. This parish, commonly termed Bedlingtonshire, is situated on the coast of the North sea, and is bounded on the north and south by the river Blyth: it had anciently courts within its own limits, and the officers of justice were appointed by the Bishop of Durham, to whom the manor belongs. Petty sessions for the district are held monthly at one of the inns in the village. Bedlington iron-works rank among the oldest and most extensive in the kingdom: they are romantically situated on the banks of the river Blyth, which is navigable for small craft, and affords the means of conveying their produce, consisting of chain cables, bolts, bar and sheet iron, and nearly all the heavier articles in wrought iron, to the port of Blyth, where it is shipped for London. The vicinity contains several stone quarries, producing grindstones and whetstones of a superior quality; and there are some extensive collieries. A petrifying spring rises at the western end of the village.

BEDMINSTER, a parish in the hundred of HARTCLIFFE with BEDMINSTER, county of SOMERSET, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (S. by W.) from Bristol, containing 7979 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, with the perpetual curacies of St. Thomas' Redcliffe and Abbot's Leigh annexed, in the archdeaconry of Bath, and diocese of Bath and Wells, rated in the king's books at £10. 3. 4., and in the patronage of the Prebendary of Bedminster in the Cathedral Church of Salisbury. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, displays various portions of ancient architecture, mixed with modern insertions: a spire on the tower was thrown down in 1563. A chapel of ease is being erected, under the act passed in the 58th of George III., the first stone having been laid on the 8th of September, 1829. There are places of worship for Baptists, Independents, and Methodists: that belonging to the Independents is one of the most handsome and spacious buildings of the kind in the kingdom; the principal entrance is adorned with Grecian columns, and the exterior coated with freestone. Bedminster anciently consisted only of a few cottages, but, from its proximity to Bristol (being separated from it by the new cut, whereby the natural channel of the river Avon has been converted into a floating harbour for vessels frequenting the port), and the main road to that city from the western counties passing through it, it has become a considerable suburb to Bristol, participating in its manufactures, trade, &c. Here are tan-yards and rope-walks; and in the environs are several gardens, with the produce of which the occupiers supply the city of Bristol; but many of the inhabitants, the number of whom now exceeds ten thousand, are employed in the collieries within the parish. About the close of the twelfth century, Robert de Berkeley founded an hospital, dedicated to St. Catharine, for a master and several poor brethren; it stood on the western side of a street near the extremity of Brightlow bridge, and was subsequently used as a glass-manufactory, but has since been converted into small tenements: another hospital was founded by a member of the same family, but every vestige of it has disappeared. A court baron for the prebend is held here.

BEDNALL, a joint chapelry and township with Acton-Trussell, in the parish of BASWICH, eastern division of the hundred of CUTTLESTONE, county of STAFFORD, 4 miles (N.E. by N.) from Penkridge. The population is returned with Acton-Trussell. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the peculiar jurisdiction of the Prebendary of Whittington and Baswich in the Cathedral Church of Lichfield, endowed with £600 royal bounty. The chapel is dedicated to All Saints.

BEDSTONE, a parish in the hundred of PURSLOW, county of SALOP, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N.E.) from Knighton, containing 165 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Salop, and diocese of Hereford, rated in the king's books at £4. 13. 4., endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of Benjamin Brown, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Mary.

BEDWARDINE (ST. JOHN), a parish in the lower division of the hundred of OSWALDSLOW, county of WORCESTER, comprising the townships of St. John Bedwardine and Bishop's Wick, and containing 2424 inhabitants, of which number, 1161 are in the township of St. John Bedwardine, 1 mile (S.W. by W.) from Worcester. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Worcester, rated in the king's books at £13. 6. 8., and in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Worcester. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, is an ancient edifice, partly in the Norman, but chiefly in the later style of English, architecture. The parish takes its name from its having been allotted to supply the table of the monks of Worcester with provisions. The village, pleasantly situated on an eminence rising from the western bank of the Severn, forms a suburb to the city of Worcester, from which it is separated by the river Severn. A fair is held on the Friday before Palm-Sunday, on which day (by ancient usage, originating in a grant of certain privileges to the bailiffs and corporation, by the prior of Worcester, in the reign of Edward IV.,) the mayor and corporation of Worcester walk in procession through the village.

BEDWAS, a parish comprising the hamlet of Van, in the hundred of CAERPHILLY, county of GLAMORGAN (Wales), and the hamlets of Lower and Upper Bedwas, in the lower division of the hundred of WENTLLOOG, county of MONMOUTH, and containing 650 inhabitants, of which number, 298 are in the hamlet of Upper, and 272 in that of Lower, Bedwas, 9 miles (W. by N.) from Newport. The living is a rectory, with the perpetual curacy of Ruddry annexed, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Llandaff, rated in the king's books at £10. 14. 9½., and in the patronage of the Bishop of Llandaff. The church is dedicated to St. Barrog.

BEDWELTY, a parish in the lower division of the hundred of WENTLLOOG, county of MONMOUTH, 16 miles (N.W.) from Newport, comprising the hamlets of Ishlawreod, Mamhole, and Ushlawreod, and containing 6382 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Llandaff, endowed with £600 royal bounty, and £1600 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Bishop of Llandaff. The church, dedicated to St. Sannan, is of early English architecture: and the churchyard, which commands extensive and variegated prospects, is surrounded with some trifling remains of an intrenchment.

BEDWIN (GREAT), a borough, parish, and market town, in the hundred of KINWARDSTONE, county of WILTS, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S.W. by W.) from Hungerford, 23 (N.) from Salisbury, and $70\frac{1}{2}$ (W. by S.) from London, containing, with the tythings of Crofton, East and West Grafton, Martin, Stock with Ford, Wixcombe, Wilton, and Wolfhall, 1928 inhabitants. This place, supposed by Dr. Stukeley to be the Leucomagus of Ravennas, derives its name from the Saxon Beegwyn, or Bedgwyn, expressive of its situation on an eminence, in a chalky soil. It was anciently a city of great extent, and the metropolis of Cissa, one of the three sons of Ælla, the Saxon chieftain, who invaded Britain in 477. Cissa, when viceroy of Wiltshire and part of Berkshire, is said to have enlarged and strengthened Chisbury Castle, now a noble relic of Saxon earthwork, about a mile to the north-east of the town, in the parish of Little Bedwin. In 674, a battle was fought here between Wulfhere, King of Mercia, and Æscuin, a nobleman in the service of Saxburga, Queen of Wessex, in which, after a desperate struggle, the latter was victorious. The soil of

Arms.

Great Bedwin is good, and the general aspect of the country luxuriant. The Kennet and Avon canal passes through the parish, and affords a medium for the conveyance of excellent coal. The market is on Tuesday; and fairs are held on April 23rd and July 26th: the market-house is an ancient building, situated in the principal street. A portreeve, who is customarily called mayor, a bailiff, and other officers, are annually chosen at the court leet of the lord of the manor. This borough sent representatives to all the parliaments of Edward I., from the close of whose reign to the 9th of Henry V. there were frequent intermissions; but since then it has constantly returned two members. The right of election is vested in the freeholders and inhabitants of the ancient burghage messuages, in number about ninety-five: the portreeve is the returning officer, and the influence of the Marquis of Ailesbury predominates. The living is a vicarage, within the jurisdiction of the peculiar court of the Lord Warden of Savernake Forest, rated in the king's books at £8. 10. 10., endowed with £400 private benefaction, £400 royal bounty, and £600 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Marquis of Ailesbury. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, and the only remaining one of seven which are said to have anciently existed here, appears to have been erected at various times, and exhibits good specimens of all the styles of architecture, from the Norman to the later English; it is a cruciform structure, with a lofty embattled tower rising from the intersection, and contains several ancient memorials, among which is the figure of a Knight Templar, and the monument of Sir John Seymour, father of the Protector Somerset, and of Lady Jane Seymour, consort of Henry VIII., who were born at Wolf Hall, now a farm-house, in this parish. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. A school is endowed for the instruction of ten boys; and Sir Andrew Hungerford, in 1694, left an annuity of £10 for apprenticing poor boys of the borough. Within the mounds of Chisbury Castle, comprising an area of fifteen acres, are the remains of an ancient chapel, now used as a barn. Half a mile to the south-west are some vestiges of a Roman building, but they are now scarcely discoverable. A fine tessellated pavement was preserved here till within the last few years. Dr. Thomas Willis, a celebrated physician, was born here in 1621, and died in London, in 1675.

BEDWIN (LITTLE), a parish in the hundred of KINWARDSTONE, county of WILTS, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W.S.W.) from Hungerford, containing 504 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, within the jurisdiction of the peculiar court of the Lord Warden of Savernake Forest, rated in the king's books at £9. 6. 8., and in the patronage of the Marquis of Ailesbury. The church is dedicated to St. Michael. The Kennet and Avon canal passes through the parish, which is also intersected by the ancient Wansdyke.

BEDWORTH, a parish in the Kirby division of the hundred of KNIGHTLOW, county of WARWICK; $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles

Corporate Seal.

(S.) from Nuneaton, containing 3519 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Coventry, and diocese of Lichfield and Coventry, rated in the king's books at £10. 3. 11½., and in the patronage of the Earl of Aylesford. The church, dedicated to All Saints, has recently received an additional number of sittings, by means of a grant of £250 from the Incorporated Society for enlarging churches and chapels. There is a place of worship for Particular Baptists. Near the village is a coal mine, from which a railroad extends to the Ashby de la Zouch and Coventry canals, which form a junction within the parish, the latter terminating here. Two charity schools, and almshouses for twenty-four persons, are endowed with land producing £700 per annum, bequeathed by the Rev. Nicholas Chamberlain, in 1715.

BEEBY, a parish in the eastern division of the hundred of GOSCORE, county of LEICESTER, 6 miles (N.E. by E.) from Leicester, containing 120 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Leicester, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £15. 2. 6., and in the patronage of the Earl of Shaftesbury. The church is dedicated to All Saints.

BEECH, a liberty in the parish of STONE, southern division of the hundred of PIREHILL, county of STAFFORD, containing 838 inhabitants.

BEECHAMWELL, comprising the parish of All Saints, and the united parishes of St. John and St. Mary, in the hundred of CLACKCLOSE, county of NORFOLK, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W.S.W.) from Swaffham, and containing 288 inhabitants. The living of All Saints' is a discharged rectory, with that of Shingham annexed, rated in the king's books at £6. 13. 4., and in the patronage of the Crown. St. John's and St. Mary's are discharged rectories consolidated, rated jointly at £9. 13. 4., and in the patronage of J. Motteaux, Esq.: they are in the archdeaconry of Norfolk, and diocese of Norwich.

BEECH-HILL, a tything in that part of the parish of STRATFIELD-SAYE which is in the hundred of READING, county of BERKS, 6 miles (S. by W.) from Reading, containing 274 inhabitants. There is a place of worship for Particular Baptists.

BEECHING, or BEAUCHAMP-STOKE, a parish in the hundred of SWANBOROUGH, county of WILTS, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. by S.) from Devizes, containing 156 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Wilts, and diocese of Salisbury, rated in the king's books at £7. 2. 11., and in the patronage of George Wyld Heneage, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Stephen. On opening a tumulus in this parish lately, a considerable quantity of stags' horns and human bones was discovered.

BEEDING, a parish in the hundred of BURBEACH, rape of BRAMBER, county of SUSSEX, comprising Upper and Lower Beeding, and containing 904 inhabitants, of which number, 499 are in the former, 1 mile (E.), and 405 in the latter, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (E.S.E.), from Steyning. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Lewes, and diocese of Chichester, rated in the king's books at £8, and in the patronage of the President and Fellows of Magdalene College, Oxford. The church is dedicated to St. Peter. An Alien priory of Benedictine monks was founded here about 1075, the revenue of which, amounting to £26. 9. 9., was given to the Society of Magdalene College, in the reign of Henry VI. The navigable river Adur runs in the vicinity.

BEEDON, a parish in the hundred of FAIRCROSS, county of BERKS, $2\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. W. by W.) from East Ilsley, containing 313 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Berks, and diocese of Salisbury, rated in the king's books at £6. 10. 10., endowed with £250 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of Sir J. Reade, Bart. The church is dedicated to St. Nicholas.

BEEFORD, a parish in the northern division of the wapentake of HOLDERNESS, East riding of the county of York, comprising the chapelry of Lissett, and the townships of Beeford and Dunnington, and containing 791 inhabitants, of which number, 620 are in the township of Beeford, 9 miles (E. S. E.) from Great Driffield. The living is a rectory, within the peculiar jurisdiction of the manor court of Beeford, rated in the king's books at £22, and in the patronage of the Crown. The church is dedicated to St. Leonard. There are places of worship for Independents and Wesleyan Methodists. A free school here is conducted on the National plan.

BEELEY, a chapelry in the parish of BAKEWELL, hundred of HIGH PEAK, county of DERBY, 4 miles (E. by S.) from Bakewell, containing 350 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, within the peculiar jurisdiction of the Dean and Chapter of Lichfield, endowed with £400 private benefaction, and £1200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Duke of Devonshire. The chapel is dedicated to St. Anne. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. Several small benefactions have been made for the relief of the poor.

BEELSBY, a parish in the wapentake of BRADLEY-HAVERSTOE, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E.) from Caistor, containing 160 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £8. 17. 6., and in the patronage of the Chapter of the Collegiate Church of Southwell. The church is dedicated to St. Andrew.

BEENHAM, a parish in the hundred of READING, county of BERKS, $8\frac{1}{4}$ miles (W. S. W.) from Reading, containing 437 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Berks, and diocese of Salisbury, rated in the king's books at £7. 17., and in the patronage of Mrs. Stevens. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. The navigable river Kennet runs in the vicinity.

BEER, a chapelry in the parish of SEATON, hundred of COLYTON, county of DEVON, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. S. W.) from Colyton, containing 1256 inhabitants. The Cove of Beer is highly favourable for fishing. In 1820, Lord Rolle obtained an act for constructing a pier and improving the harbour. Edward Colston bequeathed land, producing about £500 a year, for maintaining, clothing, and teaching one hundred poor boys of Idstock and Beer. Lady Rolle bequeathed £7000 three per cents. for charitable purposes, from which fund almshouses for twenty-five poor fishermen, and twenty infirm widows, and schools for the instruction of boys and girls, on Dr. Bell's plan, have been erected and endowed.

BEER-ALSTON, a borough in the parish of BEER-FERRIS, hundred of ROBOROUGH, county of DEVON, 14 miles (N.) from Plymouth, and 211 (W. S. W.) from London. The population is returned with the parish. This place, about the year 1295, received the grant of a weekly market and an annual fair, which have been for a considerable time discontinued. It is pleasantly situated within a mile of the navigable river Tamar, but consists only of a few mean houses. Some lead mines, opened here in the reign of Edward I., produced abundance of ore, from which a great quantity of silver was separated; after a long period of disuse they were again worked, but their produce had greatly diminished. A portreeve and other officers are annually chosen at the court leet of the lord of the manor, which is held under a large tree, where also the election of the parliamentary representatives for the borough takes place. The elective franchise was conferred in the 27th of Elizabeth, since which time the borough has returned two members to parliament: the right of election is vested by burgage tenure in those who have land in the borough, and pay an acknowledgment to the lord of the manor, upon whose will their number is entirely dependent: the portreeve is the returning officer. Here was formerly a chapel of ease to the rectory of Beer-Ferris. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists.

BEER-CROCOMBE, a parish in the hundred of ABDICK and BULSTONE, county of SOMERSET, 6 miles (N. W. by N.) from Ilminster, containing 186 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Taunton, and diocese of Bath and Wells, rated in the king's books at £11. 12. 6., and in the patronage of the Earl of Egremont. The church is dedicated to St. James.

BEER-FERRIS, a parish in the hundred of ROBOROUGH, county of DEVON, $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. by W.) from Tavistock, containing, with the borough of Beer-Alston, 2198 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Totness, and diocese of Bath and Wells, rated in the king's books at £24. 1. 0 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of Viscount Valletort. The church is dedicated to St. Andrew. The parish is bounded on the west by the navigable river Tamar, and on the east by the Tavey, which unite at its southern extremity, and fall into the English channel on the western side of Devonport.

BEER-HACKET, a parish in the hundred of SHERBORNE, Sherborne division of the county of DORSET, 5 miles (S. W. by S.) from Sherborne, containing 78 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, within the peculiar jurisdiction of the Dean of Salisbury, rated in the king's books at £6. 2. 8 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of Sir John Munden. The church is dedicated to St. Michael. There is an endowment for the instruction of children.

BEER-REGIS, a market town and parish in the hundred of BEER-REGIS, Blandford (South) division of the county of DORSET, 7 miles (N. W.) from Wareham, and 113 (S. W.) from London, containing, with the tithing of Shitterton, 1080 inhabitants. This place, which is supposed by Dr. Stukeley to have been the Ibernium of Ravennas, derives its name from the Saxon Byrig, and the adjunct from its having been held in royal demesne. Elfrida, after the murder of her step-son, is said to have retired hither to avoid suspicion; and King John, who occasionally made this his residence, granted the inhabitants the privilege of a market, in the seventeenth year of his reign. Edward I. made it a free borough, but it does not appear to have ever returned any members to parliament. A great part of the town was destroyed by fire in 1634: it experienced a similar calamity in 1788, and, in 1817, another destructive fire occurred, in which the parish registers were burnt. The town is pleasantly situated on the small river Beer; the houses, in general, are modern and well built, and the inhabitants are amply supplied with water. The market is on Wednesday: a fair is held, September 18th and the four following days, on Woodbury hill, for horses, horned cattle, sheep, cloth, and cheese. The living, which, in conjunction with Charmouth, formerly constituted the golden prebend in the Cathedral Church of Salisbury, and is now in the peculiar jurisdiction of the Dean of Salisbury, is a vicarage, with the perpetual curacy of Winterbourne-Kingston annexed, rated in the king's books at £25.5., and in the patronage of the Master and Fellows of Balliol College, Oxford. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, is a spacious ancient structure, with a square embattled tower crowned with pinnacles. There are places of worship for Independents and Wesleyan Methodists; that for the Independents has an endowment of £18 per annum. A charity school was founded and endowed by Thomas Williams, Esq., and further endowed by the Rev. Thomas Williams, for two additional scholars. In 1773, the Rev. Henry Fisher bequeathed £100 to this institution: the master has a salary of £10 per annum, with a house and garden. On Woodbury hill, about half a mile from the town, there is a circular camp, comprehending an area of ten acres; and to the west of it are the site of the ancient chapel of Sancta Anchoretta, and a well called Anchoret's well. Dr. John Moreton, Archbishop of Canterbury, and a cardinal; and Dr. Tuberville, Bishop of Exeter; were natives of this place; the former also distinguished himself in the wars, and projected the union, of the houses of York and Lancaster.

BEERHALL, a tything in the parish and hundred of AXMINSTER, county of DEVON, containing 331 inhabitants.

BEES (ST.), a parish in ALLERDALE ward above Derwent, county of CUMBERLAND, comprising the port and market town of Whitehaven, the chapelrys of Ennerdale, Eskdale with Wasdale (including Wasdale-Head), Hensingham, and Netherwasdale, the townships of St. Bees, Kinneyside, Downside-Quarter, Preston-Quarter, Rottington, Tandwith, and Wheddicar, and containing, according to the last census, 19,969 inhabitants (since greatly increased), of which number, 655 are in the township of St. Bees, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. by N.) from Egremont. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Richmond, and diocese of Chester, endowed with £600 private benefaction, £1000 royal bounty, and £1600 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Earl of Lonsdale. The church, dedicated to St. Bega, was formerly the conventual church of a monastery, founded about 650, by Bega, or Begogh, an Irish female, who subsequently received the honour of canonization. The monastery was destroyed by the Danes, and restored, in the reign of Henry I., by William de Meschines, Lord of Copeland, as a cell to the abbey of St. Mary at York: its revenue, at the dissolution, was estimated at £149. 19. 6. The church is cruciform, having a strong tower of early Norman architecture, but the rest of the edifice is in the decorated English style: the nave is used for the celebration of divine service; and the chancel, which had long lain ruinous, was repaired in 1819, and fitted up as a school for divinity, in connexion with a clerical institution, founded by Dr. Law, a late bishop of Chester, for the benefit of young men intended for holy orders, who do not mean to complete their studies at Oxford or Cambridge, and who receive ordination after having studied for a certain period at this place; but they can only enter upon their ministry within the province of York. In addition to this, there is a celebrated free grammar school, founded by letters patent, dated April 24th, 1583, obtained by Edmund Grindall, Archbishop of Canterbury; whereby its management is entrusted to a corporation of seven governors, of whom the Provost of Queen's College, Oxford, and the Rector of Egremont, are always two, the former enjoying the privilege of nominating the master, who chooses an usher. The annual income, arising from land, is £125: of this sum, £50 are paid to the master, and £10 to the usher, but their salaries receive considerable augmentation from entrance-fees and donations at Shrovetide, and the former takes boarders: gratuitous instruction is limited to the classics. The school enjoys the advantage of a fellowship and two scholarships at Queen's College, Oxford, with the privilege of sending a candidate to be examined for one of five exhibitions, founded at the same college by Lady Elizabeth Hastings; a fellowship and three scholarships at Pembroke College, Cambridge; a scholarship of £4 a year at Magdalene College, Cambridge, and, in failure of scholars from the school at Carlisle, eligibility to two exhibitions, founded by Bishop Thomas, at Queen's College, Oxford. A good library is connected with the school. The parish extends for about ten miles along the coast, which in some parts is rocky and precipitous, and contains coal, limestone, and freestone: lead-ore is obtained at Kinneyside, where there are smelting-furnaces, and iron-ore was formerly got in Eskdale. A lighthouse was erected in 1717, on a promontory called St. Bees' Head.

BEESBY, formerly a distinct parish, now united to HAWERBY, in the wapentake of BRADLEY-HAVERSTOE, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, $8\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N.W. by N.) from Louth. The population is returned with Hawerby. The living is a rectory, consolidated with that of Hawerby.

BEESBY in the MARSH, a parish in the Wold division of the hundred of CALCEWORTH, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. by E.) from Alford, containing 132 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £18. 10. 2½., and in the patronage of the Crown. The church is dedicated to St. Andrew.

BEESTON, a hamlet partly in the parish of NORTHILL, and partly in the parish of SANDY, hundred of WIXAMTREE, county of BEDFORD, 8 miles (N.N.W.) from Biggleswade, containing 214 inhabitants.

BEESTON, a township in that part of the parish of BUNBURY which is in the first division of the hundred of EDDISBURY, county palatine of CHESTER;

3½ miles (S. S. W.) from Tarporeley, containing 441 inhabitants. On a rocky eminence, affording a fine view over the Vale Royal, are the massive ruins of Beeston Castle, comprising part of a tower which guarded the principal entrance, flanked by semicircular ones, which formed the inner ward, occupying nearly an acre of ground, and protected by a moat excavated in the solid rock; the outer walls were guarded by eight round towers irregularly placed, and are now, for the greater part, romantically covered with ivy and other foliage: in the outer court is a considerable stone quarry. This fortress, founded by Ranulph de Blundeville, about 1220, was made a royal garrison in the war between Henry III. and the barons; and, in 1643, it was held by a detachment of the parliamentary forces. Having been subsequently taken by the royalists, it was surrendered by them for want of provisions, after a long siege, in 1645, and, early in the following year, was demolished. Courts leet and baron are held here. There is a small endowment for the instruction of poor children. A mineral spring was discovered about fifteen years ago.

BEESTON, a parish in the southern division of the wapentake of Broxtow, county of Nottingham, 3¼ miles (S. W. by W.) from Nottingham, containing 1534 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Nottingham, and diocese of York, rated in the king's books at £4. 15., and in the patronage of the Duke of Devonshire. The church is dedicated to St. John the Baptist. The inhabitants are principally employed in the manufacture of hosiery and lace: a large silk-mill has also recently been erected. A branch of the Nottingham canal, called Beeston Cut, crosses the parish on the south-east, to its junction with the Trent. Considerable portions of a Roman road, uniting with the "old Coventry road" in the adjoining parish of Attenborough, and the remains of an ancient building, are discernible here. There are some wells in the village, the water of which is slightly chalybeate.

BEESTON, a chapelry in the parish of St. Peter, within the liberty of the borough of Leeds, though locally in the wapentake of Morley, West riding of the county of York, 2¼ miles (S. W. by S.) from Leeds, comprising the townships of Beeston-Shaw, Cottingley-Hall, New Hall, Parkside, Royds, and Snickells, and containing 1670 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry and diocese of York, endowed with £210 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Vicar of Leeds. The chapel is a very ancient structure, dedicated to St. Mary. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. Extensive coal mines near the village have been worked since the reign of Charles II.; and there are various establishments connected with the clothing business. An hospital is stated to have anciently existed here, but there are no remains, and even its site is not distinctly known.

BEESTON (ST. ANDREW), a parish in the hundred of TAVERHAM, county of Norfolk, 4½ miles (N. N. E.) from Norwich, containing 69 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £3. 6. 8. W. Boycott, Esq. and others were patrons in 1806. The church is desecrated.

BEESTON (ST. LAWRENCE), a parish in the hundred of TUNSTED, county of Norfolk, 4½ miles (E. by N.) from Coltishall, containing 54 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £6, endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of J. Preston, Esq. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists.

BEESTON (ST. MARY), a parish in the hundred of LAUNDITCH, county of Norfolk, 7 miles (N. E. by E.) from Swaffham, containing, with the parish of Little Bittering, 666 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £13, and in the patronage of the King, as Duke of Lancaster. A sum of money has been left for the instruction of poor children; and there is an almshouse with a small endowment.

BEESTON-REGIS, a parish in the northern division of the hundred of ERPINGHAM, county of Norfolk, 3 miles (W. N. W.) from Cromer, containing 238 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Norfolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £16, and in the patronage of the King, as Duke of Lancaster. The church is dedicated to All Saints. The sea has made considerable encroachments on this part of the coast. Here are some remains of a priory of Augustine canons, founded in the reign of John, by Lady Isabel de Cressey, the revenue of which, at the dissolution, was £50. 6. 4.

BEETHAM, a parish in KENDAL ward, county of WESTMORLAND, comprising the chapelry of Witherslack, and the townships of Beetham, Farleton, Haverbrack, and Methop with Ulpha, and containing 1618 inhabitants, of which number, 830 are in the township of Beetham, 3 miles (N. W. by W.) from Burton in Kendal. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Richmond, and diocese of Chester, rated in the king's books at £13. 7. 4., endowed with £400 private benefaction, and £400 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the King, as Duke of Lancaster. The church is dedicated to St. Michael. This mountainous parish is situated at the south-western extremity of the county, on both sides of the estuary of the river Kent, which is navigable for small craft as far as the hamlet of Storth, and on the shore of which are two wharfs, where slate and other articles are shipped for various ports on the western coast: there is also a ferry across the river. The Kendal and Lancaster canal, the river Belo, and some smaller streams, also intersect the parish, through which a new road was formed between Lancaster and Ulverstone, about 1820. The sands are well adapted for bathing, though the place is not much resorted to for that purpose. There is a manufactory for paper and pasteboard at the village, and limestone abounds within the parish. A grammar school, built about 1663, and rebuilt in 1827, has an endowment of about £40 per annum, arising from land, for the instruction of about fifty boys. Near the school-house stood an ancient chapel, dedicated to St. John, where human bones have frequently been dug up: the site has been converted into a garden. A court leet and baron, with view of frankpledge, are held annually by the lord of the manor. Beetham Hall, formerly a fortified mansion, situated within a spacious park, is now in ruins; and at a short distance to the south are the ruins of Helslack and Arnside towers, which were probably erected to guard the bay of Morecambe, there being remains of similar towers on the opposite shore. At Beetham Mill is a waterfall on the river Belo, near where the new road crosses that river by means of a bridge.

BEETLEY, a parish in the hundred of LAUNDITCH, county of NORFOLK, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. by W.) from East Dereham, containing 356 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £9. 7. 11., and in the patronage of the Rev. C. Munnings. The church is dedicated to St. Mary.

BEGBROOKE, a parish in the hundred of WOORTON, county of OXFORD, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. E. by S.) from Woodstock, containing 102 inhabitants. The living is a rectory not in charge, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford, and in the patronage of Sir G. Dashwood, Bart., for three turns, and the Principal and Fellows of Brasenose College, Oxford, for one. The church is dedicated to St. Michael. A little westward from it is an ancient military work, called Round Castle.

BEIGHTON, a parish in the hundred of SCARSDALE, county of DERBY, $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. S. E.) from Sheffield, containing 856 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Derby, and diocese of Lichfield and Coventry, rated in the king's books at £6. 11. 10 $\frac{1}{2}$., endowed with £10 per annum private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of Earl Manvers. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. In 1666, William Jessop bequeathed land, producing about £14 per annum, for apprenticing poor children of this parish, and other charitable purposes. A school for the instruction of ten children has an endowment of about £5 per annum.

BEIGHTON, a parish in the hundred of WALSHAM, county of NORFOLK, 2 miles (S. W. by S.) from Acle, containing 244 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £13, and in the patronage of R. Fellowes, Esq. The church is dedicated to All Saints.

BEIGHTON, county of SUFFOLK.—See BEYTON.

BEILBY, a chapelry in the parish of HAYTON, Holme-Beacon division of the wapentake of HARTHILL, East riding of the county of YORK, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. by W.) from Pocklington, containing 239 inhabitants. The chapel is dedicated to St. Giles.

BELAUGH, a parish in the southern division of the hundred of ERPINGHAM, county of NORFOLK, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (S. E.) from Coltishall, containing 133 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, annexed to the vicarage of Scottow, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £6. The church is dedicated to St. Peter.

BELBANK, a township in the parish of BEWCASTLE, ESKDALE ward, county of CUMBERLAND, containing 415 inhabitants. There are collieries and limeworks at Oakshaw, a hamlet in this township.

BELBANK, a township in the parish of STAPLETON, ESKDALE ward, county of CUMBERLAND, 9 miles (N.) from Brampton, containing 137 inhabitants.

BELBROUGHTON, a parish in the lower division of the hundred of HALFSHIRE, county of WORCESTER, Vol. I.

5 miles (N. W. by N.) from Bromsgrove, containing 1476 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Worcester, rated in the king's books at £19, and in the patronage of the President and Fellows of St. John's College, Oxford. The church, dedicated to the Holy Trinity, has recently received an additional number of sittings, by means of a grant of £100 from the Incorporated Society for enlarging churches and chapels. Here is an extensive manufactory for scythes, hay knives, &c. Fairs are held on the last Monday in April, and the Monday before St. Luke's day. A sheriff's court, for the recovery of small debts, is held on the third Wednesday in every month. There is an endowment of about £10 per annum for the instruction of poor children. The parish is divided into four yields, viz., those of Belbroughton, Brian's Bell with Moor-Hall Bell, Forfield, and Broomhill.

BELBY, a township in the parish of HOWDEN, wapentake of HOWDENSHERE, East riding of the county of YORK, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (E. by N.) from Howden, containing 49 inhabitants.

BELCHAMP (OTTON), a parish in the hundred of HINCKFORD, county of ESSEX, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. by E.) from Castle-Hedingham, containing 352 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Middlesex, and diocese of London, rated in the king's books at £12, and in the patronage of the Rev. John Cox. The church is dedicated to St. Ethelbert and All Saints. Albright's chapel, formerly in this parish, has been long since demolished.

BELCHAMP (ST. PAUL'S), a parish in the hundred of HINCKFORD, county of ESSEX, 2 miles (S. E. by E.) from Clare, containing 685 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the peculiar jurisdiction and patronage of the Dean and Chapter of St. Paul's, London, rated in the king's books at £14. The church is dedicated to St. Andrew.

BELCHAMP (WALTER), a parish in the hundred of HINCKFORD, county of ESSEX, 3 miles (W.) from Sudbury, containing 608 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, consolidated with that of Bulmer, in the archdeaconry of Middlesex, and diocese of London, rated in the king's books at £6, and endowed with £100 and £6 per annum private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty. The church is dedicated to St. Mary.

BELFORD, a parish partly in ISLANDSHIRE, a detached portion of the county palatine of DURHAM, but chiefly in the northern division of BAMBROUGH ward, county of NORTHUMBERLAND, comprising the market town of Belford, and the townships of Detchant, Easington, Easington-Grange, Elwick, Middleton, and Ross, and containing 1783 inhabitants, of which number, 1208 are in the town of Belford, 49 miles (N. by W.) from Newcastle upon Tyne, and $325\frac{1}{2}$ (N. by W.) from London. This place, though possessing little architectural beauty, has a very pleasing appearance: it is situated on a gentle eminence within two miles of the sea, of which, and of Bambrough castle, it commands a fine view on the north-east; on all other sides it is sheltered by hills, on one of which are seen the ruins of an ancient chapel. The town consists principally of two spacious streets, intersected by a few narrow lanes, badly paved and not lighted; the houses are irregularly built, but the inhabitants are amply supplied with water: the neighbourhood abounds with pleasingly diversified scenery and agreeable walks. Belford is mainly indebted for its rise to the spirited exertions of Mr. Dixon, a former proprietor of the manor, who built several houses on a larger and more convenient scale, cleared away unsightly objects, and established a woollen manufactory, a tannery, &c. His father had previously procured the privilege of holding a market and fairs: the market is on Tuesday, and is noted for corn, much of which is sold for exportation; and the fairs are on the Tuesday before Whitsuntide, and August 23rd. The parish abounds with coal, limestone, and freestone; and considerable quantities of cockles, called Budle cockles, are got upon the coast. The town is within the jurisdiction of the county magistrates, and constables are annually appointed for the several townships. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Northumberland, and diocese of Durham, endowed with £800 private benefaction, £600 royal bounty, and £1100 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of William Clarke, Esq., as lord of the manor. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a handsome structure, erected, in 1700, at the north-western extremity of the town. There are places of worship for Anti-burghers, Wesleyan Methodists, and Presbyterians. A charity school is supported by subscription. About a mile to the south-west of the town is a quadrilateral intrenchment, having an entrance on the north-east, and defended by a wide ditch and a double rampart: it is by some supposed to have been a strong hold, or place of security from the incursions of the Scots, during the border wars; by others it is thought to be of Danish origin. The races, formerly held at Beadnell, have been removed hither, where a course has just been completed for holding them. There are a few mineral springs in the parish.

BELGRAVE, a parish comprising the chapelry of South Thurnaston in the eastern, and the chapelry of Birstall in the western, division of the hundred of Goscote, county of LEICESTER, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (N. N. E.) from Leicester, and containing 1904 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Leicester, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £13. 6. 8., endowed with £8 per annum and £600 private benefaction, £400 royal bounty, and £1000 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Bishop of Lichfield and Coventry. The church is dedicated to St. Peter. This parish is in the honour of Tutbury, duchy of Lancaster, and within the jurisdiction of a court of pleas held at Tutbury every third Tuesday, for the recovery of debts under 40s. The river Soar, or Leicester canal, which is navigable for barges, and over which there is a bridge, forms a junction with the Melton-Mowbray Navigation, by means of an artificial cut, immediately after its course through the parish. Traces of the Roman Fosse-way are visible in the vicinity. Belgrave gives the title of viscount to Earl Grosvenor.

BELLASIS, a township in the parish of STANNINGTON, western division of CASTLE ward, county of NORTHUMBERLAND, 6 miles (S. by E.) from Morpeth. The population is returned with the parish.

BELLASIZE, a township in the parish of EASTRINGTON, wapentake of HOWDENSHIRE, East riding of the county of YORK, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. by S.) from Howden, containing 197 inhabitants.

BELLCHALWELL, a parish forming, with the parishes of Shillingstone and Turnworth, a detached portion of that part of the hundred of CRANBORNE, which is in the Shaaton (West) division, being locally in the hundred of Pimperne, Blandford (North) division of the county of DORSET, 8 miles (W. N. W.) from Blandford-Forum, containing 192 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, united, in 1776, to the rectory of Fifehead-Neville, in the archdeaconry of Dorset, and diocese of Bristol, rated in the king's books at £7. 15.

BELLEAU, a parish in the Marsh division of the hundred of CALCEWORTH, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, 5 miles (N. W. by W.) from Alford, containing 88 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, to which the vicarage of Aby was united in 1732, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £13. 3. 9., and in the patronage of Lord Gwydir. The church is dedicated to St. John the Baptist. The name (Belle eau) is derived from a fine stream of water, which issues from a chalk hill with considerable force.

BELLERBY, a chapelry in the parish of SPENNI-THORN, western division of the wapentake of HANG, North riding of the county of YORK, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (N.) from Leyburn, containing 407 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Richmond, and diocese of Chester, endowed with £400 private benefaction, and £800 royal bounty, and in the patronage of W. Chaytor, Esq.

BELLESTER, a township in the parish of HALTWHISTLE, western division of TINDALE ward, county of NORTHUMBERLAND, 16 miles (W. by S.) from Hexham, containing 118 inhabitants. On the bank of the South Tyne are the ruins of an ancient castle, once belonging to the Blenkinsop family.

BELLINGHAM, a parish in the north-western division of TINDALE ward, county of NORTHUMBERLAND, comprising the market town of Bellingham, and the townships of East Charlton, West Charlton, Leemailing, the Nook, and Tarretburn, and containing 1396 inhabitants, of which number, 404 are in the town of Bellingham, 30 miles (W. N. W.) from Newcastle upon Tyne, and 298 (N. N. W.) from London. This place, from the remains of several camps apparently of Roman origin, is supposed to have been occupied by that people; but little of its early history is recorded, though the neighbourhood abounds with circular intrenchments, and the remains of British fortifications. The lords de Bellingham are said to have had a castle, or baronial seat, here, erected on an eminence still called Hall Field: In the reigns of Richard II. and Henry IV., the manor and castle were in the possession of Richard de Bellingham; the estate afterwards became the property of the Earl of Derwentwater, upon whose attainder it was given to the Governors of Greenwich Hospital. The town is pleasantly situated on the northern bank of the North Tyne, between that river and a stream called Hareshaw-burn, over which, near the eastern extremity of the town, a good stone bridge was erected in 1826. The rocks, on each side of the burn, rise precipitously to the height of one hundred feet, and the water at Hareshaw-linn has a perpendicular fall of thirty feet. In the parish there are from seven to eight thousand acres of moor-land, abounding with grouse and other game. A book club was established in the town in 1809. The market is on Saturday: a fair is held on the first Saturday after September 15th, and there are statute fairs on the Saturdays before May 12th and November 12th. This parish was formerly part of the extensive parish of Simonburn, which was divided into six distinct parishes by act of parliament obtained in 1811. The living is a rectory not in charge, in the archdeaconry of Northumberland, and diocese of Durham, and in the patronage of the Governors of Greenwich Hospital. The church, dedicated to St. Cuthbert, is a small ancient structure, with a finely groined roof of stone; the chancel contains many mural tablets and monuments: the churchyard, occupying an elevated situation, forms a beautiful terrace overlooking the river. There is a place of worship for Seceders from the Scottish church, besides a Roman Catholic chapel. A school was endowed here with £200, by Mrs. Reed of Troughhead, with which sum, and a legacy of £40 left by Mr. John Charlton, in 1732, the third part of a farm was purchased, which would have now produced £50 per annum, but the Reeds of Chipchase having purchased the whole estate, sold it without any reserve, and the trustees having lost their deeds, the school has been deprived of the endowment.

BELPER, a market town and chapelry in the parish of DUFFIELD, hundred of APPLETREE, county of DERBY, 8 miles (N.) from Derby, and 134 (N.N.W.) from London, containing 7235 inhabitants. This place, at which was formerly a park and hunting seat belonging to John of Gaunt, Duke of Lancaster, was an inconsiderable village, inhabited principally by nailers, till the year 1777, when the cotton manufacture was introduced by Messrs. Strutt, since which time it has risen into a considerable town. It is pleasantly situated on the river Derwent, over which a handsome stone bridge of three arches has been recently erected, the former bridge, said to have been built by John of Gaunt, having been destroyed, in 1795, by a great flood. The town, consisting of several streets, is partially paved, lighted with gas, and amply supplied with water. There are five mills for the spinning of cotton, all belonging to Messrs. Strutt, who make their own machinery on the spot; two of these, and also a bleaching mill, are about a mile and a half lower down the river, over which the proprietors have built a neat stone bridge of two arches, for their own accommodation. Here is one of the largest establishments in the kingdom for silk and cotton hose, in which upwards of four thousand persons are employed, principally residing in the surrounding villages: the nails made here, especially those for the shoeing of horses, are much in demand, from the superiority of the rod iron made at Alderwasley, four miles distant, arising from the peculiar quality of the coal in that neighbourhood. The Cromford canal passes within two miles of the town, and the High Peak railway within six. The market is on Saturday: the fairs are, May 12th and October 31st, for horned cattle, sheep, and horses. The county magistrates hold a petty session for the district every Saturday: courts for the manor are held twice in the year, under the steward, at one of which constables and other officers are appointed. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Derby, and diocese of Lichfield and Coventry, endowed with £200 private benefaction, £800 royal bounty, and £2300 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Vicar of Duffield. The chapel, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, was erected in 1824, at an expense of upwards of £12,000, which was partly defrayed by a parliamentary grant: it is a handsome structure in the decorated style of English architecture, with a lofty tower, and contains one thousand eight hundred and four sittings, of which one thousand two hundred and four are free. The old chapel, built by John of Gaunt, the burial-ground of which is still used, is now appropriated to the use of a Sunday school. There are places of worship for Baptists, Independents, Wesleyan Methodists, and Unitarians. A Lancasterian school is supported by the proprietors of the cotton-works, for the benefit of the children belonging to the factory. Henry Smith, Esq. endowed two almshouses for two persons, and bequeathed an estate producing £30 per annum, directing the rental to be divided equally between the minister and the poor of Belper: two other almshouses were endowed by James Sims, with £12 per annum. In a field in the neighbourhood may still be traced the massive foundations of the mansion in which John of Gaunt resided.

BELSAY, a township in that part of the parish of BOLAM, which is in the north-eastern division of TINDALE ward, county of NORTHUMBERLAND, 15 miles (N.W.) from Newcastle upon Tyne, containing 327 inhabitants. There are considerable remains of an ancient castle, occupying an elevated site, above which is a stone cross. Belsay Hall is a splendid edifice of Grecian architecture, but the entire design has not been completed.

BELSHFORD, a parish in the northern division of the wapentake of GARTREE, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, 4½ miles (N.E. by N.) from Horncastle, containing 490 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £18. 6. 8., and in the patronage of the Crown. The church is dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul. The parish abounds with excellent limestone.

BELSTEAD, a parish in the hundred of SAMFORD, county of SUFFOLK, 3¼ miles (S.W. by W.) from Ipswich, containing 255 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Suffolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £7. 6. 0½., and in the patronage of Ambrose Steward, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Mary.

BELSTONE, a parish in the hundred of BLACK TORRINGTON, county of DEVON, 3 miles (E.S.E.) from Oakhampton, containing 157 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Totness, and diocese of Exeter, rated in the king's books at £9. 0. 1., endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £300 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Rev. John Hole. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, contains the remains of a cucking stool. The rivers Ockment and Taw, having their sources in Dartmoor, flow through the parish, in which several copper mines were formerly worked.

BELTON, a parish in the western division of the hundred of GOSCORE, county of LEICESTER, 5 miles (S.W. by S.) from Kegworth, containing, with the extraparochial liberty of Grace-Dieu, 664 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Leicester, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £8. 18. 4., and in the patronage of the Marquis of Hastings. The church is dedicated to St. John the Baptist. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. A considerable fair for horses is held here annually, on the Monday next after Trinity week. A convent for nuns of the order of St. Augustine was founded at Grace-Dieu, in the reign of Henry III., the revenue of which, at the dissolution, was £101. 8. 2½. Sir John Beaumont, author of a poem entitled "Bosworth Field," brother of Francis Beaumont, the celebrated dramatist, was born at Grace-Dieu, in 1582.

BELTON, a parish in the soke of GRANTHAM, parts of KESTIVEN, county of LINCOLN, 2½ miles (N. N. E.) from Grantham, containing 178 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £12. 3. 6½., and in the patronage of Earl Brownlow. The church is dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul. Here is an almshouse for six poor persons. Belton gives the title of baron to Earl Brownlow.

BELTON, a parish in the western division of the wapentake of MANLEY, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, 1½ mile (N.) from Epworth, containing 1437 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Stow, and diocese of Lincoln, and in the patronage of the Mayor and Corporation of Lincoln. The church is dedicated to All Saints. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists.

BELTON, a parish in the soke of OAKHAM, county of RUTLAND, 4 miles (W. N. W.) from Uppingham, containing, with Gunthorpe Lodge, 401 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, annexed to the rectory of Wardley, in the archdeaconry of Northampton, and diocese of Peterborough. The church is dedicated to St. Peter. A school for the instruction of twelve poor children is endowed with about £10 per annum.

BELTON, a parish in the hundred of MUTFORD and LOTHINGLAND, county of SUFFOLK, 4½ miles (S. W.) from Great Yarmouth, containing 385 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Suffolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £17. 15., and in the patronage of the Bishop of Norwich. The church is dedicated to All Saints. The navigable river Waveney forms the western boundary of the parish.

BELVOIR, an extra-parochial liberty, partly in the soke of GRANTHAM, parts of KESTIVEN, county of LINCOLN, but chiefly in the hundred of FRAMLAND, county of LEICESTER, 7 miles (W. by S.) from Grantham, containing 88 inhabitants. Belvoir castle, the magnificent seat of the Duke of Rutland, stands on the site of an ancient fortress, said to have been built, soon after the Conquest, near which a Benedictine priory was founded, in the reign of William I., the revenue of which, at the dissolution, was £135.

BEMERTON, a parish in the hundred of BRANCH and DOLE, county of WILTS, 2 miles (W. by N.) from Salisbury. The population is returned with Fugglestone. The living is a rectory, united to that of Fugglestone, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Salisbury. The church is dedicated to St. Andrew. This place is remarkable for the celebrity of three of its rectors,—George Herbert, commonly called "the Divine," who died in 1635; John Norris, a metaphysical writer, who died in 1711; and Archdeacon Coxe, the traveller and historian, who died in 1828: the first greatly repaired the church, and rebuilt the parsonage-house, at his own expense.

BEMPTON, a parish in the wapentake of DICKERING, East riding of the county of YORK, 3½ miles (N. N. E.) from Bridlington, containing 231 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of the East riding, and diocese of York, endowed with £800 royal bounty, and in the patronage of John Broadley, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Michael. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists.

BENACRE, county of SUFFOLK.—See BINACRE.

BENAGER, county of SOMERSET.—See BINEGAR.

BENEFIELD, a parish in the hundred of POLEBROOK, county of NORTHAMPTON, 3½ miles (W.) from Oundle, containing 444 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Northampton, and diocese of Peterborough, rated in the king's books at £35. 9. 7., and in the patronage of J. Watts Russell, Esq. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, has been lately repaired at the expense of Mr. Russell: near it are the site and moat of an old castle. The parochial school is endowed with £10 per annum. About a furlong to the west of the village are nine of those cavities in the earth, commonly called "Swallows," into which the waters of the land floods flow and disappear.

BENENDEN, a parish in the hundred of ROLVENDEN, lathe of SCRAY, county of KENT, 3½ miles (S. E.) from Cranbrooke, containing 1746 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Canterbury, rated in the king's books at £17. 12. 6., endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £1300 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of T. L. Hodges, Esq. The church, dedicated to St. George, was built in 1672, the former edifice having been damaged by lightning. Fairs for horses and horned cattle are held on May 15th and August 4th. Edward Gibbon, in 1602, founded a school, which has been subsequently endowed with property producing £114 per annum. There is another school with a small endowment, the bequest of Thomas Buckland, in 1786; and there are endowments for the instruction of girls.

BENFIELD-SIDE, a township in that part of the parish of LANCHESTER which is in the western division of CHESTER ward, county palatine of DURHAM, 14 miles (N. W. by N.) from Durham, containing 341 inhabitants.

BENFLEET (NORTH), a parish in the hundred of BARSTABLE, county of ESSEX, 3½ miles (W.) from Rayleigh, containing 303 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Essex, and diocese of London, rated in the king's books at £16, and in the patronage of the Rev. C. R. Rowlatt. The church, dedicated to All Saints, has a small wooden steeple. Canvey island partly belongs to this parish.

BENFLEET (SOUTH), a parish in the hundred of BARSTABLE, county of ESSEX, 4 miles (S. W. by S.) from Rayleigh, containing 515 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Essex, and diocese of London, rated in the king's books at £16. 5. 5., and in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Westminster. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. King Alfred, in the year 894, took and destroyed a castle here, built by the celebrated Danish pirate Hesting. The creek called Hadleigh Rey, or Bay, from its passing by Hadleigh, runs up between this place and Canvey island, and is navigable for small craft; and the other creeks, entering from the Thames round Benfleet, are noted for producing good oysters.

BENGEO, a parish in the hundred and county of HERTFORD, 1 mile (N. N. E.) from Hertford, containing 731 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Huntingdon, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £7. 8. 6½., and in the patronage of T. H. Byde, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Leonard.

BENGWORTH (ST. PETER), a parish within the jurisdiction of the borough of EVESHAM, locally in the lower division of the hundred of Blackenhurst, county of WORCESTER, ¼ a mile (S. S. E.) from Evesham, containing 853 inhabitants. It is situated on the southern side of the navigable river Avon, opposite the town of Evesham, with which it was incorporated in the reign of James I. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the peculiar jurisdiction of the Bishop of Worcester, rated in the king's books at £7. 10. 10., endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £400 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Rev. W. Alies. The church, which has a handsome tower and spire, is dedicated to St. Peter: it stands on the site of a castle which belonged to the abbey of Evesham, and which was destroyed by William D'Andeville, one of the abbots, who recovered it from William de Beauchamp, hereditary sheriff of the county, by whom it had been held, in contravention of the abbot's rights. John Deacle, alderman of London, who was born here, left £2000 for the endowment of a free school for thirty boys, who are clothed, educated, and apprenticed. See EVESHAM.

BENHALL, a parish in the hundred of PLOMESGATE, county of SUFFOLK, 2 miles (W. by S.) from Saxmundham, containing 710 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Suffolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £7. 1. 3., and in the patronage of Edward Holland, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. Sir Edward Duke, in 1731, bequeathed property producing about £25 per annum, for the endowment of a free school.

BENHAM, a tything in that part of the parish of SPEEN which is in the hundred of KINTBURY-EAGLE, county of BERKS, 3 miles (W.) from Speenhamland, containing 380 inhabitants.

BENNINGBROUGH, a township in the parish of NEWTON upon OUZE, wapentake of BULMER, North riding of the county of YORK, 7¼ miles (N. W.) from York, containing 99 inhabitants.

BENNINGHOLME, a joint township with Grange, in that part of the parish of SWINE which is in the middle division of the wapentake of HOLDERNESS, East riding of the county of YORK, 9¼ miles (E. by S.) from Beverley, containing, with Grange, 97 inhabitants.

BENNINGTON, a parish in the hundred of BROADWATER, county of HERTFORD, 5½ miles (E. S. E.) from Stevenage, containing 658 inhabitants. The living is a rectory in the archdeaconry of Huntingdon, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £19, and in the patronage of George Procter, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Peter. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. On an intrenched eminence on the western side of the church anciently stood a castle. The kings of Mercia are stated to have had a palace here: several ancient coins have been found in the parish.

BENNINGTON, a parish (formerly a market town) in the wapentake of SKIRBECK, parts of HOLLAND, county of LINCOLN, 5 miles (E. N. E.) from Boston, containing 406 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £33. 8. 11½., and in the patronage of Viscount Goderich. The church is dedicated to All Saints. A free school is endowed with about £60 per annum.

BENNINGTON (LONG), a parish in the wapentake of LOVEDEN, parts of KESTEVEN, county of LINCOLN, 7 miles (N. W.) from Grantham, containing 891 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, with the perpetual curacy of Foston annexed, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £20. 1. 10., and in the patronage of the King, as Duke of Lancaster. The church is dedicated to All Saints. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. The river Witham forms the north-eastern boundary of the parish, in which there is a mineral spring strongly impregnated with iron. An Alien priory of Cistercian monks was founded here about 1175, the revenue of which, in the reign of Richard II., was £50 per annum.

BENNIWORTH, a parish in the eastern division of the wapentake of WRAGGOE, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, 6½ miles (E. N. E.) from Wragby, containing 346 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £23. 8. 6½., and in the patronage of R. Ainslie, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Julian.

BENRIDGE, a joint township with Kirkley and Cartermpoor (but formerly distinct), in the parish of PONTELAND, western division of CASTLE ward, county of NORTHUMBERLAND, 9½ miles (N. W. by N.) from Newcastle upon Tyne. The population is returned with Kirkley.

BENRIDGE, a township in that part of the parish of MITFORD which is in the western division of MORPETH ward, county of NORTHUMBERLAND, 2 miles (W. N. W.) from Morpeth, containing 57 inhabitants.

BENSINGTON, or BENSON, a parish partly in the hundred of DORCHESTER, but chiefly in that of EWELME, county of OXFORD, 11 miles (N. W. by N.) from Henley upon Thames, containing, with the hamlets of Crowmarsh-Battle and Fifield, 961 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, within the jurisdiction of the peculiar court of Dorchester, endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Dean and Canons of Christ Church, Oxford. The church is dedicated to St. Helen. This ancient place is reported to have been taken from the Britons, about 572, by Ceawlin, third king of the West Saxons, whose successors retained it for about two hundred years, until it was surrendered to Offa, King of Mercia. The Roman way, leading from Alchester to Wallingford crossed the Thames here. A royal palace anciently stood in the vicinity.

BENTFIELD, a hamlet in that part of the parish of STANSTED-MOUNTFITCHET which is in the hundred of CLAVERING, county of ESSEX, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (N. W. by N.) from Stansted-Mountfitchet, containing 513 inhabitants.

BENTHAL, a township in the parish of ABBERBURY, hundred of FORD, county of SALOP. The population is returned with Shrawardine.

BENTHALL, a parish within the liberties of the borough of WENLOCK, county of SALOP, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. E. by N.) from Much Wenlock, containing 554 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Salop, and diocese of Hereford, endowed with £800 royal bounty, and £1200 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Vicar of Much Wenlock. The church is dedicated to St. Bartholomew. The population are principally employed in the potteries established here. The navigable river Severn flows past this place.

BENTHAM, a parish in the western division of the wapentake of STAINCLIFFE and EWXCROSS, West riding of the county of YORK, comprising the chapelry of Ingletton, and the townships of Bentham and Langcliffe, and containing 3624 inhabitants, of which number, 2102 are in the township of Bentham, 12 miles (W. N. W.) from Settle. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Richmond, and diocese of Chester, rated in the king's books at £35. 7. 8 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of T. L. Parker, Esq. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, has lately received an addition of two hundred and eighteen sittings, one hundred and twenty-seven of which are free, the Incorporated Society for the enlargement of churches and chapels having granted £100 towards defraying the expense. Here are mills for the spinning of flax and the manufacture of linen; there are also some potteries in the parish. William Collingwood, in 1726, bequeathed property for the endowment of a free school for boys in upper Bentham, and an hospital for six men and six women, which was vested in Trustees under a decree of the Court of Chancery, in 1733, and now produces £240 per annum; some trifling donations have since been made to the school.

BENTLEY, a parish and liberty in the hundred of BASINGSTOKE, Basingstoke division of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, 4 miles (W. S. W.) from Farnham, containing 690 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Winchester, endowed with £600 private benefaction, £400 royal bounty, and £800 parliamentary grant. J. Andrews and others were patrons in 1820. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. Bentley is within the jurisdiction of the Cheyney Court held at Winchester every Thursday, for the recovery of debts to any amount.

BENTLEY, a liberty in the parish of ALDRIDGE, southern division of the hundred of OFFLOW, county of STAFFORD, $1\frac{1}{4}$ mile (W. by N.) from Walsall, containing 99 inhabitants.

BENTLEY, a parish in the hundred of SAMFORD, county of SUFFOLK, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. W.) from Ipswich, containing 366 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Suffolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £6. 2. 11., and in the patronage of W. Deane, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Mary.

BENTLEY, a chapelry in the parish of SHUSTOCK, Atherstone division of the hundred of HEMLINGFORD, county of WARWICK, 3 miles (S. W.) from Atherstone, containing 246 inhabitants.

BENTLEY, a township in the parish of ARKSEY, northern division of the wapentake of STRAFFORTH and TICKHILL, West riding of the county of YORK, 2 miles (N. W. by N.) from Doncaster. The population is returned with the parish. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists.

BENTLEY (FENNY), a parish in the hundred of WIRKSWORTH, county of DERBY, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. by W.) from Ashbourn, containing 242 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Derby, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £6. 12. 10., and in the patronage of the Dean of Lincoln. The church, dedicated to St. Mary Magdalene, is a small structure with a low tower.

BENTLEY (GREAT), a parish in the hundred of TENDRING, county of ESSEX, 8 miles (E. S. E.) from Colchester, containing 794 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Colchester, and diocese of London, rated in the king's books at £7, endowed with £400 private benefaction, and £400 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Bishop of London. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. The parochial school is endowed with about £15 per annum.

BENTLEY (HUNGRY), a liberty in the parish of LONGFORD, hundred of APPLETREE, county of DERBY, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S.) from Ashbourn, containing 88 inhabitants. Here was formerly a chapel, long since demolished.

BENTLEY (LITTLE), a parish in the hundred of TENDRING, county of ESSEX, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. by E.) from Manningtree, containing 402 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Colchester, and diocese of London, rated in the king's books at £13, and in the patronage of Robert Foot, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists.

BENTON (LONG), a parish in the eastern division of CASTLE ward, county of NORTHUMBERLAND, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. E. by N.) from Newcastle upon Tyne, comprising the townships of Long Benton, Killingworth, Walker, and Weetsted, and containing 5547 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Northumberland, and diocese of Durham, rated in the king's books at £3. 1. 3., and in the patronage of the Master and Fellows of Balliol College, Oxford. The church, dedicated to St. Bartholomew, is a neat unadorned edifice, with a tower and spire; it was rebuilt, except the chancel, in 1791. This parish is bounded on the south by the river Tyne, on the banks of which are various extensive manufactories and coal wharfs: it contains a very great quantity of coal, and there are some stone quarries. A parochial school-room, and a house for the master, were built some years ago, at an expense of £205, which was partly raised by subscription. The Roman wall of Severus passed through the parish, prior to its immediate termination at Legedunum, in the adjoining parish of Wallsend.

BENTWORTH, a parish in the hundred of ODHAM, Basingstoke division of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles (W.) from Alton, containing 548 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Winchester, rated in the king's books at £14. 10. 5., and in the patronage of R. Matthews, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Mary.

BENWELL, a township in that part of the parish of St. JOHN which is in the western division of CASTLE ward, county of NORTHUMBERLAND, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W.) from Newcastle upon Tyne, containing 1296 inhabitants. It is situated on the north bank of the river Tyne, and contains a great quantity of coal. In the sixteenth century, a vein of coal accidentally caught fire in the vicinity, and continued to burn upwards of thirty years, bursting out, in various places, like a volcano. It is in contemplation to erect a chapel here. Lying at a short distance southward from the wall of Severus, the site is supposed to have been occupied by the Roman station, Condercum. A building called the Old Tower was the summer residence of the priors of Tyne-mouth, who had a small chapel here, the site of the burial-ground of which is marked by a few tombstones.

BENWICK, a chapelry in the parish of DODDINGTON, northern division of the hundred of WITCHFORD, Isle of ELY, county of CAMBRIDGE, $8\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S.W.) from March, containing 514 inhabitants. The chapel is dedicated to St. James.

BEOLEY, a parish in the upper division of the hundred of PERSHORE, county of WORCESTER, $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. by S.) from Bromsgrove, containing 640 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Worcester, rated in the king's books at £7. 16. 10 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of W. Holmes, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Leonard. Here are some remains of an ancient castle, which belonged successively to the noble families of Mortimer, Beauchamp, and Holland. In the reign of Charles I. the manor was the property of Ralph Sheldon, a distinguished royalist, whose mansion was burnt, to prevent its falling into the possession of the parliamentarians.

BEPTON, a parish in the hundred of EASEBOURNE, rape of CHICHESTER, county of SUSSEX, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S.W.) from Midhurst, containing 140 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Chichester, rated in the king's books at £8, and in the patronage of W. S. Poyntz, Esq.

BERDON, a parish in the hundred of CLAVERING, county of ESSEX, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N.W.) from Stansted-Mountfitchet, containing 338 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Colchester, and diocese of London, and in the patronage of the Governors of Christ's Hospital. The church is dedicated to St. Nicholas. The river Stort runs through the parish. A priory of Augustine canons was founded here in the reign of Henry III., the revenue of which at the dissolution, was £35. 5. 1 $\frac{1}{2}$.. The Rev. Joseph Mede, a learned commentator on the Book of Revelations, was born here, in 1586.

BERE-CHURCH, a parish within the liberties of the borough of COLCHESTER, county of ESSEX, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. by W.) from Colchester, containing 122 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Colchester, and diocese of London, endowed with £600 private benefaction, and £800 royal bounty, and in the patronage of J. Bawtree, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Michael.

BERGHOLT (EAST), a parish in the hundred of SAMFORD, county of SUFFOLK, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N.W.) from Manningtree, containing 1246 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to the rectory of Brantham, in the archdeaconry of Suffolk, and diocese of Norwich. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. There is a place of worship for Independents. The navigable river Stour flows along the southern side of the parish. Lettice Dykes, in 1589, gave property, now producing about £40 per annum, to endow a free school, which was built by subscription, on land given by Edward Lamb, in 1594.

BERGHOLT (WEST), a parish in the Colchester division of the hundred of LEXDEN, county of ESSEX, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N.W.) from Colchester, containing 694 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Colchester, and diocese of London, rated in the king's books at £10, and in the patronage of William Fisher, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists.

BERKELEY, a market town and parish in the upper division of the hundred of BERKELEY, county of GLOUCESTER, 17 miles (S.W.) from Gloucester, and 114 (W. by N.) from London, comprising the chapelry of Stone, the tythings of Alkington, Hinton, and Ham, and the hamlets of Bradstone and Hamfallow, and containing 3835 inhabitants. This place is supposed to have been a British town in the reign of Alectus, who, as the successor of Carausius, assumed the imperial purple in Britain towards the close of the third century. It was a place of considerable importance in the time of the Saxons, and is said to have had a religious establishment, and probably a castle, prior to the Conquest, but little of their history is recorded. Henry I. visited this place in 1121, where he remained during Easter; and in the reign of Henry II., the castle, which had been erected by Roger de Berkeley, was considerably enlarged by Robert Fitz-Harding, to whom the king gave the manor (which is divided into seven considerable tythings), and who thereupon assumed the title of Baron de Berkeley. The castle, which received various additions from its successive proprietors, became one of the principal baronial seats in the country, and was connected with many transactions of intense political interest, the most important of which was the inhuman murder of the misguided king, Edward II., who was detained here in confinement under the nominal custody of the earl. During the civil war in the reign of Charles I., it was garrisoned for the king, but after a siege of nine days, in which it sustained considerable damage, it was surrendered to the parliamentarians. The principal remains of the ancient building are the keep, a fine specimen of Norman military architecture, flanked by three semicircular towers, and a square tower of later date, in a dark room in the upper part of which the inhuman murder was perpetrated. The entrance is under a massive arched portal, richly ornamented with sculpture: it occupies an area which is nearly circular, and is surrounded with a moat: part of it has been modernized, and is now the residence of Col. Berkeley, who enjoys the estate, but not the title. The town is situated on a gentle eminence in the beautiful Vale of Berkeley, at the distance of a mile from the river Severn, and consists principally of one street; the houses are indifferently built, but the inhabitants are well supplied with water. It was once of greater extent than it is at present; the diversion of the turn-pike road from Gloucester to Bristol, which formerly passed through it, is supposed to have contributed to its decay. The trade is principally in timber, corn, malt, and cheese, for which last the neighbourhood is celebrated: iron-ore has been found in the vicinity, and there are appearances of some works having been formerly carried on. The Berkeley and Gloucester canal, navigable for vessels of four hundred tons' burden, passes to the north of the town, and the river Severn bounds it on the west. The market is on Thursday, but it has considerably declined of late years; the fairs are on May 14th and December 1st. The town, which was a borough in the reign of Edward I., having lost its charter of incorporation, is within the jurisdiction of the county magistrates, who hold petty sessions here for the district: a mayor is still annually elected, but the office is merely nominal; constables and other officers are appointed at the court leet of the lord of the manor, and a court for the recovery of small debts is held every third week.

The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Gloucester, rated in the king's books at £32. 15. 7½., and in the patronage of Col. Berkeley. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a spacious structure, consisting of a nave, aisles, and chancel, of considerable dimensions, partly of later Norman, and partly in the early style of English, architecture: the tower, which is detached, has been rebuilt within the last century. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. The free school was founded, in 1696, by Mr. Samuel Thurner, who endowed it with lands producing £16. 5. per annum, which has received an augmentation of land producing £17 per annum, purchased with a bequest by Mr. John Smith, amounting in the whole to £33. 5. per annum, for which the master teaches thirty-nine boys. In 1626, John Attwood left by will, for the benefit of the poor inhabitants of Berkeley, lands of the value of nearly £20 per annum; and various smaller sums have been given and bequeathed at different times by other individuals, for a like purpose. Edward Jenner, M.D. and F.R.S., who introduced the practice of vaccination, was born here in 1742, and died of apoplexy in 1823.

BERKELEY, a parish in the hundred of FROME, county of SOMERSET, 2½ miles (E. N. E.) from Frome, containing 550 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Wells, and diocese of Bath and Wells, rated in the king's books at £7. 9. 7., and in the patronage of the Rev. J. M. Rogers. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, was built in 1751.

BERKESWELL, a parish in the Solihull division of the hundred of HEMLINGFORD, county of WARWICK, 6½ miles (W. by N.) from Coventry, containing 1468 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, with the perpetual curacy of Baretow annexed, in the archdeaconry of Coventry, and diocese of Lichfield and Coventry, rated in the king's books at £14. 12. 6., and in the patronage of the Disbrowe family. The church is dedicated to St. John the Baptist. There is an endowment in land, amounting to about £70 per annum, being the produce of various benefactions, for the support of a school at Berkeswell, and for various other charitable purposes.

BERKHAMPSTEAD (GREAT, or ST. PETER'S), a market town and parish in the hundred of DACORUM, county of HERTFORD, 25½ miles (W. by S.) from Hertford, and 26 (N. W. by W.) from London, on the road to Holyhead, containing 2310 inhabitants. The Saxon name of this place, Berghamstede, is derived from its situation, either on a hill, or near a fortress, which latter, from the site of the present town, appears to be the more probable. It is a town of considerable antiquity, the kings of Mercia having had a castle here, to which circumstance its early growth and subsequent importance may be attributed. According to Spelman, Wihtried, King of Kent, assisted at a council held here, in 697. At the time of the Conquest, William, on his arrival at this place, was met by Stigand, Archbishop of Canterbury, who tendered his submission; but on leaving Berkhamstead, his march was greatly obstructed by the opposition of Frederick, abbot of St. Albans, who caused the roads to be blocked up, by cutting down the trees, and, on his arrival at St. Albans, exacted from him an oath that he would observe the ancient laws of the realm, particularly those of Edward the Confessor. Robert, Earl of Moreton, to whom the Conqueror gave this town, built a castle here, which was subsequently taken from his son William, who had rebelled against Henry I., and by that monarch's order rased to the ground. Henry II. held his court here for some time, and conferred many privileges on the town. The castle was rebuilt in the reign of John, and soon after besieged by Lewis, Dauphin of France, who had come over to assist the barons that were in arms against the king. In the 11th of Edward III., Berkhamstead sent two representatives to the great council at Westminster. James I., who selected this place as a nursery for his children, granted the inhabitants a charter of incorporation; but they were so impoverished during the civil war in the reign of his son Charles I., that they were unable to maintain their privileges, whereby the charter became forfeited. The town is pleasantly situated in a deep valley, on the south-western bank of the river Bulbourne, and consists of two streets intersecting at right angles, the principal of which, nearly a mile in length, contains several handsome houses: the air is highly salubrious, and the inhabitants are amply supplied with water. Assemblies are held regularly during the season. The manufacture of wooden bowls, spoons, and other articles of a like kind, formerly prevailed, but it is on the decline; and the making of lace, which was also carried on extensively, has given place to the platting of straw, in which, at present, the female part of the population are principally employed. The Grand Junction canal, which passes by the town, affords an extensive line of inland navigation. The market is on Saturday; the market-house is an ancient building in the centre of the town. Fairs are held on Shrove-Tuesday and Whit-Monday, and there is also a statute fair at Michaelmas. The county magistrates hold a petty session on the first and third Tuesdays in every month; and courts leet for the honour of Berkhamstead, which is part of the duchy of Cornwall, are held at Whitsuntide and Michaelmas. The prison is used as a house of correction, and for the temporary confinement of malefactors previously to their committal to the county gaol.

Arms.

The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Huntingdon, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £20, and in the patronage of the King, as Duke of Cornwall. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a spacious cruciform structure, exhibiting some fine portions in the several styles of English architecture: the tower, rising from the intersection, and highly enriched with sculpture, was built by Richard Torrington, in the reign of Henry VIII.: within the church are two chapels at the eastern end, one dedicated to St. John, the other to St. Catherine, and some interesting monuments. There are places of worship for Baptists, the Society of Friends, and Independents. The free grammar school was founded in the reign of Henry VIII., and endowed with lands belonging to the dissolved guild of St. John the Baptist. In the succeeding reign it was made a royal foundation, the master, usher, and chaplain, were incorporated by act of parliament, and the Warden of All Souls' College, Oxford, was appointed visitor. The school was originally endowed for one hundred and forty-four scholars, but, for the last twenty years, not one boy has received any instruction: the establishment is at present under investigation in the court of Chancery. The premises are situated on one side of the churchyard, and consist of a school-room and houses for the master and usher. A charity school, for twenty boys and ten girls, was founded in 1727, by Mr. Thomas Bourne, who endowed it with £8000: the property now consists of £9300 in the New South Sea annuities, and there are at present thirty boys and twenty girls in the school. Almshouses for six aged widows were founded, in 1681, and endowed with £1000, by Mr. John Sayer; the endowment was augmented with £300 by his widow, and subsequently with £26. 5. per annum by Mrs. Martha Deere. King James I. gave £100, and Charles I. £200, for providing employment and fuel for the poor, and there are also several other bequests for charitable uses. There are slight vestiges of the ancient residence of the Mercian kings, on the north side of the town, and at the north-east end of Castle-street are the remains of the castle, consisting principally of walls of an elliptical form, defended on the north-west side by a double, and on the other sides by a triple, moat; the entrance was at the south-east angle, where there are two wide piers, between which probably was the drawbridge. At the end of the High-street is a spring of clear water, called St. James' Well, to which medicinal properties are attributed. An ancient hospital, dedicated to St. James, formerly existed here, but there are no vestiges of it. The poet Cowper was born here in 1731.

BERKHAMPSTEAD (LITTLE), a parish in the hundred and county of HERTFORD, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. W. by S.) from Hertford, containing 439 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Huntingdon, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £7. 8. $6\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of the Marquis of Salisbury. The church, a neat structure, is dedicated to St. Andrew. At How-Green, in this parish, is a place of worship for

VOL. I.

Wesleyan Methodists. A National school for boys and girls is now in progress of erection, and there are three almshouses, the inmates of which are supported by the parish. On an elevated situation near an old manor-house, a circular tower of brick, one hundred feet in height, termed the Observatory, has been erected, which commands an extensive prospect.

BERKHAMPSTEAD (ST. MARY), or NORTH-CHURCH, a parish in the hundred of DACORUM, county of HERTFORD, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (N. W. by W.) from Great Berkhamstead, containing 1028 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Huntingdon, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £21. 1. 3., and in the patronage of the King, as Prince of Wales.

BERKSHIRE, an inland county, bounded on the north by the county of Oxford, and a small part of the county of Buckingham, from both which it is separated by the Thames; on the east by the counties of Buckingham and Surrey; on the south by the county of Southampton; and on the west by that of Wilts: it extends from $51^{\circ} 19'$ to $51^{\circ} 48'$ (N. Lat.), and from $34\frac{1}{2}'$ (E.) to $1^{\circ} 43'$ (W. Lon.), and, including the detached parts, contains about four hundred and sixty-four thousand acres, or seven hundred and fifty-six square miles. The population, in 1821, amounted to 134,700. This county was anciently called Barrocschire, or Berocschire, softened in process of time into Barkshire and Berkshire, and probably derived its name from a thick wood, called Barroc, which occupied an extended tract between Lambourn and Wantage, on or near the downs; though some deduce its etymology from Berroc, a bare oak in some part of Windsor Forest, beneath which the Britons, as their custom was, assembled for devotional and legislative purposes. The Bibroci occupied the south-eastern extremity, and the Segontiaci dwelt in that part which borders on Hampshire, but the greater part was inhabited by the Attrebatii. The Romans included it within the district of Britannia Superior, and subsequently in that of Britannia Prima. During the Octarchy, it formed a part of the kingdom of the West Saxons, or Wessex, and, after the reduction of the Anglo-Saxon kingdom into one monarchy, it belonged to the district called West Saxon Læge. Offa, King of Mercia, after his victory over Cynewulf, King of the West Saxons, in 775, seized on all that territory lying between Ikniel-street and the Thames. The Danes having made an irruption into Wessex, in 871, were repulsed near Englefield by Earl Athelwolf, who was slain in a subsequent battle between them and the army under Ethelred; a few days after which, they were again routed at Ashdown, and compelled to retreat to Reading, where they passed the winter of 872. Alfred gained a decisive victory over them at Eddington, in 878; but, in 1006, they committed great devastation in the county, and defeated the Saxons near the river Kennet. In 1011, Berkshire was under the dominion of Ethelred II., and in the year ensuing, Sweyn, King of Denmark, was at Wallingford. In the struggle between Stephen and the Empress Matilda, the castle at Wallingford was one of the strongest fortresses which were garrisoned by the empress, and was the place of her retreat when driven from Oxford: it was repeatedly besieged by Stephen, but was successfully defended until the termination of the war, when the amicable arrangement which ensued was concluded beneath its walls. During the absence of King Richard I. on a crusading expedition into Palestine, his brother John came over from Normandy, and seized the castles of Wallingford and Windsor, but the latter was retaken by the partizans of the king. Two meetings for the redress of grievances were held between John and the barons in 1213, one at Wallingford and the other at Reading: three years afterwards, the former place was fortified by the king, and the latter besieged by the barons, whose army, under Simon de Montfort, obtained possession of it in 1263: a temporary reconciliation was effected at Reading between Richard II. and the discontented nobles, in 1389. During the parliamentary war, Berkshire was frequently the scene of hostile operations. Wallingford was garrisoned for the king, and Windsor for the parliament; and each place continued in the possession of its own party until the close of the war. Reading, which had been seized on by the parliamentarians, was evacuated by them on the approach, in October 1642, of a detachment of the king's troops, the head-quarters of whose cavalry were at Abingdon. At this period, the king held the whole of the county, except the neighbourhood of Windsor, which fortress sustained but one attack during the war, and that an unsuccessful one, from Prince Rupert. In April 1643, Reading was retaken by the parliamentary army; and in the month of September following, the first battle of Newbury was fought, and the victory claimed by both parties; a few days after the action, Reading again fell into the hands of the king, who also placed a garrison in Donnington castle, near Newbury, under Col. Boys, by whom it was bravely and successfully defended against repeated attacks of the enemy. In the course of the ensuing year, Newbury, Reading (which had been dismantled of its fortifications by the king's troops), and Abingdon, fell successively into the hands of the parliament, who obtained possession of the whole county, except Wallingford. The second battle of Newbury took place in the month of October, in this year, the result of which was equally indecisive with the first. In 1645, Sir Stephen Hawkins made an unsuccessful attack on the parliamentary garrison at Abingdon; and Cromwell, with like fortune, attacked Farringdon, which was then held by the royalists, but he soon after took Sir William Vaughan and Col. Littleton prisoners, with two hundred of their troops, at Radcutt bridge. Prince Rupert attacked Abingdon in March 1646, but failed in his efforts to retake it; and this was the last event of a military nature which took place in Berkshire during the parliamentary war. Wallingford and Farringdon were surrendered to the parliament a few months afterwards, and the king passed his last Christmas in confinement at Windsor. Subsequently to the Restoration, a slight skirmish took place near Reading, in December 1688, which, with the exception of a more trifling affair at Twyford, was the only engagement that happened in this county previously to the Revolution.

Berkshire lies within the diocese of Salisbury and province of Canterbury: it forms an archdeaconry, is divided into the deaneries of Abingdon, Newbury, Reading, and Wallingford, and contains one hundred and forty-eight parishes, of which seventy-two are rectories, sixty-four vicarages, and twelve perpetual curacies. For civil purposes it is divided into twenty hundreds, namely, Beynhurst, Bray, Charlton, Compton, Cookham, Faircross, Farringdon, Ganfield, Hormer, Kintbury-Eagle, Lambourn, Moreton, Ock, Reading, Ripplesmere, Shrivenham, Sonning, Theale, Wantage, and Wargrave. It contains the boroughs and market towns of Abingdon, Reading, Wallingford, and Windsor; the incorporated market towns of Maidenhead, Newbury, and Wokingham; and the market towns of Great Farringdon, Hungerford, East Ilsley, Lambourn, and Wantage. Two knights are returned to parliament for the shire, and two representatives for each of the boroughs, except Abingdon, which sends one: the county members are nominated at Reading, and elected at Abingdon, these being the chief towns. This county is included in the Oxford circuit: the Lent assizes and the Epiphany sessions are held at Reading, the summer assizes and Hilary sessions at Abingdon, the Michaelmas sessions in either town, at the option of the magistrates, and the Easter sessions at Newbury. The county gaol and house of correction is at Reading, and the county house of correction, or bridewell, at Abingdon: there are ninety-three acting magistrates. The rates raised in the county for the year ending March 25th, 1827, amounted to £118,593, and the expenditure to £114,970, of which £99,527. 4. was applied to the relief of the poor.

Berkshire is not a manufacturing county, but there are some cotton manufactories and a large paper-mill near Newbury, a paper-mill at Bagnor, and a large manufactory for blankets at Greenham mills, near Thatcham; the weaving of sheeting, sail-cloth, and sacking, the manufacture of floor-cloth, and that of silk ribands and galloons, are carried on at Reading; sacking and sail-cloth were formerly extensively made at Abingdon and Wantage; silk is manufactured at Wokingham to a small extent, and copper bolts for the navy, at the Temple mills in the parish of Bisham: there are also several large breweries in the county, particularly at Windsor, which is celebrated for its ale. The natural divisions of the county are four, namely, the Forest district, commencing at the eastern extremity of the county, and extending to the river Loddon westward, and from Sandhurst on the south to Maidenhead on the north; the Vale of the Kennet, stretching from near Wargrave on the east, to Hungerford on the west; the Chalk hills, extending nearly across the upper part of the county; and a vale lying between Budcot and Streatley. The substratum consists of chalk, or gravel, with portions of clay at greater or less depths, according to the quality of the soil. Stones of a fine silicious grit, vulgarly called Sarsden-stones, or the Grey-weather, are scattered over the Berkshire and Wiltshire downs, lying on strata to which they do not naturally belong. The crops commonly produced are those of wheat, barley, oats, beans, peas, rye, buck-wheat, vetches or tares, rape of cole-seed, turnips, and potatoes; those of limited cultivation are cabbages, carrots, hops, woad, flax, dill, and lavender. The artificial grasses are red, broad, Dutch clover, ray-grass, cow or marl grass, hop-trefoil, heart-trefoil, saintfoin, lucern, burnet, and corn spurry. For pleasing and picturesque scenery, the eastern extremity of the county is pre-eminent, particularly in Windsor Forest, on the banks of the Thames between Henley and Maidenhead, and between Reading and Wallingford. The waste lands chiefly consist of Maidenhead Thicket, and some parts of Windsor Forest and its neighbourhood: this forest was formerly of much greater circuit than it is at present, having included a part of the counties of Buckingham and Surrey, and the whole of the south-eastern part of Berkshire, as far as Hungerford; its present circuit, in which is a part of Bagshot heath, is about fifty-six miles. Windsor Great park was lessened by George III., from three thousand eight hundred to one thousand eight hundred acres, two thousand acres having been brought into cultivation. From an estimate made in the year 1806, it appeared that there were in the county two hundred and fifty-five thousand acres of arable land, seventy-two thousand in meadow and dairy land, twenty-five thousand in sheep-walks, chiefly unenclosed, on the chalk hills; twenty-five thousand in other dry pastures, parks, &c., and thirty thousand waste, chiefly barren heaths. The cattle are of the long horned, or common country breed; many calves are bred for stock, but suckling for the butcher is the prevailing practice. There is a native breed of sheep, strongly marked, but the pure race is not very common. The horses are usually black, very strong and powerful, and rather of full proportions than tall. The hogs, for compactness and size, are excelled by none: in the dairy tract, the piggeries are an important appendage to the farm.

The principal rivers are the Thames and the Kennet: the former skirts the county during a course of more than one hundred miles, and is navigable as high as Lechlade; the latter flows into Berkshire at Hungerford, becomes navigable at Newbury, where it is joined by the Lambourn, and falls into the Thames near Reading: the river Loddon rises near Aldershot, in Hampshire, enters Berkshire in the parish of Swallowfield, and runs into the Thames near Wargrave; the Ock rises near Uffington and flows into the Thames at Abingdon; the Auborn rises near Inkpen, pursues an easterly course beyond Hyde-End, then taking a northerly direction, falls into the Kennet a little below Wasing; the Lambourn rises amongst the hills above the town of that name, and falls into the Kennet near Shaw. The Wilts and Berks canal extends from the Thames, at Abingdon, to the eastern border of the county, in the upper part; and the Kennet and Avon canal, from the river Kennet, a little above Newbury, across the lower part of the county. The great road from London to Bath enters at Maidenhead bridge, and passing through Reading, quits near the sixty-fifth milestone; the road from London to Oxford enters at the same place, and leaves at Henley bridge; and the Cirencester road, which branches off at Dorchester, re-enters Berkshire at Abingdon, and passing through Farringdon, quits it at St. John's bridge, near Lechlade.

Within the county are many specimens of Saxon ecclesiastical architecture: the most remarkable is Avington church, which remains nearly in its original state; the churches at Abingdon, Aldermaston, Chaddleworth, Charney, Childrey, Cholsey, Hanney, Hatford, North Hinksey, Hurley, Kintbury, Shalbourne, Shaw cum Donnington, Stanford-Dingley, Sunninghill, and Wallingford, have doors with circular arches, and Saxon mouldings and ornaments. Within the limits of the county were anciently twelve religious houses, including one Alien priory, and two preceptories of the Knights Hospitallers: there were three colleges, of which, the royal chapel of St. George at Windsor still remains; and ten hospitals, five of which are now in existence, two at Abingdon, and those at Donnington, Lambourn, and Newbury. Of the magnificent abbey built by Henry I. at Reading, little more than rude heaps of stones is now to be seen, and the church of the Grey friars has been converted into a bridewell: there are some remains of the ancient monastery at Abingdon, of that of the Benedictines at Hurley, and of the collegiate church at Wallingford. The most distinctly marked Roman road is that from Gloucester to London, which enters the county from Baydon, and falls into the modern high road from Bath to London, near the fifty-eighth milestone: the road from Silchester to London passed through the south-eastern part, bearing for Old Windsor, or Staines; the Iknield-street enters Berkshire at Streatley, and the Portway on its north-westerly border from Wiltshire; traces of the Old street are also visible between Wantage and Thatcham. Of the many ancient camps, the most remarkable are Letcomb Castle, enclosing an area of twenty-six acres, the intrenchments and ditches containing eight acres and a half; Uffington Castle, seven hundred feet in diameter from east to west, and five hundred from north to south, near which is the rude figure of a horse, of very ancient execution, formed by cutting away the turf on the side of the hill, which has hence acquired the name of White Horse hill, and the vale below, that of White Horse vale; Hardwell Castle, in form approaching to a square; Cæsar's Camp, on Bagshot heath, five hundred and sixty paces in length, and two hundred and eighty in width; Cherbury camp, near Pusey, three hundred and ten paces across; and Alfred's Castle, on the west side of Ashdown park, one hundred and forty paces in diameter. The only mineral springs of any note, are those at Cummer and Sunninghill, the first a mild cathartic, the other a very weak chalybeate; a strong chalybeate spring in the parish of Wokingham, called Gorricks Well, and some springs near Windsor, of the quality of the Epsom waters.

BERMERSLEY, a township in the parish of NORTON on the MOORS, northern division of the hundred of PIREHILL, county of STAFFORD, $6\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N.N.E.) from Newcastle under Line, containing 190 inhabitants.

BERMONDSEY, a parish in the eastern division of the hundred of BRIXTON, county of SURREY, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (S.S.E.) from London, containing 25,235 inhabitants. This place, in Domesday-book, is described as a royal demesne, and, in other ancient records, as having been occasionally the residence of William the Conqueror, and his successor, William Rufus, who had a palace here. In 1082, a priory for Cluniac monks was founded by Aldwin Child, a citizen of London, as a cell to the abbey of La Charité in France, from which establishment brethren of that order are said to have been sent hither through the influence of Lanfranc, Archbishop of Canterbury. To this monastery William Rufus and some of his successors were great benefactors. Henry I. gave the palace to the monks, for the enlargement of their cloister, reserving part of it as a residence for himself, in which King John having subsequently resided, it obtained the appellation of King John's palace, and has been by some antiquaries considered rather the original site, than, as it was in reality, only an appendage to the monastery. This establishment increased so much in wealth and importance, that it was found necessary to enlarge the buildings; and an hospital was erected adjoining it, for the reception of their converts and the education of their children, which was dedicated to St. Thomas the Martyr. Though an Alien priory, it was exempted from sequestration in the reign of Edward III., who placed it under the superintendence of an Englishman, in whom he could confide, and whom he made prior. It was subsequently elevated into an abbey, and retained its grandeur and importance till the dissolution, when its revenue was £548. 2. 5½. The site appears to have been very extensive, comprising the present churchyard, and an adjoining area, still called King John's Court. Vestiges of the palace and conventual buildings may still be traced in the gardens of the houses which have been erected on the site: a gateway, which was standing in 1807, has been taken down, in order to form a new street. Bermondsey owes its origin to the establishment of this monastery, in the vicinity of which, a gradual accumulation of buildings had formed an extensive village in the reign of Edward III., when a church was founded by the prior, for the use of the inhabitants. In this religious house, Catherine of France, widow of Henry V., lived in retirement, and died in 1436; and here also, in 1486, Elizabeth, queen of Edward IV., who was sentenced by the council to forfeiture of land and goods, ended her life in confinement. The village is situated on the southern bank of the Thames, and consists principally of two extensive streets, meeting obliquely near the church, and intersected by many smaller streets; the houses, in general ancient and irregularly built, are interspersed with several modern and handsome structures: the streets are paved, and well lighted with gas, and the inhabitants are supplied with water from the river and from springs. The tanning of leather is carried on to a very great extent, by a company chartered in the reign of Queen Anne; there are also numerous woolstaplers, fellmongers, curriers, and manufacturers of vellum and parchment. The situation is favourable to the carrying on of many trades: there are two small docks and several yards for boat-builders, in connexion with whom are rope-makers, anchor-smiths, and stave-merchants, and there are establishments for the printing and dyeing of calico.

The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Surrey, and diocese of Winchester, rated in the king's books at £15. 8. 11½., and in the patronage of Mrs. Humbly. The church, dedicated to St. Mary Magdalene, is an ancient and very plain structure, with a low square tower. A new church was completed in 1828, partly by grant from the parliamentary commissioners, at an expense of £21,412. 19. 5.; it is a handsome edifice in the Grecian style of architecture, with a tower, and a portico of four pillars of the Ionic order, and contains two thousand sittings, of which one thousand two hundred are free. There are places of worship for Independents and Wesleyan Methodists. A free school for sixty boys, who are instructed in reading, writing, and arithmetic, was founded, in 1709, by Mr. Josiah Bacon, who left £700 for building the premises, and £150 per annum for an endowment; of this annual income, the master receives a salary of £80 per annum, and the usher one of £50, the remainder being laid out in repairs: the school-room, which was erected in 1718, in the Grange road, is a neat brick building, having a statue of the founder in a niche over the entrance. The united charity schools, established in 1712, are supported partly by subscription, and partly by an endowment of £109. 16. 4. per annum, arising from several donations: the whole income is about £550 per annum, for which two hundred and twenty boys, and one hundred and thirty girls, are instructed, of whom fifty boys and thirty girls are also clothed; there is another school with a small endowment, and numerous benefactions have been made for the relief of the poor. In 1770, a chalybeate spring was discovered here, and a spa established, which, for many years, was a celebrated place of entertainment. Israel Mauduit, an ingenious writer on politics and commerce, was born here, in 1708.

BERRICK-PRIOR, a liberty in the parish of NEWINGTON, hundred of EWELME, county of OXFORD, 4½ miles (N.N.E.) from Wallingford, containing 152 inhabitants.

BERRICK-SALOME, a chapelry in the parish of CHALGROVE, hundred of EWELME, county of OXFORD, 4 miles (N.N.E.) from Wallingford, containing 174 inhabitants. The chapel is dedicated to St. Helen. Here is a school with a small endowment.

BERRIER, a township in the parish of GREYSTOCK, LEATH ward, county of CUMBERLAND, 8 miles (W. by S.) from Penrith, containing, with the township of Murrah, 128 inhabitants. Mary Jackson, in 1799, left £230 in reversion, to found and endow a school for girls, which, having become the subject of a lawsuit, was confirmed by the court of Chancery, in 1811, and the school was built by subscription, in 1828, on ground given by the Hon. Henry Howard, of Corby Castle, and endowed with £5 per annum, the remainder of the property having been expended in the lawsuit.

BERRINGTON, a hamlet in the parish of CHIPPING-CAMPDEN, upper division of the hundred of KIRTSGATE, county of GLOUCESTER, containing 171 inhabitants.

BERRINGTON, a township in the parish of EYE, hundred of WOLPHY, county of HEREFORD, 3½ miles (N.N.E.) from Leominster. The population is returned with the parish.

BERRINGTON, a parish in the hundred of CONDOVER, county of SALOP, 5½ miles (S.E. by S.) from Shrewsbury, containing 657 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Salop, and diocese of Lichfield and Coventry, rated in the king's books at £10. 12. 1., and in the patronage of Lord Berwick. The church is dedicated to All Saints. The navigable river Severn passes through the parish.

BERRINGTON, a hamlet in the parish of TENBURY, upper division of the hundred of DODDINGTREE, county of WORCESTER, 2 miles (W. by S.) from Tenbury, containing 195 inhabitants.

BERROW, a parish in the hundred of BRENT with WRINGTON, county of SOMERSET, 9½ miles (W. by S.) from Axbridge, containing 449 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Wells, and diocese of Bath and Wells, rated in the king's books at £13. 11. 10½., and in the patronage of the Archdeacon of Wells. The church is dediated to St. Mary. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. Berrow bay, a small inlet of the Bristol channel, forms the western boundary of the parish.

BERROW, a parish in a detached part of the lower division of the hundred of OSWALDSLOW, locally in the lower division of the hundred of Pershore, county of WORCESTER, 6 miles (S. W.) from Upton upon Severn, containing 464 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the peculiar jurisdiction and patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Worcester, rated in the king's books at £7. 18. 4., and endowed with £1200 parliamentary grant. The church is dedicated to St. Faith.

BERRY-POMEROY, a parish in the hundred of HAYTOR, county of DEVON, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (E. N. E.) from Totness, containing 1255 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Totness, and diocese of Exeter, rated in the king's books at £18. 19. 7., and in the patronage of the Duke of Somerset. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, contains a finely carved wooden screen and rood-loft. The navigable river Dart runs along the south-western side of the parish. Here are the ruins of Berry castle, founded by Ralph de Pomeroy, soon after the Conquest.

BERRY-N-ARBOR, a parish in the hundred of BRAUNTON, county of DEVON, $2\frac{1}{4}$ miles (E. by S.) from Ilfracombe, containing 648 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Barnstaple, and diocese of Exeter, rated in the king's books at £34. 15. 10., and in the patronage of the Bishop of Exeter and others. The church is dedicated to St. Peter. Bishop Jewell, celebrated for his controversy in support of the Protestant faith, was born here, in 1522.

BERSTED (SOUTH), a parish in the hundred of ALDWICK, rape of CHICHESTER, county of SUSSEX, 6 miles (S. E.) from Chichester, containing, with the market town of Bognor, 1851 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the peculiar jurisdiction and patronage of the Archbishop of Canterbury, rated in the king's books at £7. 18. 9. The church is dedicated to St. Mary Magdalene.

BERWICK, a parish in the hundred of LONGBRIDGE, rape of PEVENSEY, county of SUSSEX, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. E. by N.) from Seaford, containing 172 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Lewes, and diocese of Chichester, rated in the king's books at £13. 6. 8., and in the patronage of Jeremiah Smith, Esq. This parish is separated from that of Arlington by the river Cuckmere.

BERWICK (ST. JAMES), a parish in the hundred of BRANCH and DOLE, county of WILTS, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. S. W.) from Amesbury, containing 227 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, within the peculiar jurisdiction of the Bishop of Salisbury, rated in the king's books at £8. 10., endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £500 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of Alexander Baring, Esq.

BERWICK (ST. JOHN), a parish in the hundred of CHALK, county of WILTS, $5\frac{1}{4}$ miles (E. by S.) from Shaftesbury, containing 386 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Salisbury, rated in the king's books at £26. 13. 4., and in the patronage of the Warden and Fellows of New College, Oxford. About a mile southward from the village is an intrenchment, called Winkelbury Camp, supposed to have been constructed by the Romans.

BERWICK (ST. LEONARD), a parish in the hundred of DUNWORTH, county of WILTS, 1 mile (E.) from Hindon, containing 44 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, with the perpetual curacy of Sedghill annexed, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Salisbury, rated in the king's books at £8. 6. 8., and in the patronage of the Rev. Charles Henry Grove.

BERWICKUPONTWEED, a port, borough, and market town, situated between the boundary line of the northern part of the county of Durham, and that of Scotland, 64 miles (N. by W.) from Newcastle upon Tyne, and 334 (N. by W.) from London, containing 8723 inhabitants. The name, which Leland supposes to have been originally Aberwick, from the Arms.

British terms Aber, the mouth of a river, and wic, a town, is, by Camden and other antiquaries, considered to imply only a hamlet annexed to a place of greater importance, such appendages being usually, in ancient records, styled berewics; and in this sense of the term Berwick is supposed to have obtained its name from having been the grange of the priory of Coldingham, ten miles distant. It is said to have been a place of considerable importance as a barrier town, in the reign of Osbert, King of Northumbria, and, according to Boethius, was the place where the Danes, under the conduct of Hubba, landed, on their invasion of England, in the year 867. The town having come into the possession of the Saxons, they, on the defeat of their king, abandoned it, when, with that part of the kingdom of Northumberland called Bernicia, it was ceded, or sold, by Eadulf-Cudel, Earl of Northumberland, to Malcolm II., King of Scotland, in 1020. The earliest authentic notice of Berwick occurs in the reign of Henry I.; and in that of Henry II., it was, with four other towns, given up to that monarch by William the Lion, in 1176, as a pledge for the performance of the treaty of Falaise, by which, in order to obtain his release from captivity, after the battle of Alnwick, in 1174, he had engaged to do homage to the English monarch, as lord paramount, for all his Scottish dominions. Richard I., to obtain a supply of money for his expedition to the Holy Land, sold the vassalage of Scotland for ten thousand marks, and restored this and the other towns to William, content with receiving homage only for the territories which that prince held in England. King John, on retiring from an unsuccessful invasion of Scotland, burnt Berwick, which the Scots almost immediately rebuilt on an enlarged plan, and strongly fortified. In 1291, the commissioners appointed to examine and report on the validity of the title of the respective claimants to the crown of Scotland, met at Berwick, and pursued there the investigation which led to the decision in favour of John Balliol. Edward I. having compelled Balliol to resign his crown, took the town by storm, and inflicted dreadful carnage on the occasion. In 1296, he received the homage of the Scottish nobility, in the presence of a council of the whole nation, at Berwick, where, in the following year, he established a court of Exchequer for the receipt of the revenue of the kingdom of Scotland. Wallace having laid siege to the town, took possession of it, but was unsuccessful in his attempt on the castle, which was relieved by the arrival of a numerous army. Edward II., in prosecuting the war against Scotland, assembled his army here repeatedly, and made several inroads into the enemy's territory. Robert Bruce obtained possession of it in 1318, and having raised the walls, and strengthened them with towers, kept it, notwithstanding several attacks from Edward II. and Edward III., until it surrendered to the latter, after the celebrated battle of Halldown Hill, in this neighbourhood, which took place on the 19th of July, 1333. As a frontier town it was invariably the first object of attack, on the renewal of hostilities between the two kingdoms, and, after repeated surrenders and sieges, it was ceded to Edward IV., from whom and his successors it received several charters and extensive privileges. After having been exposed, during the subsequent reigns, to the continued aggressions of the Scots and the English, it was made a free town, independent of both kingdoms, by treaty between Edward VI., King of England, and Mary, Queen of Scots, signed at Greenwich, on the part of the former, on the 10th of May, and, on the part of the latter, at Norham, in the vicinity of this town, on the 10th of June, 1551. It was strongly fortified in the reign of Elizabeth, who placed a garrison in it, which was kept up till the accession of James to the English throne, when its importance as a frontier town ceased. During the civil war in the reign of Charles I. it was garrisoned by the parliament.

The town is pleasantly situated on the northern bank, and near the mouth, of the river Tweed: the approach from the English side is over a handsome stone bridge of fifteen arches, connecting it with Tweedmouth on the south. The streets, with the exception of the High-street and Hidehill, are narrow, but well paved, and lighted with gas, and the houses are in general well built: some of the inhabitants are supplied with water brought into their houses by pipes, from a spring at the distance of a mile and a half; the others are supplied from public cisterns placed in situations convenient for the purpose. The new fortifications, which are exceedingly strong, have displaced those of more ancient date, of which there remain only the ruins of the fortress at the south-west angle of the old town walls, and those near the castle. The ramparts afford an agreeable promenade, much frequented by the inhabitants. The barracks for the garrison, on the north-east side of the town, form a small quadrangle, neatly built of stone; the establishment consists of a governor, lieutenant-governor, town-major, town-adjutant, surgeon, master gunner, and a few invalid gunners: the buildings are capable of accommodating seven hundred men. Connected with the barracks are the guard-house, an hospital, and an ordnance house. A public library was established in 1812. The theatre, a small neat building, is opened annually in summer. The assembly-rooms are opened on public occasions; and subscription balls take place regularly during the winter.

The trade of the port is somewhat extensive coast-wise; the exports are corn, wool, salmon, herrings, pork, and eggs; the imports are timber, deals, staves, iron, hemp, tallow, and blubber. The number of vessels belonging to the port, according to the return made to parliament in 1828, was fifty-four, averaging ninety tons' burden: the harbour is good, but, from the bar at the entrance, it is inaccessible to ships of large burden. The pier, which has been recently constructed, extends nearly half a mile in length; a lighthouse has been erected on it, to guard mariners against the rocks and shallows by which the navigation is endangered. About eight hundred men are employed in the fishery: the salmon and trout, which are caught in abundance, are packed in boxes stratified with ice, by which they are conveyed fresh to the London and other markets: a great quantity of lobsters and herrings is also found here. The annual rental of the fisheries has been estimated at £10,000, and the supply of eggs, which are sent from this place for the use of sugar refiners, has been returned as exceeding the value of £13,000 per annum, but this branch of the trade has materially diminished. The principal articles of manufacture, exclusively of such as are connected with the shipping, are damask, diaper, sacking, sail-cloth, cotton, hosiery, carpets, hats, boots, and shoes. The market, which is abundantly supplied with grain, is on Saturday; and there is a fair, for black cattle and horses, on the Friday in Trinity week; statute fairs are also held on the second Wednesday in May, the Wednesday before August 26th, and the first Wednesday in November.

The government, by charter of incorporation granted in the reign of James I., is vested in a mayor, recorder, four bailiffs, and an indefinite number of burgesses, assisted by a town-clerk, coroner, four serjeants at mace, and subordinate officers. The mayor, who, with the bailiffs, is elected annually at Michaelmas, the recorder, and such of the burgesses as have filled the office of mayor, are justices of the peace by virtue of their office: the freedom of the borough is inherited by birth, acquired by servitude, or obtained by gift. The corporation hold courts of quarter session and gaol delivery for the borough, and a court of pleas every alternate Tuesday, for the recovery of debts to any amount. A court leet is held under the charter, at which a high constable and six petty constables are appointed. The town-hall is a spacious, handsome building, with a portico of four massive circular columns of the Tuscan order: a portion of the lower part, called the Exchange, is appropriated to the use of the market; the first story contains two spacious halls, and other apartments in which the courts are held, and the public business of the corporation is transacted; and the upper part is used as a gaol: the whole forms a stately pile of fine hewn stone, and is surmounted with a lofty spire containing a peal of eight bells, which on the Sabbath day summon the inhabitants to the parish church, but is inconveniently situated in the centre of the High-street, by which the thoroughfare is greatly obstructed. Berwick was one of the four Scottish burghs which anciently sent representatives to the court of the four burghs in Scotland; on being annexed to the kingdom of England, its prescriptive usages were confirmed by royal charter. It first sent representatives to the English parliament in the reign of Henry VIII., since which time it has continued to return two members: the right of election is vested in the burgesses at large, in number about one thousand; the mayor and bailiffs are the returning officers.

The living is a vicarage, within the jurisdiction of the Consistorial Court of Durham, rated in the king's books at £20, endowed with £1000 private benefaction, and £1500 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Durham. The church, dedicated to the Holy Trinity, is a handsome structure in the decorated style of English architecture; it was built during the usurpation of Cromwell, and is consequently without a steeple. There are two places of worship for those connected with the Scottish Kirk, and one each for Particular Baptists, Burghers, Anti-burghers, the Scottish relief, and Wesleyan Methodists. The free grammar school, founded originally by the corporation, and endowed, in the middle of the seventeenth century, by Col. Strother, with the estate of Coldmarten, is under the management of the corporation, who appoint the master; he has a salary of £80 per annum, and a house and garden, and receives ten shillings per quarter for every scholar who is not the son of a freeman. A school for the instruction of the sons of burgesses in English, Latin, and the mathematics, was founded and endowed by the corporation in 1798; to each department there is a separate master, each of whom, in addition to his salary, has a house and garden. The Blue-coat charity school, in which forty-two boys are clothed and educated, was founded by Captain James Bolton, in 1725, and endowed with £800, since augmented by various benefactions; the master has a salary of £50 per annum. The school of industry for girls, established in 1819, is supported by the ladies of Berwick, and affords instruction to one hundred and six girls. There is also a school in connexion with the workhouse, in which about one hundred children are educated; the master has a salary of £60 per annum, which is paid out of the poor's rate. A pauper lunatic asylum was erected in 1813; and there is a dispensary, established in 1814, under the patronage of the Bishop of Durham, which affords relief to the poor within twelve miles of the town, and is attended by four physicians, three surgeons, and a dispensing apothecary. There are some trifling remains of the castle, and a pentagonal tower near it, a square fort in Magdalene fields, and some intrenchments on Hallidown Hill. A Benedictine nunnery is stated to have been founded by David, King of Scotland, who died in 1153; here were also monasteries of Black, Grey, White, and Trinitarian friars, and three or four hospitals, but every vestige of them has long disappeared.

BERWICK-HILL, a township in the parish of PONTELAND, western division of CASTLE ward, county of NORTHUMBERLAND, $9\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. N. W.) from Newcastle upon Tyne, containing 111 inhabitants.

BESFORD, a township in that part of the parish of SHAWBURY which is in the hundred of PIMHILL, county of SALOP, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. E. by E.) from Wem, containing 169 inhabitants.

BESFORD, a parish in the upper division of the hundred of PERSHORE, county of WORCESTER, 3 miles (W. by S.) from Pershore, containing 154 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to the vicarage of St. Andrew's, Pershore, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Worcester, rated in the king's books at £3. The church is dedicated to St. Andrew. The navigable river Avon runs along the border of the parish.

BESSELSLEIGH, a parish in the hundred of HORMER, county of BERKS, 5 miles (N. W.) from Abingdon, containing 130 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Berks, and diocese of Salisbury, rated in the king's books at £4. 17. 3 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of W. J. Lenthall, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Lawrence. The parishioners are entitled to participate in the advantages of the school at Appleton, endowed by Sir R. Fettiplace. The old manor-house, formerly the seat of Lenthall, Speaker of the House of Commons in the Long Parliament, was pulled down about forty years ago. Cromwell, who was a frequent visitor here, usually concealed himself in a room to which the only access was by a chair let down and drawn up with pulleys.

BESSINGBY, a parish in the wapentake of DICKERING, East riding of the county of YORK, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. W.) from Bridlington, containing 83 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry and diocese of York, endowed with £1400 royal bounty, and in the patronage of H. Hudson, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Magnus.

BESSINGHAM, a parish in the northern division of the hundred of ERPINGHAM, county of NORFOLK, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. W.) from Cromer, containing 149 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Norfolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £4. 6. 8., and in the patronage of Viscount Anson. The church is dedicated to St. Mary.

BESTHORPE, a parish in the hundred of SHROPHAM, county of NORFOLK, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (E. by S.) from Attleburgh, containing 519 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Norfolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £5. 6. 10 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of the Earl of Winterton. The church is dedicated to All Saints.

BESTHORPE, a chapelry in the parish of SOUTH SCARLE, northern division of the wapentake of NEWARK, county of NOTTINGHAM, 8 miles (N. N. E.) from Newark, containing 271 inhabitants. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. A school is endowed with £8. 12. per annum.

BESWICK, a chapelry in the parish of KILN-WICK, Bainton-Beacon division of the wapentake of HARTHILL, East riding of the county of YORK, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. by W.) from Beverley, containing 192 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of the East riding, and diocese of York, endowed with £600 royal bounty, and in the patronage of J. Denison, Esq.

BETCHWORTH, a parish in the first division of the hundred of REIGATE, county of SURREY, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. by S.) from Reigate, containing 909 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Surrey, and diocese of Winchester, rated in the king's books at £7. 8. 11 $\frac{1}{2}$., endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Dean and Canons of Windsor. The church is dedicated to St. Michael. A school is endowed with £20 per annum, and is further supported by subscription.

BETHERSDEN, a parish in the hundred of CHART and LONGBRIDGE, lathe of SCRAY, county of KENT, 6 miles (W. S. W.) from Ashford, containing 1001 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Canterbury, rated in the king's books at £12, endowed with £200 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Archbishop of Canterbury. The church is dedicated to St. Beatrice. There is a place of worship for Particular Baptists. A fair is held here on the 1st of July. A considerable quantity of a species of grey marble, used for columns and the internal ornaments of various neighbouring churches, is obtained in the northern part of the parish. The inhabitants are entitled to send six children to the free school at Smarden.

BETHNAL-GREEN, a parish in the Tower division of the hundred of OSSULSTONE, county of MIDDLESEX, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N.E. by E.) from St. Paul's, containing 45,676 inhabitants. This very extensive parish, which was severed by act of parliament, in 1743, from the parish of Stepney, to which it was formerly a hamlet, is divided into four districts, called Church division, Green division, Hackney-road division, and Town division. It is supposed to have derived its name from Bathon Hall, the residence of a family of that name, who had considerable possessions here in the reign of Edward I., and from an extensive green, to the east of which is the site of an episcopal palace, called Bishop's Hall, which is said to have been the residence of Bonner, Bishop of London. The popular legendary ballad of the Blind Beggar of Bethnal-Green, the hero of which is said to have been Henry de Montfort, son of the Earl of Leicester, has reference to an ancient castellated mansion in this parish, built in the reign of Elizabeth, by John Kirby, a citizen of London, and now converted into a private lunatic asylum. The houses in general are meanly built of brick, and consist of large ranges of dwellings, inhabited chiefly by journeymen silk-weavers, who work at home for the master weavers in Spitalfields, in each of which two or three families live, and exercise their sedentary occupation. The parish is watched, and lighted with gas; the streets are partially paved, and the inhabitants are supplied with water by the East London Company's works. There is a very extensive cotton-factory, besides a large manufactory for water-proof hose, made of flax, without seam, and of any length and diameter, chiefly for the use of brewers and for firemen. A great quantity of land in the parish is in the occupation of market-gardeners, who raise fruit and vegetables for the London market; and there are extensive beds of clay, which is much used for the making of bricks. The fair formerly held here has been suppressed, in consequence of the riotous proceedings which usually took place during its continuance. The Regent's canal passes through the parish. This district is within the limits of the New Police act, and under the jurisdiction of a court of requests for the Tower Hamlets, for the recovery of debts under 40s.

The living is a rectory, in the peculiar jurisdiction of the Commissary of London, concurrently with the Consistorial Court of the Bishop, and in the patronage of the Principal and Fellows of Brasenose College, Oxford. The church, dedicated to St. Matthew, and erected in 1746, is a neat brick building, ornamented with stone. St. John's church was built in 1828, by grant from the parliamentary commissioners, at an expense of £17,638. 18.; it is a handsome edifice of stone, in the Grecian style of architecture, with a tower, and is capable of accommodating two thousand persons: one thousand two hundred of the sittings are free. There are places of worship for Baptists, Independents, and Methodists. An episcopal chapel was erected, in 1814, by the Society for Promoting Christianity among the Jews, attached to which are two schools, wherein fifty boys and nearly sixty girls are maintained and instructed. St. Matthew's school, founded in 1771, by the inhabitants, for clothing and instructing forty-five boys and forty-five girls, and a National school for one thousand children, are supported by subscription. In 1722, Mr. Thomas Parmiter left an estate in Suffolk, now producing £25 per annum, for the erection and endowment of a free school and almshouse in this parish; for the promotion of which purpose, Mrs. Elizabeth Carter gave the ground rent-free for six hundred years, and £10 per annum: Mr. William Lee also gave £10 per annum towards the maintenance of the school: and Mr. Edward Mayhew £5 towards the clothing of the children. The income, under the management of trustees, has greatly improved; there are fifty boys in the school; the master has a salary of £50, and the almspeople an allowance of £5 per annum and a supply of coal. The almshouses founded, in 1711, by Captain Fisher, and those belonging to the companies of Drapers and Dyers, are situated in this parish. Trinity Hospital, at Mile-End, was erected in 1695, on land, in this parish, given by Captain Henry Mudd, an elder brother of the Trinity House, and endowed, in 1701, by Captain Robert Sandes, for twenty-eight masters of ships, or their widows, who have each a pecuniary allowance, apartments, and other advantages. The Roman road from the western counties of England to the ferry over the river Lea at Old Ford, passes through the northern part of the parish. Sir Richard Gresham, father of Sir Thomas Gresham, who built the Royal Exchange; Sir Thomas Grey, Knt.; and Sir Balthazer Gerbier, a celebrated painter and architect, who designed the triumphal arch for the entrance of Charles II. into London, on his restoration; were residents at this place. Ainsworth, the celebrated compiler of the Latin Dictionary, kept an academy here for some years, and the noted Caslon, who established the celebrated type-foundry in Chiswell-street, lived here in retirement till his decease in 1766.

BETLEY, a parish (formerly a market town) in the northern division of the hundred of PIREHILL, county of STAFFORD, $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. by N.) from Newcastle under Line, containing 932 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Stafford, and diocese of Lichfield and Coventry, endowed with £600 private benefaction, and £600 royal bounty, and in the patronage of George Tollet, Esq. The church, dedicated to St. Margaret, is an ancient structure, with a tower, supposed to have been erected in 1713, as that date appears on the vane: the nave is separated from the aisles by pillars and plain pointed arches of wood; several handsome monuments adorn the walls of the chancel, which is of modern construction. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. The village is remarkably cheerful and pleasant, and contains several respectable houses; in the neighbourhood are extensive gardens, from which the town of Newcastle is supplied with vegetables, for the cultivation of which the soil is particularly adapted. Courts leet and baron are held annually; and a fair for cattle takes place on the 31st of July. Here is a charity school with a small endowment.

BETTERTON, a tything in the parish of LOCKINGE, hundred of WANTAGE, county of BERKS, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. S. E.) from Wantage. The population is returned with the parish.

BETTESHANGER, a parish in the hundred of EASTRY, lathe of ST. AUGUSTINE, county of KENT, 4 miles (S. S. W.) from Sandwich, containing 21 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Canterbury, rated in the king's books at £6. 4. 4., and in the patronage of F. E. Morrice, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Mary.

BETTISCOMBE, a parish in the liberty of FRAMP-TON, Bridport division of the county of DORSET, 6 miles (W. by S.) from Beaminster, containing 62 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Dorset, and diocese of Bristol, rated in the king's books at £8. 2. $3\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of F. J. Browne, Esq.

BETTUS, a parish in the hundred of PURSLOW, county of SALOP, 6 miles (N. W.) from Knighton, containing 341 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Salop, and diocese of Hereford, endowed with £600 royal bounty, and £200 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Vicar of Clun. The church is dedicated to St. Mary.

BETTWS, a parish in the upper division of the hundred of WENTLLOOG, county of MONMOUTH, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W. by W.) from Newport, containing 76 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to the vicarage of St. Woollos, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Llandaff. The church is dedicated to St. David.

BETTWS-NEWYDD, a parish in the lower division of the hundred of RAGLAND, county of MONMOUTH, 4 miles (N. by E.) from Usk, containing 84 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to the vicarage of Llanarth, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Llandaff, endowed with £200 royal bounty.

BEVERCOATES, a parish in the South-clay division of the wapentake of BASSETLAW, county of NOTTINGHAM, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. N. W.) from Tuxford, containing 48 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, united to that of West Markham, in the archdeaconry of Nottingham, and diocese of York. The church, now desecrated, was dedicated to St. Giles.

BEVERLEY, a borough, market town, and the head of a liberty, having separate jurisdiction, in the East riding of the county of YORK, 9 miles (N. E.) from Kingston upon Hull, 29 (E. S. E.) from York, and 183 (N.) from London, containing 6728 inhabitants. This place, from the woods with which it was formerly covered, was called Deirwalde, implying the forest of the Deiri, the ancient inhabitants of this part of the country. By the Saxons, probably, from the number of beavers with which the river Hull in this part abounded, it was called Beverlega, from which its present name is deduced. About the year 700, John, Archbishop of York, partly refounded the church, dedicated to St. John the Evangelist, and established an oratory, in honour of St. Martin. These he subsequently converted into a monastery, in which, after having filled the archiepiscopal see of York for thirty-three years, with a reputation for extreme sanctity, he spent the remainder of his life in retirement and devotion; and dying in 721, was canonized by the title of St. John of Beverley. In the year 867 this monastery was destroyed by the Danes, in one of their incursions under Inguar and Ubba, and, after remaining for three years in a state of desolation, was partly restored by the monks, who again established themselves at this place. In the early part of the tenth century, Athelstan, marching against the confederated Britons, Scots, and Danes, caused the standard of St. John of Beverley to be carried before his army, and having returned victorious, bestowed many privileges upon the town and monastery. He founded a college for Secular canons, which, at the dissolution, had an establishment consisting of a provost, eight prebendaries, a chancellor, precentor, seven rectors, and nine vicars choral, and a revenue of £597. 19. 6.; and he conferred on the church the privilege of sanctuary, the limits of which, extending for a mile around the town, were marked out by four crosses, erected at the four principal entrances. From this time the town began to increase rapidly in population and importance. About the year 1060, Kinsius, the twenty-third archbishop of York, built a hall, nearly rebuilt the church, to which he added a tower, and contributed greatly to its internal decoration. The memory of St. John of Beverley was held in such veneration, that William the Conqueror having advanced within seven miles of the town, gave strict orders to his army that they should not damage the church; the day of his death was appointed to be kept holy, and the festival of his translation, October 25th, was, in 1416, ordered to be annually celebrated, in commemoration of the battle of Agincourt, which was superstitiously thought to have been gained through his intercession. At the commencement of the civil war, in the reign of Charles I., that monarch fixed his head-quarters at Beverley, and attempted to gain possession of Kingston upon Hull, which was then defended for the parliament by Sir John Hotham, who, having subsequently made overtures for a reconciliation with the king, and entered into a negotiation for surrendering the town, fled from Hull, upon the discovery of his intention, and was made prisoner on the day following at Beverley, which had fallen into the hands of the parliamentarians.

The town is situated at the foot of the Wolds, about a mile from the river Hull, and consists of several spacious streets, in which are many handsome well-built houses: the approach from the Driffield road is remarkably fine, having, particularly on the north-east side, many elegant buildings, and terminating in an ancient gateway, which leads into the town. The streets are well paved, and the inhabitants are amply supplied with water; the air is salubrious, and the environs, which abound in rich and diversified scenery, afford agreeable walks. The races, which take place annually in June, are held on Hurn meadow, one of the four common pastures belonging to the town, about a mile distant, on which a commodious stand has been erected. The theatre, built in 1805, is occasionally opened, and assemblies are held periodically in a suite of rooms for that purpose. The trade is in coal, corn, oatmeal, malt, and tanned leather, and has been greatly extended by means of a canal called Beverley Beck, constructed under an act of parliament, in 1737, and connecting the town with the river Hull: a considerable quantity of bone lace is also made. The market is on Saturday: the market place occupies an area of four acres, in the centre of which is a stately cross supported on eight pillars, each of one entire stone. Fairs are held on the Thursday before Old Valentine's day, Holy Thursday, July 5th, the Wednesday before September 25th, and November 6th, chiefly for horses, horned cattle, and sheep, and on every alternate Wednesday there is a great market for sheep and horned cattle.

The government of the borough, by charter of Queen Elizabeth, is vested in a mayor, recorder, twelve aldermen, and thirteen burgesses, assisted by a town-clerk and subordinate officers: the mayor and burgesses are elected annually, and the aldermen are chosen by a majority of their own body, as vacancies occur. The freedom of the borough is inherited by the sons of freemen, if born within the liberty, acquired by servitude, or obtained by purchase: among the privileges which it conveys are, exemption from toll and custom in every town or port in England, and the right of depasturing twelve or thirteen head of cattle, at a trifling cost, on four large pastures, containing about one thousand acres. The corporation have the power of trying for capital offences, but do not exercise it: they hold courts of session for the borough and liberty, which latter comprises the townships of Molscroft, Stockhill with Sandholme, Thearne, Tickton with Hull-bridge, Weel, and Woodmansey with Beverley-Park, and part of the township of Aike, all in the parish of St. John; and a court of record is also held, called the Provost court, which takes cognizance of all pleas, except those respecting titles to landed property. A court of requests is holden under an act passed in the 21st of George III., the powers of which were extended by a subsequent act, in the 46th of the same reign, whereby debts under £5 are recoverable. The guildhall, or, as it is here called, the Hallgarth, is a neat building, containing, in addition to the apartments in which the public business of the corporation is transacted, a courtroom in which the general quarter sessions for the East riding are held, and a registrar's office. The house of correction is a small neat building, about half a mile from the town. The elective franchise was conferred in the reign of Edward I., but was not exercised from the end of that reign till the 5th of Elizabeth, since which time the borough has continued to return two members to parliament: the right of election is vested in the freemen generally, whether resident or not, the number of whom is about one thousand four hundred; the mayor is the returning officer.

Beverley comprises the parishes of St. John, St. Martin, St. Mary, and St. Nicholas, all within the archdeaconry of the East riding, and diocese of York: the parish of St. John extends into the northern division of the wapentake of Holderness. It was formerly the head of a peculiar and exempt jurisdiction, under the provost of the collegiate church, which expired at the dissolution of monasteries. The living of St. John's is a perpetual curacy, with that of St. Martin's united, endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £400 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Mayor and Corporation. The church, anciently belonging to the monastery of St. John, and still called the Minster, was almost entirely rebuilt in 1060, by Kinsius, Archbishop of York. In 1664, some workmen opening a grave in the chancel, discovered a sheet of lead, enveloping some relics, with an inscription in Latin, purporting that the ancient church having been destroyed by fire, in 1188, search was made for the relics of St. John of Beverley, which having been found, his bones were again deposited near the altar. It is not known at what precise period the present church was built, though probably it was in the early part of the reign of Henry III.; it is a venerable and spacious cruciform structure, in the early, decorated, and later styles of English architecture, with two lofty towers at the west end. Though combining these several styles, it exhibits in each of them such purity of composition, correctness of detail, and elegance of execution, as to raise it to an architectural equality with the finest of the cathedral churches, to which it is inferior only in magnitude. The west front is in the best character of the later style, and the nave and transepts are of the early English, of which the fronts of the north and south transepts are pure specimens. The choir is partly in the decorated style, with an exquisitely beautiful altar, screen, and rood-loft, which, though unequalled in elegance of design and richness of detail, has been concealed by one of very inferior composition, put up within the last century: the east window is decorated with stained glass, which has been collected from the other windows, and skilfully arranged: near the altar is the seat of refuge, formed of one entire stone, with a Latin inscription, offering an asylum to all criminals who should flee to this sanctuary; and on an ancient tablet are the portraits of St. John of Beverley and King Athelstan, with a legend recording the monarch's grant of freedom to the town. In the choir there is a superb and finely executed monument to the memory of one of the Percies, and in the north transept is a fine altar-tomb, both in the decorated style. The living of St. Mary's is a vicarage, with those of St. Nicholas and Holme on the Wolds united, rated in the king's books at £14. 2. 8., and in the patronage of the Crown. The church is a highly interesting structure, and contains fine portions in the various styles of architecture, from the Norman to the later English: the towers at the western end are finely pierced, and the octagonal turrets flanking the nave are strikingly elegant: the roof of the chancel, which is in the decorated style, is richly groined, and the piers and arches are well proportioned; there are some interesting monuments, and a fine font in the later style. The churches of St. Martin and St. Nicholas have long since gone to decay. There are places of worship for Baptists, the Society of Friends, Independents, and Primitive and Wesleyan Methodists.

The grammar school is of uncertain origin, though it appears to have existed at a remote period: the fixed endowment is not more than £10 per annum, which was bequeathed in 1652, by Dr. Metcalf; this is augmented with a donation of £20 per annum by the members for the borough, and one of £70 per annum by the corporation, in whom the management is vested; these sums are paid as a salary to the master, who receives also 40s. per annum from each of the scholars, and has the privilege of taking boarders. There are three scholarships of £6. 13. 4. per annum each, founded by Dr. Metcalf; one of £6 per annum by William Coates, Esq., in 1681; two of £8, at St. John's College, Cambridge, founded by Dr. William Lacey, in 1670; one of £20 at Corpus Christi, or St. John's, Colleges, Cambridge, founded by Dr. Green, Bishop of Lincoln, in 1778, who bequeathed £1000 for that purpose, or to the charity school; and one of £5 by Margaret Ferrer, to a student at the latter college. The Blue-coat charity school was established by subscription, in 1709, for the maintenance, clothing, and education of poor children; the annual income, arising from subsequent benefactions, is at present about £126: there are ten boys in this establishment, with each of whom, on leaving school, an apprentice fee of £3 is given. There is also a school, founded in 1804, by Mr. James Graves, who endowed it with stock in the Navy five per cents., producing £84 per annum, in which two hundred children of both sexes are instructed, the boys on the Lancasterian, and the girls on Dr. Bell's, system. Almshouses for four aged widows, each of whom receives 10s. per month, were founded and endowed by Mr. Thwaite Fox, in 1636. Almshouses also for thirty-two widows, who receive a weekly allowance of 5s. each, were founded by Mrs. Anne Routh, in 1721, and endowed with estates now producing £675 per annum; the matron receives two shillings and sixpence, and two nurses two shillings each, per week, in addition to their regular allowance. An hospital, containing fourteen apartments, was founded in 1712, by Mr. Charles Warton, who endowed it with property now producing about £400 per annum, for fourteen widows, who have a weekly allowance of 4s. each. There are also unendowed almshouses, erected by the corporation, comprising twenty-six tenements, the occupiers of which receive a portion of various bequests for charitable uses. Sir Michael Warton, Knt., in 1724, bequeathed £4000, as a perpetual fund, for keeping the minster in repair; and Mr. Robert Stephenson, in 1711, left an estate, now producing from £70 to £100 per annum, for the maintenance of "Non-conformist preaching ministers." Alfred of Beverley, a monkish historian of the twelfth century, is supposed to have been born here; Dr. John Alcock, Bishop of Ely, and founder of Jesus' College, Cambridge; Dr. Fisher, Bishop of Rochester, a martyr to his religious tenets in the reign of Henry VIII.; and Dr. Green, Bishop of Lincoln, an elegant scholar, and one of the writers of the Athenian Letters, published by Lord Hardwicke; were natives of this town.

BEVERSTONE, a parish in the upper division of the hundred of BERKELEY, county of GLOUCESTER, 2 miles (W. N. W.) from Tetbury, containing 160 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, with the perpetual curacy of Kingscote annexed, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Gloucester, rated in the king's books at £30, and in the patronage of the Crown. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. One of the sources of the river Avon is in this parish, in which also there are quarries of stone used for roofing houses. Here are the remains of a moated castle, built by Thomas, Lord

Berkeley, in the reign of Edward III., which, after repeated sieges, was taken and burnt in the early part of the parliamentary war. It is a noble ruin overgrown with ivy; and its chapel, still perfect, has a beautiful arched roof, a fine window, and an elegant shrine of tabernacle-work on the right hand side of the altar.

BEWALDETH, a joint township with Snittlegarth, in the parish of TORPENHOW, ALLERDALE ward, below Derwent, county of CUMBERLAND, 6½ miles (N. E. by E.) from Cockermouth, containing, with Snittlegarth, 97 inhabitants.

BEWCASTLE, a parish in ESKDALE ward, county of CUMBERLAND, comprising the townships of Bailie, Belbank, Bewcastle, and Nixons, and containing 1218 inhabitants, of which number, 188 are in the township of Bewcastle, 19 miles (N. E.) from Carlisle. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Carlisle, rated in the king's books at £2, endowed with £800 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Carlisle. The church is dedicated to St. Cuthbert. In the churchyard there is a curious antique cross, composed of a single stone, bearing inscriptions which have been variously interpreted, and some curious devices, which are supposed to be emblematical of the conversion of the Danes to Christianity, and commemorative of the death and interment of one of their kings. There is a place of worship for Presbyterians. The rivers Leven, or Line, and Irthing, have their sources in this parish. Limestone, coal, and lead-ore are obtained here. In the 7th of Edward I. license was granted to John Swinburn to hold a market and a fair. There are two schools in the parish, which are partly supported by subscription. This was a Roman station, of which there are some traces, and many coins, inscribed stones, and other relics of Roman occupation have been found: the Maiden-way passed through the parish. Bueth Castle, a fortress built by Bueth, Lord of Gilsland, soon after the Conquest, was occupied by a border garrison in the reign of Elizabeth, and, in 1641, was demolished by the parliamentarians: some vestiges are still visible, and there are various relics of antiquity in the vicinity, which abounds also with picturesque scenery. There are two mineral springs, one with a sulphureous impregnation, the other chalybeate; and at Low Grange, a quarter of a mile to the east of the church, is a petrifying spring.

BEWDLEY, a borough, market town, and chapelry, in the parish of RIBBESFORD, having separate jurisdiction, locally in the lower division of the hundred of Dodding-tree, county of WORCESTER, 14 miles (N. W.) from Worcester, and 122 (N. W.) from London, containing 3725 inhabitants. This place, from the pleasantness of its situation, and the beauty of the surrounding scenery, anciently obtained the appellation of Beau lieu, of which its present name is a corruption. In the 13th of Henry IV., a petition was presented to parliament by the men of "Bristowe" and Gloucester, praying that they might navigate the river Severn without being subject to new taxes levied by the men of Beaudley. At this time

Seal and Arms. The beauty of the surrounding scenery, anciently obtained the appellation of Beau lieu, of which its present name is a corruption. In the 13th of Henry IV., a petition was presented to parliament by the men of "Bristowe" and Gloucester, praying that they might navigate the river Severn without being subject to new taxes levied by the men of Beaudley. At this time

Bewdley appears to have enjoyed many privileges, among which was that of sanctuary for persons who had shed blood: it was formerly extra-parochial, but, by letters patent granted by Henry VI., was annexed to the parish of Ribbesford. Edward IV. gave the inhabitants a charter of incorporation in the twelfth year of his reign; and Henry VII. erected a palace here for his son Arthur, in which that prince was married by proxy to Catherine of Arragon, and dying soon after at Ludlow, his corpse was removed to this town, where it lay in state previously to interment in the cathedral church of Worcester. Bewdley, formerly included in the marches of Wales, was, by an act of parliament passed in the reign of Henry VIII., added to the county of Worcester. During the civil war in the reign of Charles I., that monarch, who had been driven from Oxford by the parliamentary forces, retired with the remnant of his army to this town, where he encamped, in order to keep the river Severn between him and the enemy. Whilst staying here, he was attacked by a party of Scottish cavalry, when several of his officers, and seventy men, were made prisoners. In these attacks the palace was greatly damaged, and was subsequently taken down; the site is now occupied by a modern dwelling-house, and not a single vestige of the original edifice can, with certainty, be traced. The more ancient part of the town was built at a greater distance from the river, and the street called Load-street is supposed to have been the place where the inhabitants loaded their boats; there were formerly four gates, two of which were standing in 1811, but they have since been entirely demolished.

Bewdley is beautifully situated on the western bank of the river Severn, over which a light and elegant stone bridge was erected in 1797: the main street, leading from the bridge, diverges right and left, but extends furthest in the latter direction; it is indifferently paved and not lighted. The houses are in general well built, and of respectable appearance; and several of them, erected at different elevations on the slope of the hill rising from the bank of the river, with well cultivated gardens, and tastefully disposed pleasure grounds, present an appearance truly picturesque: the inhabitants are amply supplied with water; the air is salubrious, and the surrounding scenery richly and pleasingly diversified. Some years since, Bewdley was a place of considerable trade, having two markets and four fairs, and for a long period was the mart from which the neighbouring towns were supplied with grocery and other articles of consumption; but in consequence of the recent construction of a canal from Stourport to Stourbridge, that portion of its trade has been diverted to other towns. The manufacture of woollen caps, known by the name of Dutch caps, was introduced here in consequence of the plague prevailing at Monmouth, where it had previously been carried on, and, being encouraged by legislative enactments in the reign of Elizabeth, it continued for some time to flourish, but has now declined, and the trade is principally in malt, the tanning of leather, and the making of combs. The market is on Saturday: fairs are held on April 23rd, July 26th, and December 10th and 11th. The government of the borough, by charter of incorporation granted by James I., and confirmed by Queen Anne, is vested in a bailiff, high steward, recorder, deputy-recorder (who is usually the town-clerk), and twelve capital burgesses. The bailiff, who is also coroner and clerk of the market, the late bailiff, and the recorder, are justices of the peace: the freedom of the borough is obtained only by gift. The corporation hold a court of session annually, in which the bailiff, the late bailiff, and the recorder preside; a court of record for all pleas, and for the recovery of debts under £100, in which the bailiff, or, in his absence, a deputy appointed by him from among the capital burgesses, and the recorder, preside; and a court leet, at which constables and other officers are appointed. The town hall is a neat building of stone, erected in 1818; the front is decorated with six square pilasters supporting a pediment, in which are the arms of the family of Lyttelton; under the hall is the entrance into the market-place, which has an arcade on each side for stalls, and an open area in the centre; at the extremity are two small prisons, one for malefactors, the other for debtors. The elective franchise was conferred by James I., since which time Bewdley has returned one member to parliament: the right of election is vested exclusively in the bailiff and burgesses, thirteen in number; the bailiff is the returning officer.

The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Salop, and diocese of Hereford, endowed with £8 per annum, the revenue of a dissolved chantry which formerly existed here, and in the patronage of the Rector of Ribbesford. The chapel, a neat stone edifice at the upper end of the street leading from the bridge, was erected in 1748, by means of a subscription among the inhabitants, aided by a brief, and the Rev. Thomas Knight, rector of Ribbesford, principally contributed to the erection of the tower. There are places of worship for Baptists, the Society of Friends, Wesleyan Methodists, and Unitarians. The free grammar school, founded and endowed in 1591, by William Monnox, or Mormoye, and further endowed in 1599, by Humphrey Hill, was made a royal foundation by charter of James I.; the endowment, augmented by subsequent benefactions, produces a salary of £26 per annum to the master, who has also a house rent-free. A collection of books, the gift of the Rev. Thomas Wigan, is deposited in the school, under the care of the master, and the rector of Ribbesford, for the use of the clergy and laity in the neighbourhood. The Blue-coat school, for thirty boys and thirty girls, is supported by subscription. Almshouses for six aged men, founded by Mr. Sayer, of Nettlestead, in the county of Suffolk, and endowed with £30 per annum, were rebuilt in 1763, by Sir Edward Winnington, Bart., member for the borough. Burlton's almshouses, for fourteen aged women, were founded and endowed in 1645; and eight other almshouses were erected and moderately endowed in 1693, by Mr. Thomas Cook. John Tombes, a celebrated biblical critic of the seventeenth century; and Richard Willis, Bishop of Winchester, and principal founder of the Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge, were natives of this town.

BEWERLEY, a township in that part of the parish of RIPON which is in the lower division of the wapentake of CLARO, West riding of the county of YORK, 11½ miles (W. S. W.) from Ripon, containing 1408 inhabitants. The vicinity abounds with valuable lead mines, which are worked to a considerable extent

BEWICK (NEW), a township in the parish of EGLINGHAM, northern division of COQUETDALE ward, county of NORTHUMBERLAND, $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S.E.) from Wooler, containing 93 inhabitants.

BEWICK (OLD), a township in the parish of EGLINGHAM, northern division of COQUETDALE ward, county of NORTHUMBERLAND, 7 miles (S.E. by E.) from Wooler, containing 247 inhabitants. Here was anciently a chapel, dedicated to the Holy Trinity, the ruins of which are situated a little to the north-west of the village. On Bewick hill is an encampment of a semicircular form, with a double rampart; and at Hareup-burn, half a mile eastward, is another, supposed to have been an outwork: they were probably constructed by the ancient Britons, and were afterwards occupied by the Romans.

BEXHILL, a parish in the hundred of BEXHILL, rape of HASTINGS, county of SUSSEX, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. by S.) from Hastings, containing 1907 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Lewes, and diocese of Chichester, rated in the king's books at £24. 10. 2½., and in the patronage of the Bishop of Chichester. The church is dedicated to St. Peter. The hundred of Bexhill is a franchise in the enjoyment of privileges similar to those possessed by the franchise of Battle. There are several chalybeate springs in the parish.

BEXINGTON, a hamlet (formerly a parish) in the liberty of BINDON, Blandford (South) division, though locally in the parish of Abbotsbury, hundred of Uggscombe, Dorchester division, of the county of DORSET, 1 mile (N.W.) from Abbotsbury, with which the population is returned. The living, which was a rectory, was, in 1451, annexed to that of Puncknoll; and the church, which was dedicated to St. Giles, and stood on the sea-shore, not far from the ruins of Abbotsbury castle, has long been desecrated.

BEXLEY, a parish partly in the hundred of LESSNESS, but chiefly in the hundred of RUXLEY, lathe of SUTTON at HONE, county of KENT, 3 miles (W.) from Dartford, containing 2311 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the exempt deanery of Shoreham, the whole of which is within the peculiar jurisdiction of the Archbishop of Canterbury, rated in the king's books at £13. 4. 7., and in the patronage of Viscount Sidney. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. In the reign of Elizabeth, the manor belonged to Camden, the celebrated antiquary, who bequeathed it in trust to the Master and Fellows of University College, Oxford, for the foundation and endowment of a professorship in history. A National school for the instruction of sixty boys and sixty girls was established in 1809, and is supported by voluntary subscription and an endowment of £8 per annum: there are also almshouses for twelve persons. The Right Hon. Nicholas Vansittart, on retiring from the chancellorship of the Exchequer, was created Baron Bexley, March 1st, 1823.

BEXTON, a township in the parish of KNUTSFORD, hundred of BUCKLOW, county palatine of CHESTER, 1 mile (S.S.E.) from Nether Knutsford, containing 69 inhabitants.

BEXWELL, a parish in the hundred of CLACKCLOSE, county of NORFOLK, 1 mile (E.) from Downham Market, containing 63 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Norfolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £7. 11. 8., and in the patronage of the Bishop of Ely. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is built of rag-stone obtained in the vicinity. Henry III. granted to William de Bexwell permission to hold a market on Thursday, and a fair on Whit-Monday.

BEYTON, otherwise BEIGHTON, a parish in the hundred of THEDWESTRY, county of SUFFOLK, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. by S.) from Bury St. Edmund's containing 238 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Sudbury, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £4. 3. 9., and in the patronage of the Crown. The church is dedicated to All Saints.

BIBURY, a parish comprising the chapelry of Winson, in the hundred of BRADLEY, and the tythings of Ablington and Arlington, in the hundred of BRIGHTWELL'S BARROW, county of GLOUCESTER, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N.W.) from Fairford, and containing 990 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, within the jurisdiction of the peculiar of the vicarage of Bibury, rated in the king's books at £13. 1. 5½., and in the patronage of E. Creswell, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. Thomas Tryon, author of a curious work, entitled "The Way to Health, Long Life and Happiness," published in 1691, was a native of this place.

BICESTER, a market town and parish in the hundred of PLOUGHLEY, county of OXFORD, $12\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N.E. by N.) from Oxford, and 55 (N.W. by W.) from London, containing 2544 inhabitants. This place, by the Saxons called Burenceaster and Bernaceaster, both implying a fortified place, is supposed to derive its name either from its founder, Birinus, a canonized Saxon prelate, or from Bernwood, a forest in Buckinghamshire, on the verge of which it is situated. A priory for canons of the Benedictine order was founded in 1182, and dedicated to St. Eadburg, by Gilbert Basset, Baron of Haddington, and his wife, Oglean Courtney, the revenue of which, at the dissolution, was £167. 2. 10. In 1355, a royal license was granted to Nicholas Jurdan, warden of the chapel of St. John the Baptist, for the establishment of an hospital for poor and infirm people, but the design does not appear to have been carried into execution. During the civil war in the reign of Charles I., the inhabitants suffered by repeated exactions levied on them by both parties, and, in 1643, a skirmish took place, in which the royalists were defeated and driven through the town. Bicester, which is divided into the townships of King's-End, and Market-End, part of the latter being in the parish of Caversfield, is situated in a valley, on the banks of a tributary stream which falls into the river Cherwell at Islip; it is handsomely built, and amply supplied with water. Two book clubs have been established, one by the clergy resident in the town and neighbourhood, the other by the inhabitants. The manufacture of leather slippers is extensively carried on, and the female inhabitants are employed in making bone lace: the town is noted for excellent malt liquor. The market is on Friday; and fairs are held on the Friday in Easter week, the first Friday in June, August 5th, and the third Friday in December; there are also statute fairs on the first three Fridays after Michaelmas. The county magistrates hold their petty sessions here for the district. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford, rated in the king's books at £16, and in the patronage of Sir G. P. Turner, Bart. The church, dedicated to St. Eadburg, was rebuilt in 1400, on the site of the former edifice: it is a spacious structure with a lofty square tower; the interior contains many interesting monuments and some antique sculptures. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. A school for the instruction and clothing of thirty boys is supported partly by subscription, and partly by the dividends on £1000 stock, given in 1811 by Mr. Walker, in fulfilment of the intention of his deceased father, out of which, £14 per annum is given in moieties to a Sunday school in connexion with the established church, and to a similar institution for the children of dissenters. Lands producing £200 per annum, and a few minor charitable bequests, are appropriated to the relief of the poor. In making some excavations, in 1819, the foundations of the conventual buildings belonging to the priory, a vast mass of sculptured fragments, pieces of painted glass, and other relics, were discovered.

BICKENHALL, a parish in the hundred of ABDICK and BULSTONE, county of SOMERSET, $5\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. E. by E.) from Taunton, containing 215 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to the rectory of Staple-Fitzpaine, in the archdeaconry of Taunton, and diocese of Bath and Wells.

BICKENHILL (CHURCH), a parish in the Solihull division of the hundred of HEMLINGFORD, county of WARWICK, 4 miles (N. E.) from Solihull, containing, with Lyndon and Marston Quarters, 648 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Coventry, and diocese of Lichfield and Coventry, rated in the king's books at £7. 17. 3., and endowed with £1000 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Earl of Aylesford. The church is dedicated to St. Peter. The Warwick and Birmingham canal passes in the vicinity. Here was anciently a castle, the site of which is now occupied by a farm-house; and a beacon formerly stood where the church now is.

BICKER, a parish in the wapentake of KIRTON, parts of HOLLAND, county of LINCOLN, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (N. E. by N.) from Donington, containing 627 inhabitants; but, with the extra-parochial liberties of Coppin-Sike and Ferry-Corner, 644. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £15, and in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Lincoln. The church is dedicated to St. Swithin. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. The school has a small endowment for the instruction of children.

BICKERSTAFFE, a township in the parish of ORMSKIRK, hundred of WEST DERBY, county palatine of LANCASTER, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. E.) from Ormskirk, containing 1212 inhabitants. Coal is obtained in this township.

BICKERTON, a township in the parish of MALPAS, higher division of the hundred of BROXTON, county palatine of CHESTER, $4\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. N. E.) from Malpas, containing 370 inhabitants. On the summit of a hill, in this township, there is an intrenchment called Maiden Castle.

BICKERTON, a township in the parish of ROTHBURY, western division of COQUETDALE ward, county of NORTHUMBERLAND, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. by S.) from Rothbury, containing 18 inhabitants. Here is a school with an endowment of about £20 per annum.

BICKERTON, a township in the parish of BILTON, ainsty of the city, and East riding of the county, of YORK, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. N. E.) from Wetherby, containing 149 inhabitants.

BICKINGTON, a parish in the hundred of TEIGN-BRIDGE, county of DEVON, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. E.) from Ashburton, containing 301 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to the vicarage of Ashburton, in the peculiar jurisdiction of the Dean and Chapter of Exeter. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. A fair for cattle is held on May 14th. There are two small endowed schools.

BICKINGTON (ABBOT'S), a parish in the hundred of BLACK TORRINGTON, county of DEVON, 9 miles (S. W. by W.) from Great Torrington, containing 75 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Totness, and diocese of Exeter, endowed with £200 private benefaction, £600 royal bounty, and £300 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of Lord Rolle. The church, dedicated to St. James, has some remains of ancient stained glass. Limestone, a kind of hard blue stone used in building, and marble, are obtained in the neighbourhood.

BICKINGTON (HIGH), a parish in the hundred of NORTH TAWTON with WINKLEY, county of DEVON, $7\frac{1}{4}$ miles (E. by N.) from Great Torrington, containing 748 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Barnstaple, and diocese of Exeter, rated in the king's books at £29. 7. 6., and in the patronage of the Rev. W. Stawell. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. A school was endowed with £10 per annum by Gertrude Pyncombe, in 1740.

BICKLEIGH, a parish in the hundred of HAYRIDGE, county of DEVON, $4\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. by W.) from Tiverton, containing 273 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Exeter, rated in the king's books at £18. 4. 9½., and in the patronage of Sir H. Carew, Bart. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. The navigable river Exe here receives a small stream called the Dart, and is crossed by a bridge near the point of junction. Bamfylde Moore Carew, styled King of the Beggars, was born here, in 1693, of a respectable family, his father being rector of the parish; and hither he returned, at the close of his extraordinary wanderings, where he died in 1758.

BICKLEIGH, a parish in the hundred of ROBOROUGH, county of DEVON, 7 miles (N. N. E.) from Plymouth, containing 457 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, with the perpetual curacy of Sheepstor annexed, in the archdeaconry of Totness, and diocese of Exeter, rated in the king's books at £11. 4. 7., and in the patronage of Sir Ralph Franco, Bart. The Plymouth railway passes along this parish. Here is a charity school; also an almshouse for six widows.

BICKLEY, a township in the parish of MALPAS, higher division of the hundred of BROXTON, county palatine of CHESTER, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles (E. N. E.) from Malpas, containing 431 inhabitants. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. On the 18th of July, 1657, about a quarter of an acre of elevated ground, covered with full-grown trees, sunk suddenly with a thundering noise to such a depth below the surface of the surrounding ground, that even the summits of the trees were not visible, from their total immersion in water: the water has long been dried up, and the chasm, called the Barrel-Fall, from being situated on the Barrel farm, is now quite dry. In a field adjoining this farm, two tablets of copper, bearing an inscription importing that certain privileges were thereby granted by Trajan to some veteran soldiers serving in this island, and now deposited in the British Museum, were discovered in 1812.

BICKMERSH, a hamlet in that part of the parish of WELFORD which is in the Stratford division of the hundred of BARLICHWAY, county of WARWICK, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. by E.) from Alcester, containing, with Little Dorsington, 61 inhabitants.

BICKNELL, county of SOMERSET.—See BICKEN-HALL.

BICKNOLLER, a parish in the hundred of WILLITON and FREEMANNERS, county of SOMERSET, $13\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. by N.) from Bridg-water, containing 251 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Taunton, and diocese of Bath and Wells, endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £400 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Wells. Two fortifications, named Trendle Castle and Turk's Castle, together with the ruins of a beacon, occupy the summit of an eminence near the village; and a variety of Roman coins has been found in the vicinity.

BICKNOR, a parish in the hundred of EYHORNE, lathe of AYLESFORD, county of KENT, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. W.) from Milton, containing 53 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Canterbury, rated in the king's books at £5. 10., and in the patronage of the Crown. The church is dedicated to St. James.

BICKNOR (ENGLISH), a parish in the hundred of St. BRIAVELLS, county of GLOUCESTER, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N.) from Coleford, containing 534 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Gloucester, rated in the king's books at £13. 6. 8., and in the patronage of the Provost and Fellows of Queen's College, Oxford. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, stands within the area of an ancient fortification, the fosse belonging to which may still be traced. This parish lies within the forest of Dean, on the eastern bank of the Wye, opposite to Welch-Bicknor, and contains mines of coal and iron: the neighbourhood produces a considerable quantity of apples, particularly of that kind from which styre cider is made.

BICKNOR (WELCH), a parish in the lower division of the hundred of SKENFRETH, county of MONMOUTH, locally in the lower division of the hundred of Wormelow, county of Hereford, 7 miles (S. by W.) from Ross, containing 113 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Hereford, rated in the king's books at £4. 6. 8., and in the patronage of the Crown. The church, dedicated to St. Margaret, contains an antique chalice, said to have been brought into Europe with the Saracens; the lid is of beaten silver, and it bears other evidences of high antiquity. At Courtfield, a private mansion about half a mile off, there is a Roman Catholic chapel; and tradition relates that Henry V. was nursed there, under the care of the Countess of Salisbury, who, according to the same authority, is represented by a recumbent stone figure in the church. The parish is almost surrounded by the river Wye.

BICKTON, a chapelry in the parish of St. CHAD, within the liberty of the borough of SHREWSBURY, county of SALOP, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N.W. by W.) from Shrewsbury. The population is returned with the parish. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Salop, and diocese of Lichfield and Coventry, endowed with £200 royal bounty, and £200 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Rev. Thomas Stedman. The navigable river Severn runs through the chapelry, which is also intersected by the Roman Watling-street.

BICTON, a parish in the eastern division of the hundred of BUDLEIGH, county of DEVON, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. S. W.) from Sidmouth, containing, with a portion of the tything of Rawleigh, 204 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Exeter, rated in the king's books at £12. 13. 4., and in the patronage of Lord Rolle. The church is dedicated to the Holy Trinity. According to Mr. Polwhele, the possessor of the manor of Bicton is obliged to "find a county gaol."

BIDBOROUGH, a parish in the hundred of WASH-LINGSTONE, lathe of AYLESFORD, county of KENT, 3 miles (S. W.) from Tonbridge, containing 192 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Rochester, rated in the king's books at £5. 4. 4 $\frac{1}{2}$., endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Rev. W. Gay. The church, dedicated to St. Lawrence, has a wide Norman doorway. There are some chalybeate springs in the parish.

BIDDENDEN, a parish in the hundred of BARCLAY, lathe of SCRAY, county of KENT, 5 miles (E. by N.) from Cranbrooke, containing 1544 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Canterbury, rated in the king's books at £35, and in the patronage of the Archbishop of Canterbury. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a fine structure in the later style of English architecture, with an embattled tower and turret. This place was once famous for its clothing trade, now entirely decayed. Fairs for Welch cattle are held on Old Lady-day and November 8th. John Mayne, in 1566, bequeathed a sum for the erection of a school-house, and endowed it with a rent-charge of £20. 3. 4., which is applied for teaching twelve boys. An annual distribution of bread and cheese to the poor parishioners takes place on Easter-Sunday, the expense of which is defrayed from the rental of about twenty acres of land, the reputed bequest of the Biddenden Maids, two sisters of the name of Chulkhurst, who, according to an unauthenticated tradition, were born joined together by the hips and shoulders, in the year 1100; and having lived in that state to the age of thirty-four, died within about six hours of each other. To perpetuate the remembrance of this extraordinary circumstance, cakes, bearing a corresponding impression of the figures of two females, are given, on the same day, to all who apply. Hasted, coinciding in the general opinion of the fabulousness of this tale, states that the print on the cakes is of modern origin, and considers the land to have been given by two maidens named Preston.

BIDDENHAM, a parish in the hundred of WILLEY, county of BEDFORD, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. by N.) from Bedford, containing 393 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Bedford, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £8, endowed with £400 private benefaction, and £600 royal bounty, and in the patronage of Viscount Hampden. The church is dedicated to St. James.

BIDDESCOTE, a township in that part of the parish of TAMWORTH which is in the southern division of the hundred of OFFLOW, county of STAFFORD, 1 mile (S. S. W.) from Tamworth, containing 70 inhabitants.

BIDDESHAM, a parish in the hundred of BEMPSTONE, county of SOMERSET, 3 miles (W. by S.) from Axbridge, containing 136 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the peculiar jurisdiction of the Dean of Wells, and in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter thereof.

BIDDESTONE (ST. NICHOLAS and ST. PETER), a parish in the hundred of CHIPPENHAM, county of WILTS, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W.) from Chippenham, containing 414 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Wilts, and diocese of Salisbury, rated in the king's books at £2. 18. 4., and in the patronage of the Warden and Fellows of Winchester College. The church contains a monument to the memory of Edmund Smith, A.M., a poet of some repute, who died in this neighbourhood in 1709.

BIDDLESDON, a parish in the hundred and county of BUCKINGHAM, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. E. by E.) from Brackley, containing 175 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Buckingham, and diocese of Lincoln, endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of Mrs. Verney. The church is dedicated to St. Margaret. An abbey of Cistercian monks was founded here in 1147, the revenue of which, at the dissolution, was £142. 1. 3. In 1315, Edward II. granted to the convent a market on Monday, and a fair on St. Margaret's day.

BIDDLESTON, a township in the parish of ALLENTON, western division of COQUETDALE ward, county of NORTHUMBERLAND, $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W. by W.) from Rothbury, containing 166 inhabitants. The manor was granted, in 1272, to Sir Walter Selby, Knt., and has ever since continued in the possession of his descendants. King James held this ancient family in such high estimation that he bestowed the honour of knighthood upon five of its members. The manor-house, a commodious stone building of modern erection, occupies the summit of a gentle declivity, commanding, on the south, a fine prospect of the vale of Coquet.

BIDDULPH, a parish in the northern division of the hundred of PIREHILL, county of STAFFORD, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. E. by S.) from Congleton, containing 1666 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Stafford, and diocese of Lichfield and Coventry, rated in the king's books at £4. 9. 8., endowed with £400 private benefaction, £200 royal bounty, and £900 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of J. Bateman, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Lawrence. On Biddulph moor there is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. The parish contains collieries, manufactories for cotton and earthenware, and iron-works. It is in the honour of Tutbury, duchy of Lancaster, and within the jurisdiction of a court of pleas held at Tutbury every third Tuesday, for the recovery of debts under 40s. Here is a school with an endowment of about £12 per annum.

BIDEFORD, a sea-port, incorporated market town, and parish, having separate jurisdiction, locally in the hundred of Shebbear, county of DEVON, 39 miles (N. W. by W.) from Exeter, and 201 (W. by S.) from London, containing 4058 inhabitants. This place, called also Bytheford, of which its modern appellation is a variation, derives its name from being situated near an ancient ford on the river Torridge. It was a town of some importance in the time of the Saxons: in early records it is styled a borough, and in the reigns of Edward I. and II. returned members to parliament; but the burgesses having pleaded inability to supply the usual pecuniary allowance to their representatives, this distinction was withdrawn. In 1271, Richard de Grenville, to whose ancestor Bideford was granted in the reign of William Rufus, obtained for it a market and a fair; and, in 1574, Queen Elizabeth incorporated the inhabitants, and made the town a free borough. From that time it rapidly increased as a place of trade, and the expeditions of Sir Walter Raleigh to Virginia, and of Sir Richard Grenville to Carolina, established the basis of its foreign commerce. During the civil war in the reign of Charles I., two small forts were erected on the banks of the river, and a third at Appledore, which were garrisoned in the interest of the parliament, until they were taken for the king by Col. Digby, after the battle of Torrington, September 2nd, 1643, who soon after entered this town, which had been evacuated by the parliamentary troops. From this period till the beginning of the eighteenth century, Bideford was in its highest prosperity. The weaving of silk was introduced in 1650, and, after the revocation of the edict of Nantes, in 1685, many French Protestants settled in the town, and established the manufacture of silk and cotton; a great quantity of wool was imported from Spain, and, in 1699, its trade with Newfoundland was inferior only to that of London and Exeter: from 1700 to 1755, the imports of tobacco exceeded those of every port, except London. The town is situated on the river Torridge, which in spring tides rises to the height of eighteen feet above the level of high water mark: the greater part is built on the acclivity of its western bank, and is connected with that on the eastern side by a noble stone bridge of twenty-four arches, of sufficient span to allow free passage for vessels of sixty tons' burden. The bridge was erected in the early part of the fourteenth century, by a subscription raised in the counties of Devon and Cornwall, under the auspices of Grandison, Bishop of Exeter, who, being influenced by a dream of Gornard, the parish priest, granted indulgences to all who should contribute to the work: an estate, called the Bridge estate, for keeping it in repair, is vested in trustees, who are a body corporate, and have a common seal. The town consists principally of two spacious streets, well paved and lighted; the houses are in general indifferently built, many of them being of timber and brick, plastered over, though there are some of more respectable appearance: the inhabitants are amply supplied with water. dore renders Bideford a place of resort for company frequenting that watering place: there are assembly rooms on the quay. The port, including within its jurisdiction the harbours of Clovelly and Hartland and a convenient station for wind-bound vessels, carries on a considerable colonial and coasting trade: the exports are sails, cordage, and articles of general supply to the fisheries of Newfoundland, oak-bark to Ireland, apples to Scotland, earthenware to Wales, and corn and flour to Bristol; the imports are timber from America and the Baltic, and coal from Bristol and Wales. The river, in spring tides is navigable for vessels of three hundred tons' burden, as far as the bridge, two miles and a half above which it is connected by means of a sea-lock, with the Torrington canal. The quay, one thousand two hundred feet in length, and of proportionate breadth, has been greatly improved by the corporation; it is very convenient for loading and unloading, and is accessible to ships of considerable burden. The number of vessels belonging to the port, according to the return of 1828, is ninety-nine, averaging a burden of ninety tons', the majority of which are employed in the coasting trade: there are also one hundred and sixty licensed boats engaged in the fishery. Ship-building is extensively carried on: during the late war, several frigates were launched at this port, and there are eight or ten dock-yards, in which smaller vessels are built. The principal articles of manufacture are ropes, sails, and common earthenware; there are also several tan-yards and a small lace manufactory. The market days are, Tuesday for grain, and Saturday for provisions: fairs are held on February 14th, July 18th, and November 13th. The government, by charter of incorporation granted in the 16th of Elizabeth, and confirmed and extended in the 7th of James I., is vested in a mayor, recorder, seven aldermen, and ten burgesses, assisted by a town-clerk, two serjeants at mace, and subordinate officers. The mayor (who is chosen by the corporation on the 21st of September), the recorder, and one of the aldermen (who is annually elected for that purpose), are justices of the peace; a chief constable, and twelve petty constables, are appointed annually by the mayor. The corporation hold a court of general session quarterly, a court of petty session monthly, and a court of record every third week, for the recovery of debts to any amount. The town-hall, erected in 1698, is a neat and commodious building; underneath are two prisons, one for malefactors, and the other for debtors: a handsome hall was erected in 1758, for the trustees of the Bridge estate, with a school-room adjoining.

The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Barnstaple, and diocese of Exeter, rated in the king's books at £27. 7. 6., and in the patronage of Lewis William Buck, Esq. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a spacious cruciform structure, in the early style of English architecture: within are a handsome stone screen, a Norman font, and some interesting monuments. There are places of worship for Baptists, Independents, and Wesleyan Methodists. The free grammar school is of remote foundation: it was rebuilt in 1657, and, in 1689, was endowed by Mrs. Susannah Stucley, with an estate of £200 value; a good house was purchased for the master with money arising from the sale of timber on the estate: there are at present only three boys on the foundation, who are nominated by the corporation. A charity school for reading, writing, and arithmetic, is supported by the trustees of the Bridge estate; and a National school, in which one hundred and fifty boys, and one hundred and fifty girls are taught, besides other schools for the children of dissenters, are supported by subscription. Almshouses in Maiden-street, for seven poor families, were erected in 1646, by Mr. John Strange, alderman of Bideford; and an hospital in the Old town, for twelve poor families, was built pursuant to the will of Mr. Henry Amory, who died in 1663. In 1810, Mrs. Margaret Newcomen left a considerable fund for poor dissenters, in this and the neighbouring parishes. Mines of culm and black mineral paint are found in the vicinity. Sir Richard Grenville, who was a native of this town, distinguished himself in 1591, in an action fought near the Island of Flores, with a Spanish fleet, consisting of fifty-three sail, and ten thousand men, having only his own ship, and one hundred and eighty men; notwithstanding this inferiority of force, he gallantly repulsed the enemy fifteen times, destroyed four of their ships and upwards of one thousand men, nor did he surrender till he had spent all his ammunition, and then only on honourable terms. Thomas Stucley, an eccentric character, the supposed original of Sterne's Captain Shandy; Dr John Shebbeare, a noted political writer, born in 1709; the Rev. Zachary Mudge, a learned divine, and master of the grammar school; were also natives of this place. Hervey, author of the "Meditations," was curate here from 1738 till 1742.

BIDFORD, a parish (formerly a market town) in the Stratford division of the hundred of BARLICHWAY, county of WARWICK, 4 miles (S. by E.) from Alcester, comprising the hamlets of Barton, Broom, and Marclift, and containing 1219 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Worcester, rated in the king's books at £7. 10. 7½., endowed with £800 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of Lady Skipwith. The church is dedicated to St. Lawrence. This place stands on the northern bank of the navigable river Avon, and the river Arrow runs through the parish, in which there are several stone quarries. The market was held on Friday, but it has long been discontinued.

BIDICK (SOUTH), a township in the parish of HOUGHTON le SPRING, northern division of EASINGTON ward, county palatine of DURHAM, 6½ miles (S. W. by W.) from Sunderland, containing 167 inhabitants. The unfortunate James Drummond, commonly called Duke of Perth, sought an asylum here after the rebellion of 1745, where he lived concealed until his death in 1782.

BIDSTONE, a parish in the lower division of the hundred of WIRRAL, county palatine of CHESTER, comprising the chapelry of Birkenhead, and the townships of Bidstone with Ford, Cloughton with Grange, Moreton, and Saughall-Massey, and containing 1014 inhabitants, of which number, 257 are in the township of Bidstone with Ford, 9½ miles (N.) from Great Neston. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Chester, endowed with £200 and £35 per annum private benefaction, £200 royal bounty, and £1300 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Bishop of Chester. A lighthouse, standing on an elevated site in this township, was purchased by the corporation of Liverpool, under an act obtained in 1762, and is supported by a duty levied on all vessels sailing to or from that port. A school is endowed with £8 per annum, and a house and garden for the master.

BIERLEY (NORTH), a chapelry in the parish of BRADFORD, wapentake of MORLEY, West riding of the county of YORK, 2 miles (S. E. by S.) from Bradford, containing 6070 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry and diocese of York, endowed with £1800 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of Miss Currer. The chapel lately received an addition of three hundred and twenty free sittings, towards defraying the expense of which the Incorporated Society for the enlargement of churches and chapels granted £200. There are extensive iron-works within this chapelry, and throughout the entire parish the woollen manufacture prevails to a very considerable extent.

BIERTON, a parish in the hundred of AYLESBURY, county of BUCKINGHAM, 1½ mile (N. E. by E.) from Aylesbury, containing, with the hamlet of Broughton, 620 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, with the perpetual curacies of Quarrendon and Stoke-Mandeville annexed, in the peculiar jurisdiction and patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £20. 10. The church is dedicated to St. James. A school is endowed with £10 per annum; and Mr. Hill, in 1723, gave property, directing the proceeds to be applied in clothing poor men, and in educating and apprenticing children.

BIGBURY, a parish in the hundred of ERMINGTON, county of DEVON, 3½ miles (S.) from Modbury, containing 536 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Totness, and diocese of Exeter, rated in the king's books at £28. 7. 11., and in the patronage of P. Browne, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Lawrence. The parish is bounded on the east by the river Avon, which falls into Bigbury bay, an inlet of the English channel, the navigation of which is somewhat dangerous: the coast is indented with several coves, which afford convenient retreats for smugglers.

BIGBY, a parish in the southern division of the wapentake of YARBOROUGH, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, 4½ miles (E.) from Glandford-Bridge, containing 190 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £13. 10. 10., and in the patronage of Robert C. Elwes, Esq. The church is dedicated to All Saints.

BIGGE'S, or CARLISLE'S, QUARTER, a township in the parish of LONG HORSLEY, western division of MORPETH ward, county of NORTHUMBERLAND, containing 262 inhabitants.

BIGGIN, a township in that part of the parish of WIRKSWORTH which is in the hundred of APPLETREE, county of DERBY, 5½ miles (E. by N.) from Ashbourn, containing 160 inhabitants. This place is in the honour of Tutbury, duchy of Lancaster, and within the jurisdiction of a court of pleas held at Tutbury every third Tuesday, for the recovery of debts under 40s. Here was formerly a church, or chapel, but for many years not even the site of it has been known.

BIGGIN, a township in the parish of KIRK-FENTON, partly within the liberty of ST. PETER of YORK, East riding, and partly in the upper division of the wapentake of BARKESTONE-ASH, West riding, of the county of YORK, 6½ miles (W. N. W.) from Selby, containing 164 inhabitants. The plant teasel (Dipsacus Fullonum), used in dressing woollen cloth, is said to have been first cultivated here in this county.

BIGGLESWADE, a market town and parish in the hundred of BIGGLESWADE, county of BEDFORD, 10½ miles (E. S. E.) from Bedford, and 45 (N. N. W.) from London, on the road to York, containing, with the hamlet of Holme with Stratton, 2778 inhabitants. This town is pleasantly situated on the river Ivel, which is crossed by two stone bridges, and which, by act of parliament, has been made navigable to its junction with the Ouse, whereby the neighbourhood is supplied with coal, timber, and various articles of merchandise. A considerable part of the town was destroyed by fire in 1785, to which circumstance its improved condition and handsome appearance may be attributed. The houses are uniformly built of brick, the air is pure and salubrious, and the inhabitants are amply supplied with excellent water from numerous springs. The environs, abounding with elegant villas and picturesque scenery, present a pleasing appearance. The making of white thread-lace and edging affords employment to a considerable part of the female population; but the town derives its principal support from being situated on the north road, whence the continued traffic it enjoys. The market, which is on Wednesday, is considerable for grain: fairs are held on February 13th, the Saturday in Easter week, Whit-Monday, August 2nd, and November 8th, for horses and live stock of every kind. The town is within the jurisdiction of the county magistrates, who hold a petty session for the hundreds of Biggleswade, Clifton, and Wixamtree.

The living is a discharged vicarage, in the peculiar jurisdiction and patronage of the Prebendary of Biggleswade in the Cathedral Church of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £10. The church, dedicated to St. Andrew, and formerly collegiate, is an ancient and venerable structure, in the early style of English architecture; the chancel was rebuilt in 1467, by John Reeding, Archdeacon of Bedford, whose arms are carved on some ancient wooden stalls in the north aisle. A chantry belonging to the guild of the Holy Trinity was anciently founded in the church, the revenue of which, at the dissolution, was £7. There are places of worship for Baptists and Wesleyan Methodists. Sir John Cotton, in 1726, bequeathed £1800 for charitable uses, directing it to be laid out in the purchase of lands, two-ninths of the rental of which were to be given as a salary to a schoolmaster, who, together with the boys, is nominated by the lord of the manor, and one-ninth to the vicar of the parish: the proceeds are about £36 per annum; twelve boys are taught gratuitously. There is also an endowment of £13 a year, given by Edward Peake, in 1755, for the instruction of eight more children. In 1770, a yellow earthen pot, containing three hundred gold coins of the reign of Henry VI., was discovered by a ploughman, in a field near the manor-house; they were rather larger in diameter than a half-crown, and twenty grains less in weight than a guinea. On the obverse was a ship, with the figure of a king in armour, holding in one hand a sword, and in the other a shield, on which were quartered the arms of England and France; on the side of the ship was a lion passant, between two fleurs de lis; on the reverse was a cross between four lions passant, crowned with the legend "Jesus autem transiens per medium illorum ibat."

BIGHTON, a parish in the hundred of BISHOP'S SUTTON, Alton (North) division of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (N. E. by E.) from New Alresford, containing 231 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Winchester, rated in the king's books at £19. 8. $1\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of the Duke of Buckingham. The church is dedicated to All Saints. Bighton is within the jurisdiction of the Cheyney Court held at Winchester every Thursday, for the recovery of debts to any amount.

BIGLANDS, a joint township with Gamelsby, in the parish of AIKTON, ward and county of CUMBERLAND, 4 miles (N.) from Wigton, containing, with Gamelsby, 191 inhabitants. A sulphureous spring was discovered here about 1775, the water of which is much used for cutaneous complaints.

BIGNALL-END, a township in the parish of AUDLEY, northern division of the hundred of PIREHILL, county of STAFFORD, containing 308 inhabitants.

BIGNOR, a parish in the hundred of BURY, rape of ARUNDEL, county of SUSSEX, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. by E.) from Petworth, containing 138 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Chichester, rated in the king's books at £8. 3. $6\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of the Crown. The church is chiefly in the early English style, but has some decorated portions intermixed. There are vestiges of a Roman pavement at a short distance eastward from the village.

BILBOROUGH, a parish in the southern division of the wapentake of BROXTOW, county of NOTTINGHAM, 4 miles (W. N. W.) from Nottingham, containing 291 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Nottingham, and diocese of York, rated in the king's books at £3. 12. 6., and in the patronage of T. Webb Edge, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Martin. Here are some coal-works. The hamlet of Broxtow, in this parish, was anciently a place of considerable importance, having given name to the wapentake.

BILBROUGH, a parish in the ainsty of the city, and East riding of the county, of YORK, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. E.) from Tadcaster, containing 260 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry and diocese of York, and in the patronage of T. L. Fairfax, Esq. Thomas, Lord Fairfax, the celebrated parliamentary general, who died in 1671, was interred in the church here. A school is endowed with about £15 per annum, for the instruction of twenty-two children.

BILBY, a joint township with Barnby-Moor, in that part of the parish of BLYTH which is in the Hatfield division of the wapentake of BASSETLAW, county of NOTTINGHAM, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. N. W.) from East Retford. The population is returned with Barnby-Moor.

BILDESTON, or BILSON, a parish (formerly a market town) in the hundred of COSFORD, county of SUFFOLK, $14\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. N. W.) from Ipswich, and 66 (N. E. by N.) from London, containing 814 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Sudbury, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £12. 16. $10\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of the Rev. Charles Johnson. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a handsome spacious structure. There is a place of worship for Baptists. The manufacture of blankets and woollen cloth was formerly carried on here; but at present the chief employment of the inhabitants consists in spinning yarn. The market, now disused, was held on Wednesday: there are fairs on Ash-Wednesday and Holy Thursday. In 1535, a school-house was given to the parish, but the name of the donor has not been preserved.

BILHAM, a township in that part of the parish of HOOTON-PAGNELL which is in the northern division of the wapentake of STRAFFORTH and TICKHILL, West riding of the county of YORK, 7 miles (W. N. W.) from Doncaster, containing 74 inhabitants. Strata of coal and limestone, and a kind of sand used in the foundries at Rotherham and Sheffield, exist here.

BILLERICAY, a market town and chapelry in the parish of GREAT BURSTEAD, hundred of BARSTABLE, county of ESSEX, $9\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. S. W.) from Chelmsford, and 24 (E. N. E.) from London. The population is returned with the parish. The name, anciently Belenca, is of uncertain derivation, and of the history of the place, few particulars of importance are recorded. From the discovery of Roman urns containing bones, glass vessels, and other relics, and from the traces of a Roman vallum and ditch at Blunt's Walls, nearly a mile distant, this place appears to have been not unknown to the Romans, who had probably a station here, though the exact site has not been ascertained. The town is pleasantly situated on an eminence overlooking an extensive and richly cultivated vale, and commanding a fine prospect of the surrounding country, which abounds with beautiful scenery, and a distant view of the shipping on the Thames: it has of late been much improved by the erection of several large and well-built houses. The only branches of manufacture are those of silk braid laces and wire riband, and they are at present declining. The market is on Tuesday: fairs are held on August 2nd and October 9th, principally for cattle. Courts leet and baron are held occasionally, at the former of which constables and other officers for the internal regulation of the town are appointed. The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to the vicarage of Great Burstead, in the archdeaconry of Essex, and diocese of London, endowed with £1200 parliamentary grant. The chapel, dedicated to St. Mary Magdalene, is an ancient brick building in the centre of the town. There are places of worship for Baptists, the Society of Friends, and Independents. The Rev. Mr. Bayley, rector of Benfleet, in 1654, bequeathed an estate of £20 per annum for the education of ten poor children. There is a parochial almshouse for poor females.

BILLEDON, a parish in the hundred of GARTREE, county of LEICESTER, $8\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. by S.) from Leicester, containing, with the chapelries of Goadby and Rolleston, 751 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Leicester, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £14. 10., and in the patronage of the Rev. H. Greene. The church is dedicated to St. John the Baptist. A school-house was built, in 1650, by William Sharp, which has since been endowed, by various benefactors, with property producing about £10 per annum. Here are some traces of a Roman camp, fortified with a deep ditch and a high rampart.

BILLESLEY, a parish in the Stratford division of the hundred of BARLICHWAY, county of WARWICK, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. N. W.) from Stratford upon Avon, containing 26 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Worcester, rated in the king's books at £5. 4. 7., endowed with £400 private benefaction, and £400 royal bounty, and in the patronage of M. and J. Mills, Esqrs. The church is dedicated to All Saints.

BILLING (GREAT), a parish in the hundred of SPELHOE, county of NORTHAMPTON, 4 miles (E. S. E.) from Northampton, containing 334 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Northampton, and diocese of Peterborough, rated in the king's books at £19, and in the patronage of the Principal and Fellows of Brasenose College, Oxford. The church is dedicated to St. Andrew. This parish has a communication with the North sea, through the Northampton canal and the river Nen. An almshouse was founded by John Freeman, Esq., in the reign of James I., for one man and four women. Sir Isaac Wake, a distinguished scholar and diplomatist in the same reign, was born here, in 1575.

BILLING (LITTLE), a parish in the hundred of SPELHOE, county of NORTHAMPTON, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. by N.) from Northampton, containing 76 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Northampton, and diocese of Peterborough, rated in the king's books at £10. 2. 11., and in the patronage of Earl Brownlow. The church is dedicated to All Saints. The river Nen passes through the parish.

BILLINGBOROUGH, a parish in the wapentake of AVELAND, parts of KESTEVEN, county of LINCOLN, 3 miles (E.) from Folkingham, containing 745 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £6. 1. 8., and in the patronage of Earl Fortescue. The church, dedicated to St. Andrew, has a fine tower and spire, and displays chiefly the decorated style of English architecture. Mary Toller, in 1671, gave land producing about £25 per annum, for the endowment of a free school.

BILLINGE (CHAPEL-END), a chapelry in that part of the parish of WIGAN which is in the hundred of WEST DERBY, county palatine of LANCASTER, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. W.) from Wigan, containing 1002 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Chester, endowed with £200 private benefaction, £200 royal bounty, and £1000 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Rector of Wigan. The manufacture of cotton is here carried on to a limited extent. A charity school here has a trifling endowment.

BILLINGE (HIGHER-END), a township in that part of the parish of WIGAN which is in the hundred of WEST DERBY, county palatine of LANCASTER, 5 miles (W. S. W.) from Wigan, containing 670 inhabitants. A school here is endowed with £20 per annum.

BILLINGFORD, a parish in the hundred of EARS-HAM, county of NORFOLK, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (E.) from Scole, containing 190 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, with that of Little Thorpe annexed, in the archdeaconry of Norfolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £9, and in the patronage of George Wilson, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Leonard.

BILSDALE (WEST SIDE), a township in the parish of HAWNBY, wapentake of BIRDFORTH, North riding of the county of YORK, 8 miles (N. W. by N.) from Helmsley, containing 127 inhabitants. In 1757, John Smales and Gregory Elsley bequeathed £120. 5., directing the proceeds to be applied to teaching six poor boys of this township.

BILSDALE-MIDCABLE, a chapelry in the parish of HELMSLEY, wapentake of RYEDALE, North riding of the county of YORK, 7 miles (N. N. W.) from Helmsley, containing, with Bilsdale-Kirkham, 780 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Cleveland, and diocese of York, endowed with £800 royal bounty; and £800 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Vicar of Helmsley. There is a meeting-house for the Society of Friends.

BILSINGTON, a parish partly in the liberty of ROMNEY-MARSH, but chiefly in the hundred of NEWCHURCH, lath of SHEPWAY, county of KENT, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. S. E.) from Ashford, containing 299 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Canterbury, endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of T. Rider, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul. A fair, formerly called Woodstock fair, is held here on July 5th. The Grand Military, or Shorncliffe and Rye, canal passes through the parish. There are some remains of a priory of Augustine canons, founded in 1253, the revenue of which, at the dissolution, was £81. 1. 6.

BILSTHORPE, a parish in the South-clay division of the wapentake of BASSETLAW, county of NOTTINGHAM, 5 miles (S.) from Ollerton, containing 252 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Nottingham, and diocese of York, rated in the king's books at £5. 1. 8., and in the patronage of the Rev. Lumley Savile. The church is dedicated to St. Margaret.

BILSTON, a market town and chapelry in that part of the parish of WOLVERHAMPTON which is in the northern division of the hundred of SEISDON, county of STAFFORD, 3 miles (S. E.) from Wolverhampton, 19 (S. by E.) from Stafford, and 180 (N. W.) from London, containing 12,003 inhabitants. This place, formerly belonging to the portionists, or prebendaries, of Wolverhampton, and in their character called Bilsreton, was a royal demesne at the time of the Conquest, and in the reign of Edward III., under the name Billestone, was certified to be free of toll. Previously to the introduction of the iron-works, Bilston contained only a few private houses; but from the abundance and rich quality of its mines of coal and iron-stone, it rapidly increased in extent and population, and has become one of the largest towns in the county. The town is situated on rising ground, in the centre of an extensive district abounding with numerous foundries, forges, furnaces, steam-engines, and other works necessary for the various processes of the iron trade, of which the smoke by day, and the fires by night, present a scene singularly impressive and terrific. It is irregularly built, and is nearly two miles in length: the principal streets contain several substantial and handsome houses, and throughout the neighbourhood are scattered in every direction the numerous habitations of persons employed in the different works. The manufacture of tin, japanned and enameled wares of every kind, iron-wire, nails, screws, iron-gates, palisades, machinery, steam-engines, and all the heavier articles in the iron trade, is carried on to a very considerable extent: there are several mills for slitting the pig-iron into bars, and many iron and brass foundries. Clay, of which the coarser kind of pottery-ware is made, and a particularly fine sand for casting, are found in great abundance: there are also quarries of a species of very hard stone, much esteemed for grindstones, troughs, and for building; it lies in horizontal strata of twelve layers, gradually increasing in thickness from the surface. The Birmingham and Staffordshire canal, which passes near the town, and several branch canals in the vicinity, afford the means of conveying the manufactures of the town, the produce of the mines, and the massive productions of the foundries, to various parts of the kingdom. The market days, established by an act of parliament obtained in 1825, are Monday and Saturday; and the fairs, which are toll-free, are on Whit-Monday and the Monday preceding the Michaelmas fair at Birmingham. Constables and other officers are appointed at the court leet of the lord of the manor. A court of requests, for the recovery of debts not exceeding £5, is held under an act passed in the 48th of George III., the jurisdiction of which extends over the townships of Bilston and Willenhall, and the parishes of Wednesbury and Darlaston, excepting the manor of Bradley, which is within the jurisdiction of a similar court previously established at Oldbury. The living is a perpetual curacy, within the jurisdiction of the court of the royal peculiar of Wolverhampton, endowed with £400 private benefaction, and £400 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the resident householders. The chapel, dedicated to St. Leonard, was rebuilt in 1826. A church, dedicated to St. Mary, and containing nine hundred and fifty-six free sittings, was erected in 1829, at an expense of £7223. 6. 1., part of which was defrayed by grant from the parliamentary commissioners; it is an elegant structure in the later style of English architecture, with a handsome tower. There are places of worship for Baptists, Independents, and Primitive and Wesleyan Methodists. A Blue-coat school was founded and endowed by Humphrey Perry, Esq., of Stafford, for clothing and instructing six boys, since which it has received a trifling bequest for the education of two more.

BILSTONE, a chapelry in the parish of NORTON juxta TWYCRoss, hundred of SPARKENHOE, county of LEICESTER, 3½ miles (N. W. by W.) from Market-Bosworth, containing 176 inhabitants. It is in the honour of Tutbury, duchy of Lancaster, and within the jurisdiction of a court of pleas held at Tutbury every third Tuesday, for the recovery of debts under 40s.

BILTON, a parish in the Rugby division of the hundred of KNIGHTLOW, county of WARWICK, 1½ mile (W. S. W.) from Rugby, containing 401 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Coventry, and diocese of Lichfield and Coventry, rated in the king's books at £16. 10. 7½., and in the patronage of the Rev. J. T. Parker. The church, dedicated to St. Mark, is principally Norman, of which style it exhibits some good specimens; the tower and spire are of later date. Bilton Hall, with the estate belonging to it, was purchased, in the early part of the last century, by Joseph Addison, Esq., the poet and moralist, who spent a considerable portion of the latter part of his life here, where he wrote his "Evidences of the Christian Religion." Miss Addison, his only child, retired hither towards the close of her life, where she died, in 1797. A school was endowed with £20 per annum, the bequest of Langton Freeman, Esq., in 1783.

BILTON, a chapelry in that part of the parish of SWINE which is in the middle division of the wapentake of HOLDERNESS, East riding of the county of YORK, 4½ miles (N. E.) from Kingston upon Hull, containing 91 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of the East riding, and diocese of York, endowed with £400 private benefaction, and £800 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Hon. and Rev. W. H. Dawnay. The chapel is dedicated to St. Peter.

BILTON, a parish within the ainsty of the city, and East riding of the county, of YORK, comprising the townships of Bickerton, Bilton, and Tockwith, and containing 808 inhabitants, of which number, 223 are in the township of Bilton, 5 miles (E. by N.) from Wetherby. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the peculiar jurisdiction and patronage of the Prebendary of Bilton in the Cathedral Church of York, rated in the king's book at £3. 16. 0½., endowed with £400 private benefaction, £200 royal bounty, and £300 parliamentary grant. The church is dedicated to St. Helen. At Syningthwaite, in this parish, Bertram Haget, in 1160, founded a Cistercian nunnery for a prioress and twelve nuns, in honour of the Blessed Virgin, which, at the dissolution, had a revenue of £62. 6.

BILTON, a joint township with Harrogate, in that part of the parish of KNARESBOROUGH which is in the lower division of the wapentake of CLARO, West riding of the county of YORK, 2½ miles (W.) from Knaresborough. The population is returned with Harrogate. A free school is endowed with about £30 per annum, given by Richard Taylor, in 1785. In the neighbourhood are several petrifying springs, and one with a sulphureous impregnation.

BINACRE, a parish in the hundred of BLTHING, county of SUFFOLK, 6 miles (N. by E.) from Southwold, containing 224 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, with that of Easton-Bavents and the vicarage of North Hales consolidated, in the archdeaconry of Suffolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £18, and in the patronage of Sir T. S. Gooch, Bart. The church is dedicated to St. Michael. Nearly half a mile from the sea is Binacre Broad, a sheet of fresh water comprising an area of one hundred acres, and abounding with pike and other fish. About fifty years since, in forming a new turnpike road from Yarmouth to London, through Binacre, the workmen discovered an urn containing coins of Vespasian, Trajan, Adrian, Antoninus Pius, and Marcus Aurelius.

BINBROOKE, a village (formerly a market town) comprising the parishes of St. Gabriel and St. Mary, in the southern division of the wapentake of WALSHCROFT, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, 8 miles (E. N. E.) from Market-Rasen. St. Gabriel's, containing 497 inhabitants, is a discharged vicarage, within the peculiar jurisdiction of the Dean and Chapter of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £8, endowed with £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Prebendary of Milton in the Cathedral Church of Lincoln. St. Mary's, containing, with the extra-parochial liberty of Orforth, 293 inhabitants, is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £10. 4. 2., and in the patronage of the Crown. The Wesleyan Methodists have a place of worship here. There are extensive rabbit-warrens in the neighbourhood, and considerable business is done in the dressing of skins for furriers. A fair is held on Easter-Tuesday, on which day there are also horse-races. Here is a charity school.

BINCHESTER, a township in that part of the parish of ST. ANDREW AUCKLAND which is in the north-western division of DARLINGTON ward, county palatine of DURHAM, 2 miles (N. by E.) from Bishop-Auckland, containing 49 inhabitants. Bincchester appears to have been a Roman station, called Vinovia by Antoninus, and Binoivium by Ptolemy, situated on the Fosse-way. Mr. Cade considers it to have been sacred to Bacchus, and to have derived its name, Vinovium, from the festivals held at it, in honour of that deity. The fortress occupied an elevated site rising from the bank of the river Wear, and the station comprised a plot of about twenty-nine acres of ground, within which, and in its vicinity, the remains of a hypocaust, altars, urns, and other relics, have been found.

BINCOMBE, a parish in the liberty of FRAMPTON, Bridport division of the county of DORSET, 5 miles (S. by W.) from Dorchester, containing 178 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, annexed to that of Broadway, in the archdeaconry of Dorset, and diocese of Bristol, rated in the king's books at £9. 1. 5½. The church is dedicated to the Holy Trinity. The river Way runs through the parish, in which are quarries of fine stone, and a mineral spring. Numerous barrows are visible on the neighbouring downs.

BINDERTON, a chapelry in the parish of WEST DEAN, hundred of WESTBOURN and SINGLETON, rape of CHICHESTER, county of SUSSEX, 4 miles (N.) from Chichester, containing 67 inhabitants. The chapel is not in use, and is said to be unconsecrated.

BINEGAR, a parish in the hundred of WELLS-FORUM, county of SOMERSET, 4 miles (N.) from Shepton-Mallet, containing 363 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, within the peculiar jurisdiction of the Dean of Wells, rated in the king's books at £13. 12. 8½., and in the patronage of the Prebendary of Whitchurch in the Cathedral Church of Wells. The church is dedicated to the Holy Trinity. A large fair, noted for the sale of horses, formerly held at Wells, was removed hither in the seventeenth century, in consequence of the plague, and is held during the whole of Whitsun-week.

BINFIELD, a parish in the hundred of COOKHAM, county of BERKS, 3 miles (N. E.) from Wokingham, containing 1057 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Berks, and diocese of Salisbury, rated in the king's books at £18. 17. 1., and in the patronage of the Crown. The church is dedicated to All Saints. A National school is endowed with about £23 per annum. Pope, the poet, in the early part of his life, resided with his father in this village, where he wrote his poem entitled "Windsor Forest." Traces of a large intrenchment, called Caesar's Camp, supposed to have been occupied by Julius Cæsar during his invasion of Britain, are still visible.

BINGFIELD, a chapelry in the parish of ST. JOHN LEE, southern division of TINDALE ward, county of NORTHUMBERLAND, 6½ miles (N. N. E.) from Hexham, containing 111 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, within the jurisdiction of the peculiar court of Hexham, belonging to the Archbishop of York, endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £600 royal bounty, and in the patronage of Col. and Mrs. Beaumont. The chapel is dedicated to St. Mary. A school here is endowed with £10 per annum. Near the Eriag-bourn, a little northward from the village, there is a mineral spring, the water of which is so powerful, that neither fish nor any kind of insect can live in it.

BINGHAM, a market town and parish in the northern division of the wapentake of BINGHAM, county of NOTTINGHAM, 10 miles (E.) from Nottingham, and 123 (N. W. by N.) from London, containing, with part of the township of Newton, 1574 inhabitants. This place which, previously to the Conquest, was possessed by two Saxon chieftains, appears to have been anciently more extensive than at present: it had a college, or guild, founded in honour of St. Mary. The town is pleasantly situated in the fertile vale of Belvoir, and consists principally of two parallel streets, one of which leads directly into a spacious market-place; some smaller streets have been formed within the last twenty years. The houses, though irregularly built, are neat, and several of them are of handsome appearance: the town is well paved, and amply supplied with water. The market is on Thursday: fairs are held on February 13th and 14th, for draught horses, on Whit-Monday for toys, and November 8th and 9th for young horses and hogs. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Nottingham, and diocese of York, rated in the king's books at £44. 7. 11., and in the patronage of the Earl of Chesterfield. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is an ancient and spacious cruciform structure, partaking of the early and decorated styles of English architecture, with a square embattled and highly enriched tower, crowned with the remains of statues, which have been substituted for pinnacles, and surmounted by a lofty spire, which, with the upper stage of the tower, is of later erection: within the church are some beautiful specimens of foliage and sculpture, of elegant design and elaborate execution. There are places of worship for Primitive and Wesleyan Methodists. An endowment of £8 per annum, for a free school, has been augmented with a dividend of £10 per annum, payable on the sum of £150, raised by the performance of plays, and invested in the Nottingham and Grantham canal, by a few individuals of the town. The Roman Fosse-way, in its course through the parish, passes by a large mound, called Castle Hill, the site of an ancient fortress. Mr. Robert White, the astronomer, and editor of the Ephemeris which bears his name, was a native of this parish, and is interred here; a mural tablet in the church has been inscribed to his memory. Abbot, Archbishop of Canterbury; Wren, Bishop of Ely; and Hanmer, Bishop of Bangor; were successively rectors of this parish, from which they were promoted to their respective sees, in the seventeenth century.

BINGLEY, a parish in the upper division of the wapentake of SKYRACK, West riding of the county of YORK, comprising the market town of Bingley, and the township of East and West Moreton, and containing 7375 inhabitants, of which number, 6176 are in the town of Bingley (including Micklethwaite), 37 miles (W. S. W.) from York, and 202 (N. N. W.) from London. This place is pleasantly situated on an eminence near the river Aire, and consists principally of one long street, containing several respectable and well-built houses; it is plentifully supplied with water: the air is salubrious, and the environs, which are richly wooded, abound with agreeable and diversified scenery. A news-room has been recently established, which is well conducted and liberally supported. The principal branch of manufacture is that of worsted yarn, which is extensively carried on in the town and neighbourhood: there are some smaller factories for the spinning of cotton, and a manufactory for paper, together with a considerable trade in malt: the Leeds and Liverpool canal passes near the town. The market is on Tuesday: fairs are held on January 25th, and August 25th, 26th, and 27th, for linen, horses, and horned cattle. The living is a discharged vicarage, within the peculiar jurisdiction of the court of the manors of Crossley, Bingley, and Pudsey, rated in the king's books at £7. 6. 8., endowed with £400 private benefaction, £200 royal bounty, and £300 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Crown. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a neat edifice, in the later style of English architecture. There are places of worship for Baptists, Independents, and Methodists. The free grammar school was founded in the reign of Henry VIII., and endowed with land and tenements producing at present nearly £300 per annum, subject to certain payments to the poor: the premises comprise a large school-room, and a house and garden for the master. There is also a National school, capable of admitting eight hundred scholars. Mrs. Sarah Rhodes, in 1784, gave five cottages, which she endowed as almshouses for five aged widows, who receive £3 per annum each: there are also several bequests for distribution in bread and clothes among the poor, and for other charitable uses.

BING-WESTON, a quarter in that part of the parish of WORTHEN which is in the hundred of CHREBURY, county of SALOP, containing, with Beachfield, Walton, and Rewins-Farm, 155 inhabitants.

BINHAM, a parish in the northern division of the hundred of GREENHOE, county of NORFOLK, 4 miles (N. E. by E.) from Little Walsingham, containing 438 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £6. 13. 4., endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £800 royal bounty, and in the patronage of T. T. Clarke, Esq. The church, dedicated to the Holy Cross, belonged to a Benedictine priory, founded in the reign of Henry I., the revenue of which, at the dissolution, was £160. 1.: the western front affords a fine specimen of the early style of English architecture.

BINLEY, a parish in the Kirby division of the hundred of KNIGHTLOW, county of WARWICK, 2½ miles (E. by S.) from Coventry, containing, with the liberty of Earnsford, 211 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Coventry, and diocese of Lichfield and Coventry, and in the patronage of Earl Craven. The church, dedicated to St. Bartholomew, was built by Lord Craven, and consecrated in 1772. The Rev. Thomas Wagstaffe, who wrote a defence of Charles I., was born here, and died at Rouen in 1770.

BINNINGTON, a township in the parish of WILDERBY, wapentake of DICKERING, East riding of the county of YORK, 8 miles (S. W. by S.) from Scarborough, containing 50 inhabitants.

BINSEY, a parish within the liberty of the city of OXFORD, locally in the hundred of Wootton, county of OXFORD, 2 miles (N. W.) from Oxford, containing 82 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford, endowed with £600 private benefaction, and £600 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Dean and Canons of Christ Church, Oxford. The church, dedicated to St. Margaret, is an ancient structure.

BINSTEAD, a parish in the liberty of EAST MEDINA, Isle of Wight division of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, 5½ miles (E. N. E.) from Newport, containing 225 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Winchester, rated in the king's books at £1. 7. 1., and in the patronage of the Bishop of Winchester. The church, dedicated to the Holy Cross, exhibits marks of considerable antiquity, particularly in the arch which separates the nave from the chancel, and another in the north wall, now filled up. In the vicinity are the ancient quarries from which part of the stone used in the erection of Winchester cathedral was obtained. At Quarr, in this parish, there are remains of an abbey of Cistercian monks, which was founded, in 1132, by Baldwin de Redveris, afterwards Earl of Devonshire; its revenue, at the dissolution, was £184. 1. 10. Their situation is very fine, having the sea on the north, and thick woods to the south and east. Most of the boundary wall, including about thirty acres, is yet standing, together with the remains of two gates, which formed the north and south entrances. The refectory, the only entire part of the buildings, is now a barn, and another part of the site is occupied by a farm-house erected out of the ruins. It was the burial-place of several distinguished persons, amongst whom were Earl Baldwin, its founder, and his countess Adeliza.

BINSTED, a parish in the hundred of ALTON, Alton (North) division of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. by N.) from Alton, containing 946 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to the vicarage of Alton, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Winchester. The church is dedicated to St. Nicholas. Binsted is entitled to send five children to St. Andrew's school in Holyburn. It is within the jurisdiction of the Cheyney Court held at Winchester every Thursday, for the recovery of debts to any amount.

BINSTED, a parish in the hundred of AVISFORD, rape of ARUNDEL, county of SUSSEX, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. by S.) from Arundel, containing 98 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Chichester, rated in the king's books at £5. 17. 8 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of the Rev. M. Smelt. The church is dedicated to St. Mary.

BINTON, a parish in the Stratford division of the hundred of BARLICHWAY, county of WARWICK, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. by S.) from Stratford upon Avon, containing 232 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Worcester, rated in the king's books at £8. 10., and in the patronage of the Marquis of Hertford. The church is dedicated to St. Peter. The navigable river Avon is here crossed by a bridge on the road leading to Chipping-Campden.

BINTREE, a parish in the hundred of EYNSFORD, county of NORFOLK, $1\frac{1}{4}$ mile (S. W. by W.) from Foulsham, containing 333 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, with that of Themelthorpe annexed, in the archdeaconry of Norfolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £10, and in the patronage of Sir Jacob Astley, Bart. The church is dedicated to St. Swithin. The river Wensom, which separates the parish from North Elmham, is expected to be made navigable to Norwich.

BIRBECK-FELLS, a hamlet partly in the parish of ORTON, EAST ward, and partly in the parishes of CROSBY-RAVENSWORTH and SHAP, WEST ward, county of WESTMORLAND, 4 miles (W. S. W.) from Orton. The population is returned with the above parishes. A free school at Greenholme, for the education of the children of Birbeck-Fells, Bretherdale, Routhwaite, and Low Scales, is endowed with land producing about £40 per annum, purchased with a bequest of £400 by George Gibson, in 1733.

BIRCH, a chapelry in the parish of MIDDLETON, hundred of SALFORD, county palatine of LANCASTER, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. N. W.) from Middleton. The population is returned with the township of Hopwood. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Chester, and in the patronage of the Rector of Middleton. The chapel, dedicated to St. Mary, was built by means of a parliamentary grant of £4000, and consecrated December 11th, 1828; it contains one thousand sittings, of which five hundred and four are free. The spinning of cotton, and the manufacture of gingham, are carried on in this chapelry to a limited extent.

BIRCH, a chapelry in the parish of WARRINGTON, hundred of WEST DERBY, county palatine of LANCASTER, $1\frac{1}{4}$ mile (E. N. E.) from Warrington, with which the population is returned. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Chester, endowed with £400 private benefaction, and £600 royal bounty, and in the patronage of J. Dickinson, Esq.

BIRCH (GREAT), a parish in the Colchester division of the hundred of LEXDEN, county of ESSEX, 5 miles (S. W.) from Colchester, containing, with the parish of Little Birch, 662 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Colchester, and diocese of London, rated in the king's books at £11, and in the patronage of the Bishop of London. The church is dedicated to St. Peter. Here is a small endowment for the education of poor children. The remains of Birch castle are conspicuous in the village.

BIRCH (LITTLE), a parish in the Colchester division of the hundred of LEXDEN, county of ESSEX, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. W. by W.) from Colchester. The population is returned with Great Birch. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Colchester, and diocese of London, rated in the king's books at £5. 6. 8., and in the patronage of Charles Round, Esq. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is desecrated, and religious rites are celebrated at Great Birch.

BIRCH (LITTLE), a parish in the upper division of the hundred of WORMELOW, county of HEREFORD, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S.) from Hereford, containing 310 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Hereford, rated in the king's books at £6. 12. 11., and in the patronage of the Governors of Guy's Hospital, London. The church is dedicated to St. Mary.

BIRCH (MUCH), a parish in the upper division of the hundred of WORMELOW, county of HEREFORD, $6\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. by W.) from Hereford, containing 353 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to the vicarage of Much Dewchurch, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Hereford, endowed with £600 royal bounty. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. Wormelow, from which the hundred takes its name, is within this parish.

BIRCHAM (GREAT), a parish in the hundred of SMITHDON, county of NORFOLK, $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. W. by S.) from Burnham-Westgate, containing 398 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Norfolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £22, and in the patronage of J. Spurgeon, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Mary.

BIRCHAM-NEWTON, a parish in the hundred of SMITHDON, county of NORFOLK, $7\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. W. by S.) from Burnham-Westgate, containing 75 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, annexed to that of Bircham-Tofts, in the archdeaconry of Norfolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £7. 13. 4. The church is dedicated to All Saints.

BIRCHAM-TOFTS, a parish in the hundred of SMITHDON, county of NORFOLK, $7\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. S. W.) from Burnham-Westgate, containing 135 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, with that of Bircham-Newton annexed, in the archdeaconry of Norfolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £6. 13. 4., and in the patronage of the Earl of Orford. The church is dedicated to St. Andrew.

BIRCHANGER, a parish in the hundred of UTTLESFORD, county of ESSEX, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (S. W. by S.) from Stansted-Mountfitchet, containing 336 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Colchester, and diocese of London, rated in the king's books at £9. 13. 4., and in the patronage of the Warden and Fellows of New College, Oxford. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. Richard de Newport founded here, in the reign of John, an hospital dedicated to St. Mary and St. Leonard, for a master and two chaplains, the revenue of which, in the 26th of Henry VIII., was estimated at £31. 13. 11.

BIRCHER, a township in the parish of YARPOLE, hundred of WOLPHY, county of Hereford, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. by W.) from Leominster. The population is returned with the parish.

BIRCHES, a township in that part of the parish of GREAT BUDWORTH which is in the hundred of NORTHWICH, county palatine of CHESTER, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles (E. S. E.) from Northwich, containing 8 inhabitants. Mrs. Elizabeth Dobson, about 1695, assigned an estate here in trust for the education of two boys, one to be the son of a counsellor, and the other the son of a divine of the church of England.

BIRCHINGTON, a parish within the cinque-port liberty of DOVER, of which it is a member, though locally in the hundred of Ringslow, or the Isle of Thanet, lathe of St. AUGUSTINE, county of KENT, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. by S.) from Margate, containing 700 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, united to the vicarage of Monkton, in the peculiar jurisdiction of the Archbishop of Canterbury. The church, dedicated to All Saints, consists of a nave, chancel, and aisles, with a lofty tower and spire rising between the east end of the north aisle and a small chapel, now the vestry-room: the nave is separated from the aisles by octangular columns supporting five pointed arches: the three east windows of the chancel are in the decorated style. On the north side of it is Quex chapel, belonging to the manor of Quex, in this parish, containing several monuments and brasses of the family of Crispe. A pleasure fair is held here on Whit-Monday and Tuesday. Hemming's bay is thought to have been so named from the landing of Hemming, a Danish chieftain, accompanied by Anlaf, in 1009. Mrs. Anna Gertrude Crispe, by will dated February 13th, 1707, bequeathed forty-seven acres of land in Birchington and Monkton for certain charitable purposes; among others for the instruction of twelve boys and girls of this parish and the vill of Acole, the remainder of the rental to be applied in apprenticing some of the boys. The master receives £36. 15. annually, for which he instructs about twenty-four children, one-half appointed by the overseers, from whom the apprentices are selected, and the rest by himself. Near the village stands the workhouse for the reception of the poor of Birchington, Monkton, Sarre, and Acole.

BIRCHOLT, a parish in the franchise and barony of BIRCHOLT, lathe of SHEPWAY, county of KENT, 4 miles (E. by S.) from Ashford, containing 33 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Canterbury, rated in the king's books at £2. 10. 10., and in the patronage of Lady Bankes. The church, now desecrated, was dedicated to St. Margaret.

BIRCHOVER, a chapelry in that part of the parish of YOULGRAVE which is in the hundred of HIGH PEAK, county of DERBY, 1 mile (N. by W.) from Winster, containing 121 inhabitants. It is in the honour of Tutbury, duchy of Lancaster, and within the jurisdiction of a court of pleas held at Tutbury every third Tuesday, for the recovery of debts under 40s.

BIRDALL, a joint township with Raisthorpe, in the parish of WHARRAM-PERCY, wapentake of BUCKROSE, East riding of the county of YORK, $8\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. E.) from New Malton. The population is returned with Raisthorpe.

BIRDBROOK, a parish in the hundred of HINCKFORD, county of ESSEX, 7 miles (N. W.) from Castle-Hedingham, containing 460 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Middlesex, and diocese of London, rated in the king's books at £19, and in the patronage of Sir W. Rush. The church is dedicated to St. Augustine.

BIRDFORTH, a chapelry in the parish of COXWOLD, wapentake of BIRDFORTH, North riding of the county of YORK, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W. by N.) from Easingwold, containing 42 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Cleveland, and diocese of York, endowed with £800 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Archbishop of York. The antiquity of this place is evinced by its having given name to the hundred.

BIRDHAM, a parish in the hundred of MANHOOD, rape of CHICHESTER, county of SUSSEX, 4 miles (S. W. by S.) from Chichester, containing 532 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Chichester, rated in the king's books at £10. 0. 10., endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Chichester. The church is dedicated to St. Leonard. The Portsmouth and Arun canal passes through the parish, and terminates at Chichester harbour. Here is a National school, in which about one hundred boys and girls are instructed.

BIRDINBURY, a parish in the Southam division of the hundred of KNIGHTLOW, county of WARWICK, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. by E.) from Southam, containing 213 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Coventry, and diocese of Lichfield and Coventry, rated in the king's books at £7. 10., endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of Sir T. Biddulph, Bart. The church is dedicated to St. Leonard.

BIRDSALL, a parish in the wapentake of BUCKROSE, East riding of the county of YORK, 6 miles (S. S. E.) from New Malton, containing 240 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of the East riding, and diocese of York, endowed with £400 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Marchioness of Hertford. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is an elegant structure, erected in 1624, at the expense of Lord Middleton. Henry Burton, a puritan divine, was born in this parish.

BIRKBY, a township in the parish of CROSS-CANNONBY, ALLERDALE ward below Derwent, county of CUMBERLAND, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (E. N. E.) from Maryport, containing 96 inhabitants.

BIRKBY, a township in the parish of MUNCASTER, ALLERDALE ward above Derwent, county of CUMBERLAND, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. by S.) from Ravenglass. The population is returned with the parish. Extensive ruins of a British or Danish city, called Barnscar, are visible on Birkby-Fell.

BIRKBY, a parish in the wapentake of ALLERTON-SHIRE, North riding of the county of YORK, comprising the chapelry of Hutton-Bonville, and the townships of Birkby and Little Smeaton, and containing 261 inhabitants, of which number, 90 are in the township of Birkby, 6 miles (N. N. W.) from North Allerton. The living is a discharged rectory, in the peculiar jurisdiction of Allerton and Allertonshire, belonging to the Bishop of Durham, rated in the king's books at £6. 13. 4., and in the patronage of the Bishop of Durham. The church is dedicated to St. Peter.

BIRKDALE, a township in the parish of ORMSKIRK, hundred of WEST DERBY, county palatine of LANCASTER, 7½ miles (N. W.) from Ormskirk, containing 414 inhabitants.

BIRKENHEAD, a chapelry in the parish of BIDSTONE, lower division of the hundred of WIRRAL, county palatine of CHESTER, 9¼ miles (N. N. E.) from Great Neston, containing 200 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Chester, endowed with £1000 private benefaction, £800 royal bounty, and £1200 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of F. R. Price, Esq. A priory for sixteen Benedictine monks was founded here, about 1150, in honour of St. Mary and St. James, by Hamon de Massey, third baron of Dunham-Massey, which, according to Leland, was subordinate to the abbey of St. Werburgh, at Chester; but from the power exercised by the monks, Bishop Tanner considers it to have been an independent priory: the revenue, at the dissolution, was £102. 16. 10. The ruins, part of which has been fitted up for a chapel, stand on a peninsular rock of red freestone, formed by the estuary of the Mersey, on the east, and a small creek on the west, opposite to Liverpool.

BIRKENSHAW, a hamlet in the parish of BIRSTALL, wapentake of MORLEY, West riding of the county of YORK, 5 miles (S. E.) from Bradford. The population is returned with the township of Gomersall. A new church is in progress of erection here. A great quantity of coal and iron-stone is found in the vicinity, and the manufacture of woollen goods is carried on to a very great extent.

BIRKER, a joint township with Austhwaite, in the parish of MILLOM, ALLERDALE ward above Derwent, county of CUMBERLAND, 7½ miles (E. by N.) from Ravenglass, containing, with Austhwaite, 101 inhabitants. This township is within the limits of the chapelry of Eskdale, in the adjoining parish of St. Bees, and the inhabitants enjoy the privilege of marrying and burying there. The lake Devock-water, and the waterfalls of Birker Force and Stanley Gill are in the neighbourhood, which abounds with picturesque scenery.

BIRKIN, a parish in the lower division of the wapentake of BARKSTONE-ASH, West riding of the county of YORK, comprising the chapelry of Chapel-Haddlesey, and the townships of Birkin, West Haddlesey, Courtney-Hurst, and Temple-Hurst, and containing 917 inhabitants, of which number, 139 are in the township of Birkin, 3½ miles (N. E. by E.) from Ferrybridge. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of York, rated in the king's books at £36, and in the patronage of the devisees of the late Thomas Wright, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. The village is situated on the northern bank of the river Aire.

BIRLEY, a parish in the hundred of STRETTFORD, county of HEREFORD, 4 miles (E. by N.) from Weobley, containing 119 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, consolidated with that of King's Pion, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Hereford, rated in the king's books at £5. 9. 7., and endowed with £200 royal bounty. The church is dedicated to St. Peter.

BIRLING, a parish in the hundred of LARKFIELD, lathe of AYLESFORD, county of KENT, 6½ miles (N. W. by W.) from Maidstone, containing 459 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Rochester, rated in the king's books at £6. 9. 4½., and in the patronage of the Earl of Abergavenny. The church is dedicated to All Saints. Foundations of buildings have frequently been discovered in a field near the church.

BIRLING, a township in that part of the parish of WARKWORTH which is in the eastern division of COQUETDALE ward, county of NORTHUMBERLAND, 6½ miles (S. E.) from Alnwick, containing 69 inhabitants.

BIRLINGHAM, a parish in the upper division of the hundred of PERSHORE, county of WORCESTER, 3 miles (S. S. W.) from Pershore, containing 327 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Worcester, rated in the king's books at £9. 17. 11., and in the patronage of A. Luders, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. James. The navigable river Avon forms a boundary to the parish.

BIRMINGHAM, a celebrated manufacturing town in the Birmingham division of the hundred of HEMLINGFORD, county of WARWICK, 18 miles (N. W. by W.) from Coventry, 20 (N. W.) from Warwick, and 109 (N. W.) from London, on the road to Holyhead, containing, with the environs, nearly 100,000 inhabitants. The earliest authentic notice of this place occurs in Domesday-book, in which it is called Bermengeham, whence may be easily deduced Bromwicham, which name, together with those of Castle and West Bromwich, two adjacent villages, is supposed to be derived from the quantity of broom growing in the neighbourhood. It is thought by some antiquaries to have been the Bremenium of the Romans, from its situation near the Ikniel-street; and others state it to have been a British town of some importance prior to the Roman invasion, and to have been eminent for the manufacture of arms, for which the mines of iron and coal in the vicinity rendered its situation peculiarly favourable. Its history, prior to the Conquest, is involved in great obscurity, and from that period until the reign of Charles I. few incidents of moment are recorded. In the civil war during that reign, the inhabitants embraced the cause of the parliament; and in 1642, after the king had passed through the town, on his route from Shrewsbury, they seized the carriages containing the royal plate and furniture, and conveyed them to Warwick castle; they arrested all messengers and others supposed to be partizans of the king, and frequently attacked small parties of royalists, whom they sometimes defeated and sent prisoners to Coventry. In 1643, Prince Rupert, on his way to open a communication between Oxford and York, met with considerable resistance from a detachment of parliamentary forces, assisted by the inhabitants, who stationed themselves at Camp-hill, and opposed his entrance into the town. A sharp conflict ensued, in which the parliamentarians were driven from their station; the Earl of Denbigh was killed, and a clergyman, who acted as governor during the action, was taken prisoner by the royalists, and, rejecting quarter, was killed after the battle, at the Red Lion inn. The prince, provoked at this resistance, set fire to the town, and, after several houses had been burnt, the inhabitants saved themselves from further suffering by the payment of a heavy fine. On the 14th of July, 1791, a party having met at an hotel, to celebrate the anniversary of the French revolution, a mob collected in front of the house, and broke the windows; they thence proceeded to the Unitarian meeting-house, which, with another, they burnt down. Dr. Priestley's dwelling-house, about a mile from the town, was the next object of attack, which, with his library, philosophical apparatus, and manuscripts, shared the same fate. For some days they continued their devastations, setting fire to several other meeting-houses and private mansions, but on the arrival of the military from Oxford and Hounslow, order was restored: at the ensuing assizes four of the ringleaders were convicted, and two of them suffered the penalty of the law. Shortly after this occurrence barracks were erected on the Vauxhall-road, near the town, consisting of a range of handsome buildings, enclosing a spacious area for the exercise of cavalry, and a smaller for parade, a riding-school, a magazine, and an hospital.

The extraordinary increase of the town, the improvement of its manufactures, the extension of its trade, and the rapid growth of its commerce, within the last century, may be attributed to the mines of iron-ore and coal with which the district abounds, to its freedom from the restrictions of incorporation, which has made it the resort of genius and of talent, and to the numerous canals by which it is connected with every part of the kingdom, and through which it not only carries on an immense inland trade, but exports its manufactures to every quarter of the world. Birmingham, in the reign of Henry VIII., was inhabited principally, as described by Leland, "by smiths that use to make knives and all manner of cutting tooles, and lorimers that make bittes, and a great many nailours." Soon after the Revolution in 1688, the manufacture of fire-arms was introduced, and continued to flourish until the close of the late war, during which, the government contracts for muskets alone generally averaged thirty thousand per month: the manufacturing of swords and army accoutrements is still carried on to a considerable extent. By an act obtained in 1813, the gun-makers were authorised to erect a proof-house, in which, under a heavy penalty, all gun and pistol barrels are subjected to a severe proof, and stamped by the master and wardens, under whose inspection the business is conducted; and since this period, the manufacture of fowling-pieces has greatly increased: the building, called the Tower, stands on the bank of the canal, and is a handsome structure, with a row of cannon in front, presenting the appearance of a military establishment. It is uncertain at what time the manufacture of buttons was begun, but it has continued to flourish in every variety from a remote period, and is still a source of wealth to many, and of employment to thousands. The buckle trade was established soon after the Revolution, and, after exercising the inventive powers of the manufacturers in every variety of size, form, and pattern, became nearly extinct in 1812. The leather trade, which formerly was extensively carried on, has very much declined; at present there is only one tan-yard in the town. The principal branches of manufacture are those of light and heavy steel goods (here called toys), gold, silver, and plated wares, trinkets, jewellery, fancy articles of every kind in the gilt-toy trade, machinery of every description, and steam-engines on every known principle: there are many iron and brass foundries, three metallic hot-house manufactories on a large scale, in one of which a hot-house has lately been made for the Duke of Northumberland, at an expense of nearly £50,000, measuring five hundred feet in length, and having in the centre a dome sixty-five feet high, and forty feet in diameter, with wings, in the purest style of modern architecture: there are also various rolling-mills of great power, worked by steam. Casting, modelling, die-sinking, and engraving, have been brought to great perfection; and several glass-houses have been erected within the last few years, besides many mills for cutting glass, of which brilliant specimens may be seen in all the show-rooms in the town. There are divers establishments for supplying the town with articles requisite for the use of the inhabitants, and for carrying on the manufactories: the Old and New Union-Mill Bread and Flour Companies, and the public and private coal-wharfs, are on an extensive scale. Of the numerous manufactories with which the neighbourhood abounds, the most ancient and extensive is the Soho Manufactory, about a mile from the town, in which, under the superintending genius of the late Mr. Boulton, the Birmingham manufactures were brought to their present high degree of perfection; and in which, under the same proprietor, assisted by his colleague, the late Mr. Watt, the most efficient application of mechanical power was produced in the construction of machinery. In this factory were coined the penny-pieces still in circulation, in a mint of great mechanical ingenuity, which, with the assistance of one or two persons, performed the whole process of coinage from the rolled metal. It was here also that the first application of gas, as a substitute for oil and tallow, was made under the auspices of Mr. Murdock, who, after a course of experiments at Redruth, in Cornwall, lighted the shops of this factory, and, in 1802, displayed the success of his researches in a splendid public illumination of the Soho, in celebration of the peace with France. Mr. Thomason's manufactory, in Church-street, has a splendid suite of show-rooms attached to it, replete with costly and elaborate specimens of workmanship, in gold, silver, plated ware, medals, bronzes, and the chrystallized bases of metals and semi-metals. Among the more massive productions is a fine statue in bronze of his late Majesty, George IV., in his coronation robes: the attitude is graceful and dignified; the figure, which is more than six feet high, weighs forty-five hundred weight, and is so proportioned, as, at its proper elevation, to present a fine resemblance in countenance, form, and stature, of the monarch when at the age of fifty. In a lofty room of suitable dimensions, built for the purpose, and solely appropriated to its exhibition, is the large metallic vase, a fac-simile in size, form, and embellishment, of the celebrated Grecian vase of Lysippus, dug from the ruins of Adrian's palace, near Tivoli, which was, by the direction and at the expense of Lord Warwick, brought over to England by the late Sir William Hamilton, and placed in the gardens of Warwick castle. To this huge piece of art, which is more than twenty-one feet in circumference, six feet in height, and which weighs ninety hundred weight, the proprietor, by the peculiar process which he adopted, has imparted a soft solidity of colour, unequalled by any example of the kind, both in the porphyritic oxyde of the ground, or field, and in the ancient green bronze of the arms, visors, panthers' skins, foliage, and other ornaments with which it is embellished. Mr. Thomason's latest production is a beautiful series of sixteen scientific and philosophical medals of German silver, each containing, within a circle of three inches in diameter, a complete epitome of one of the sciences; they are enclosed in a morocco case, in the form, and of the size, of an imperial octavo volume. The manufacture of japan and papier maché has been much improved by Messrs. Jennens and Betteridge, who, by a chemical process in the preparation of pearl, by which it is reduced to the eightieth part of an inch in thickness, and made susceptible of greater transparency and brilliancy of colour, have rendered it peculiarly elegant in the decoration of cabinets, tea-trays, fans, snuff-boxes, &c., of which many beautiful specimens are exhibited in their show-rooms.

The Pantechnethca, or General Repository, was erected in 1824, for the exhibition and sale of articles in the finer department of the arts, selected from the various manufactories in the town: the exterior of the building is fronted, on the basement story, with a Grecian Doric colonnade, supporting another of the Ionic order, surmounted by a handsome balustrade with projecting pedestals, on which are emblematical figures well sculptured; the interior consists of two handsome show-rooms, in which the manufactured articles are judiciously displayed. Mr. Phipson's pin-manufactory, by a simple but effective process, exhibits the progress of this article through all its stages, from the drawing of the wire, to sticking the pin upon paper, and occupies a thousand persons, besides affording, in many of its branches, employment to the inmates of the parish asylum, and the county bridewell. The number and variety of the manufactories, in almost all of which there is some ingenious application of machinery, either to expedite or to improve the manufacture of the article, while they preclude the possibility of enumeration, are such as to justify the assertion, that there is no species of manufacture carried on here which is not in a state of absolute or relative perfection.

The town is pleasantly situated on an eminence, at the north-western extremity of the county, bordering closely on the counties of Stafford and Worcester, from the former of which it is separated by a small brook. The streets, which are very numerous, and in general spacious, are, with the exception of a few in the more retired parts of the town, well paved, and lighted with gas, and, being on a declivity, are always clean. The houses, mostly modern and well built, are chiefly of brick; but, since the use of the Roman cement, they have assumed an improved appearance, and present, nearly throughout the town and its environs, specimens of elegance in almost every style of architecture: among those erected within the last three or four years are many splendid edifices. The inhabitants are amply supplied with water from pumps attached to their houses, and soft water is obtained from two fine wells at the lower extremity of the town. On entering Birmingham from London, the road, by a handsome stone bridge over the small river Rea, leads up an ascent into the market-place, in the centre of which is a statue in bronze of Lord Nelson, finely executed by Westmacott, at an expense of £3000 raised by subscription among the inhabitants. An act of parliament has recently been obtained for taking down the houses on one side of the present market-place, and forming an extensive area, in which it is intended to build a market-house; and under the same act, the erection of a town-hall is contemplated. The market days are Monday and Thursday, the latter being also for the sale of horses and horned cattle; and there is a market for hay on Tuesday. The cattle market and horse fair are held at Smithfield, a spacious area to the south-east of the town, conveniently divided and arranged for the purpose. A sale of horses by auction takes place also on the same day, at Beardsworth's Repository, an establishment of unequalled magnitude, near the spot. The buildings comprise a spacious quadrangular area, round which are stalls for one hundred and fifty horses, exclusively of twenty-four boxes for hunters; above these are galleries, in which there are standings for four hundred carriages, which are constantly on sale; the whole area is covered with a shed-roof supported on pillars forty feet high, and is lighted with a double range of upper windows: on one side of the quadrangle, over which the roof is continued, there is a covered ride, one hundred and eight yards in length, and forty yards in width; and on the opposite side is another of equal extent, enclosed by walls, but not roofed. In addition to the accommodations of a repository, it contains a splendid suite of apartments, elegantly furnished for the reception of gentlemen or families, who may visit Birmingham at the triennial festival, or on any other public occasion. The fairs are on the Thursday in Whitsun-week, and on the Thursday next before Michaelmas-day, each for three days; they are chiefly show fairs, though on the first day many horses and horned cattle are sold.

The town is wholly within the jurisdiction of the county magistrates, of whom, those acting for the town hold a meeting, every Monday and Thursday, at the public office: a high bailiff (who is clerk of the market, and by courtesy presides at all public meetings), a low bailiff, two constables, a headborough, two ale-conners, two flesh-conners, two affeirs, and two leather-sealers, are chosen at the court leet of the lord of the manor, which is held at Michaelmas. A court of requests for the recovery of debts under 40s., established by an act passed in the 25th of George II., the powers of which, by a subsequent act in the 47th of George III., were extended to the recovery of debts under £5, is held every week: it consists of seventy-two commissioners, three of whom, assisted by two clerks, who must be lawyers, form a quorum: its jurisdiction extends only to the limits of the parish. The public office is a commodious building with a handsome stone front; the court-room is well arranged, and behind it is a prison, for the confinement of malefactors previously to their committal to the county gaol. The news-room, built in 1825, is a handsome edifice with a stuccoed front, ornamented with lofty pillars of the Ionic order: the interior consists of one large room, opening through folding doors into two smaller apartments, over which are a billiard-room and a refectory; and a suite of rooms has lately been added, in which copies of the public records, and books of references, are deposited. The old library, established in 1798, is a handsome stone building, with a circular portico; the reading-room is circular, and is lighted by a dome lantern resting on handsome Ionic pillars of porphyry: this institution, the number of volumes in which exceeds thirty thousand, is under the direction of a committee; admission is obtained by the purchase of a share of the value of £10, and the payment of an annual subscription of £1. The new library, similarly conducted, but upon a smaller scale, is a neat building, recently erected, and internally well arranged. The Philosophical Society, which had been instituted some years previously, extended their plan in 1810, and erected a commodious theatre for the delivery of lectures by their own members, and occasionally by eminent professors, in the various branches of science: they have a museum, containing a fine collection of minerals and fossils, an extensive philosophical apparatus, a library, and a reading-room. The school of medicine and surgery was established in 1828, by Mr. W. S. Cox, and the resident physicians and surgeons lecture weekly upon subjects connected with the design of the institution; certificates of having attended these lectures qualify students to pass their examination at the Royal College of Surgeons in London: a handsome and appropriate building has been recently erected on Snow-hill for the use of this establishment.

The Society of Arts was instituted in 1821, for promoting the general study of the fine arts, by procuring from the nobility and gentry, who are its patrons, the loan of original pictures of the old and new schools, in order to stimulate the genius and industry of the members, and to enrich their annual exhibition: it comprehends also, in addition to the higher pursuits of the art, the cultivation of those particular departments of it which are connected with the manufactures of the town. The building is a chaste and elegant specimen of the Corinthian order, with a boldly projecting portico of four elegant columns, supporting a triangular pediment. An institution for promoting the fine arts, established in 1828, for the encouragement of artists resident within thirty miles of Birmingham, by appropriating its funds to the purchase of pictures from the walls at their annual exhibition, has been recently incorporated with the former. A mechanics' institution was established in 1825. The theatre is a spacious and well-arranged building, with a handsome stone front, consisting of a portico of the Ionic order, supported by a piazza, through which is the entrance to the boxes; on one side is that to a coffee-room, and on the other to a billiard-room, over which is an elegant suite of assembly-rooms: it was rebuilt in 1820, at an expense of £14,000, which was subscribed in shares; the present front is what remains of the former theatre, which was burnt down in the beginning of the same year: the season generally commences in May, and ends in October. Assemblies are held periodically, during the winter, at the Royal Hotel: the room, which is spacious and elegantly fitted up, is also appropriated to the subscription concerts, which are supported by more than three hundred subscribers, under the patronage of the nobility and gentry in the neighbourhood: the orchestra combines the first-rate talent of the metropolis with the professional skill of the town. A second concert has been recently established, which, originating, like the other, in a private meeting of amateurs, promises to equal the former in respect of numbers, though not enjoying such distinguished patronage. Triennial music meetings, the receipts of which are appropriated to the support of the general hospital, are held at the church and at the theatre; at the former, oratorios and selections of sacred music are performed, and at the latter, miscellaneous concerts in which the principal vocal and instrumental performers in the kingdom are engaged. The Vauxhall Gardens, which are brilliantly illuminated, are open during the summer, and attract much company to concerts performed there, and to grand displays of fireworks, which are frequent during the season. The Lady-well baths (so called from one of the springs by which they are supplied) form a complete establishment, consisting of hot, cold, sulphureous, vapour, and fumigating baths, attached to which are dressing-rooms and every accommodation for invalids. The swimming, or pleasure bath is one hundred and ten feet long, and fifty-two feet wide, and is supplied with a constant influx of water, at the rate of one thousand hogsheads per hour; it is surrounded with high walls, shaded with lofty trees, and furnished with alcoves and dressing-boxes. The gentlemen's cold bath is sixteen feet long, and twelve feet wide, and is supplied by a spring within itself, at the rate of twelve hogsheads per hour; the buildings are replete with every accommodation, and the gardens and pleasure grounds are extensive and retired.

Prior to the year 1715, Birmingham comprised only one parish, and for all civil purposes it is still so considered: at that time, a small portion of the original parish of St. Martin, consisting of a district in the centre of the town, was formed into the parish of St. Philip; and, in 1829, two other districts were formed into the parishes of St. George and St. Thomas: they are all within the archdeaconry of Coventry, and diocese of Lichfield and Coventry. The living of St. Martin's is a rectory, rated in the king's books at £19. 3. 6½., and in the patronage of the Executors of the late William Hawkes, Esq. The church is an ancient structure, in the decorated style of English architecture, with a square tower, and a lofty and well-proportioned spire, with the exception of which, the building, originally of stone, has been cased with brick: within are several effigies, the details of some of which are finely executed. The living of St. Philip's is a rectory not in charge, to which is annexed the prebend of Sawley, including the dignities of canon residentiary and treasurer in the Cathedral Church of Lichfield, with the patronage of the perpetual curacy of Sawley, in the county of Derby: it is in the patronage of the Bishop of Lichfield and Coventry. The church, erected in 1725, is a handsome structure, in the Grecian style of architecture, combining the Corinthian and the Doric orders, with a tower supporting a dome and a cupola: the churchyard is a spacious area, around which are many elegant buildings of modern erection. The living of St. George's is a rectory not in charge, in the patronage of the Executors of the late William Hawkes, Esq. The church, containing one thousand three hundred and seventy-eight free sittings, was erected in 1822, by subscription among the inhabitants, aided by a grant from the parliamentary commissioners, at an expense of £12,491.6.6.: it is a fine specimen of the early character of the decorated style of English architecture, with a lofty square embattled tower, with pierced parapet and crocketed pinnacles. The living of St. Thomas' is a rectory not in charge, to which the Executors of the late William Hawkes, Esq. presented in 1829, in which year the church, containing one thousand four hundred and twenty-three free sittings, was completed, at an expense of £14,712.10., which was wholly defrayed by a grant from the parliamentary commissioners: it is a chaste and elegant structure, in the Grecian style of architecture, with a handsome steeple, connected in the lower part with the sides of the church, by quadrants of the Ionic order. St. Mary's chapel, in the parish of St. Martin, erected by subscription in 1774, on a site given by Miss Weaman, is an octagonal brick building, with a small stone steeple: the living is a perpetual curacy, in the patronage of trustees appointed under the will of the late Miss Weaman. St. Paul's chapel, in the same parish, built by subscription in 1779, on a site given by Miss Colmore, is a handsome edifice in the Grecian style: the roof, which over the galleries is plainly groined, is supported on handsome pillars of the Ionic order; the altar-piece is ornamented with a painting in stained glass of the Conversion of St. Paul; the steeple, which is much admired for the lightness and elegance of its design, was added in 1820: the living is a perpetual curacy, in the patronage of Mr. Latimer. Christ Church, in the parish of St. Philip, erected in 1813, by subscription, for the especial accommodation of the poor, is a neat plain building, with a handsome portico of the Tuscan order, and a spire: the living is a perpetual curacy, to which is annexed the prebend of Tachbrook in the Cathedral Church of Lichfield; it is in the patronage of the Bishop of Lichfield and Coventry. St. Bartholomew's, a chapel of ease to the rectory of St. Martin's, is a plain brick building, with a cupola; the interior is a good specimen of the Tuscan order, and the altar-piece is richly carved. St. Peter's, a chapel of ease to the rectory of St. Philip's, containing one thousand four hundred and thirty-one free sittings, was built in 1827, at an expense of £13,365.16.6., part of which was defrayed by the parliamentary commissioners, and was almost destroyed by fire, in January 1831. There are places of worship for Baptists, the Society of Friends, Independents, Primitive and Wesleyan Methodists, Swedenborgians, and Unitarians; besides a Scotch church, two Roman Catholic chapels, and a synagogue. Among these, Zion chapel, Carr's Lane meeting-house, the Scotch church, and Ebenezer chapel, may be distinguished as spacious and handsome structures.

The free grammar school was founded by Edward VI., in the fifth year of his reign, and endowed with the revenue of the guild of the Holy Cross, which, prior to the dissolution, occupied the site of the present building: the endowment, arising from land, at that time amounted only to £30 per annum; at present, from the ground having been let on building leases, it produces from £8000 to £10,000 per annum, which, upon the expiration of the leases, will be greatly augmented. The management is vested in a bailiff and eighteen governors, who appoint a head-master, second master, and two ushers, with a writing-master and a drawing-master. There are seven exhibitions, of £70 per annum each, to either of the Universities; and not less than eight subordinate schools are attached to the establishment: the number of scholars on the foundation is one hundred and fifty: the premises, occupying three sides of a quadrangle, with houses for the masters, are about to be rebuilt. The Blue-coat charity school was established by subscription, in 1724, for the maintenance, clothing, and education of twenty-two boys and ten girls: its funds having been increased by additional subscriptions, donations, and legacies, the buildings were enlarged in 1794; there are at present one hundred and thirty boys and sixty girls in the school. A similar school for the children of dissenters, established in 1762, is now limited to the maintenance and instruction of forty-eight girls. The National and the Lancasterian schools are supported by subscription; and an infant school, which is under excellent regulations, is numerously attended.

The general hospital is a handsome and spacious brick building, consisting of a centre and two wings, and containing fourteen wards, in which are one hundred and sixty-five beds. This establishment has obtained extensive patronage and support: it was opened in 1779, when the committee, in order to augment its funds, had recourse to a performance of sacred music, under the direction of a London professor, the produce of which was £127. This performance, repeated every third year, formed the groundwork of the triennial musical festival, for which, under the gratuitous superintendence of Mr. Joseph Moore, a resident amateur, Birmingham has, for the last twenty years, been so justly celebrated. The receipts, which have been progressively increasing, now average a net sum of upwards of £5000, available for the benefit of the institution, which, as a school of medicine and surgery, has attained a high degree of celebrity. The dispensary was established by subscription, in 1794, and affords medical relief to about four thousand patients annually: the building, consisting of a centre and two wings, is a handsome structure of freestone, with four lofty pilasters supporting a triangular pediment, ornamented with a basso-relievo of the "Good Samaritan." The self-supporting dispensary, upon the plan of Mr. Smith, of Southam, is maintained by small annual subscriptions from the poor, aided by those of the honorary members. The infirmary for diseases of the eye and ear, established by Mr. Hodgson, surgeon, in 1823; and the infirmary for the cure of bodily deformity, established in 1817, under the patronage of the Earl of Dartmouth, are liberally supported; and a house, at the extremity of the town, has, under the superintendence of Dr. Birt Davies, been appropriated as a house of recovery from fever. The asylum for deaf and dumb children was established in 1815, and is partly supported by a weekly charge, and partly by subscription; the number at present in the institution is thirty. The school of industry is a large establishment under the management of the guardians of the poor, in which three hundred children are maintained, and employed in platting straw, heading pins, and in other kinds of work suited to their age. There are also almshouses for the aged and infirm, and numerous and extensive funds for charitable purposes. About a mile from the town is a chalybeate spring, which, though known to possess highly medicinal properties, is not much noticed; and about three miles to the west, and within a few hundred yards of the Ik-nield-street, are the remains of a large quadrangular encampment, surrounded by a triple fosse, which, from the extent of its area (being more than thirty acres), is supposed to be of Danish origin: pieces of armour, broken swords, and battle-axes, have been ploughed up in the vicinity. Inconsiderable vestiges of an ancient priory are still visible in the cellars of some houses in the square, which now occupy its site; and a great number of human bones, and skulls with teeth having the enamel perfect, have been found in the neighbourhood, parts of which still bear the names of the Upper and Lower Priory. At the western extremity of the town was an hospital, dedicated to St. Thomas the Apostle, the revenue of which, in the 26th of Henry VIII., was £8. 5. 3. Birmingham gives the title of baron to the Earl of Dudley.

BIRSTALL, a chapelry in that part of the parish of BELGRAVE which is in the western division of the hundred of GOSCORE, county of LEICESTER, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. by E.) from Leicester, containing 371 inhabitants. The chapel, dedicated to St. James, has lately been enlarged by the addition of one hundred and seventy-seven sittings, of which number, ninety-nine are free, and towards defraying the expense of which the Incorporated Society for the enlargement of churches granted £100. There is a communication with the Leicester and Melton-Mowbray navigation by means of the river Soar, which runs through the chapelry.

BIRSTALL, a parish in the wapentake of MORLEY, West riding of the county of YORK, $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S.W.) from Leeds, comprising the chapelries of Clackheaton, Drighlington, Heckmondwike, Liversedge, and Tong, and the townships of Great and Little Gomersall, Hunsworth, and Wike, and containing 21,217 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of the East riding, and diocese of York, rated in the king's books at £23. 19. 2., and in the patronage of the Archbishop of York. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, has lately been enlarged by the addition of one hundred and fifty sittings, one hundred of which are free; the Incorporated Society for the enlargement of churches and chapels having granted £150 towards defraying the expense. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. A chapel is also being erected at Birkenshaw, in this parish. The village of Birstall is situated in the township of Gomersall: the clothing business prevails to a great extent in the parish, in which also there are some collieries. The Rev. William Armystead, in 1601, bequeathed £100 for the erection of a school: the fund now produces £8. 10. per annum, for which six children are instructed gratuitously in a National school, which was erected in 1819, at the expense of William Charlesworth, Esq. Dr. Priestley, equally distinguished for his advocacy of Unitarianism, and his discoveries in chemistry, was born at Field-head, in this parish, in 1733; he died in America, in 1804.

BIRSTWITH, a township in the parish of HAMPSHWAITE, lower division of the wapentake of CLARO, West riding of the county of YORK, 8 miles (W. by N.) from Knaresborough, containing 621 inhabitants. John Richmond, in 1711, gave a rent-charge of £14 for the instruction of poor boys belonging to the townships of Birstwith and Felliscliff.

BIRTHORPE, a chapelry in the parish of SEMPERINGHAM, wapentake of AVELAND, parts of KESTIVEN, county of LINCOLN, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E.) from Folkingham, containing 56 inhabitants.

BIRTLE, a joint township with Bamford, in the parish of MIDDLETON, hundred of SALFORD, county palatine of LANCASTER, 2 miles (E. N. E.) from Bury, containing, with Bamford, 1207 inhabitants. The manufacture of woollen and cotton goods, and the printing of calico, are carried on here.

BIRTLES, a township in the parish of PRESTBURY, hundred of MACCLESFIELD, county palatine of CHESTER, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. by N.) from Macclesfield, containing 47 inhabitants. There are various tumuli in the neighbourhood, and fragments of urns, which formerly contained burnt bones, have been discovered.

BIRTLEY, a township in that part of the parish of CHESTER le STREET which is in the middle division of CHESTER ward, county palatine of DURHAM, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. by E.) from Gateshead, containing 1386 inhabitants, many of whom are employed in the coal mines in the vicinity. There is a place of worship for Roman Catholics. A brine-spring exists in the township, from which salt is made.

BIRTLEY, a parochial chapelry in the north-eastern division of TINDALE ward, county of NORTHUMBERLAND, 5 miles (S. E. by S.) from Bellingham, containing, with a small portion of the township of Broomhope with Buteland, 393 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Northumberland, and diocese of Durham, endowed with £400 private benefaction, and £800 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Duke of Northumberland. Birtley was formed into a parochial chapelry in 1765, in which year it was separated from the parish of Chollerton. Coal and lime exist in the neighbourhood: there is a day and Sunday school in the village.

BIRTS-MORTON, a parish in the lower division of the hundred of PERSHORE, county of WORCESTER, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. W.) from Upton upon Severn, containing 236 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Worcester, rated in the king's books at £7. 8. 1½., and in the patronage of J. Thackwell, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul. A charity school was endowed by Samuel Juice, in 1703, for the instruction of boys, a few of whom are clothed by means of a separate fund. The manor-house is an ancient edifice, surrounded by a moat still very perfect.

BISBROOKE, a parish in the hundred of WRANDIKE, county of RUTLAND, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (E.) from Uppingham, containing 223 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Northampton, and diocese of Peterborough, rated in the king's books at £6. 0. 4., and in the patronage of the Duke of Rutland. The church is dedicated to St. John the Baptist. Here is a school with a trifling endowment.

BISCATHORPE, a parish in the eastern division of the wapentake of WRAGGOE, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, 8 miles (N. E. by E.) from Wragby, containing 37 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £5. 18. 4., endowed with £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Crown. The church is dedicated to St. Helen.

BISCOTT, a hamlet in the parish of LUTON, hundred of FLIT, county of BEDFORD, 2 miles (N. by W.) from Luton. The population is returned with Limbury.

BISHAM, a parish in the hundred of BEYNHURST, county of BERKS, 4½ miles (N. W.) from Maidenhead, containing 707 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Berks, and diocese of Salisbury, rated in the king's books at £7. 13. 1., and endowed with £200 and £20 per annum private benefaction, £600 royal bounty, and £900 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of G. Vansittart, Esq. The church, dedicated to all Saints, is pleasantly situated close to the river Thames, the banks of which are adorned with interesting scenery, and many pleasing seats. The rolling of copper into sheets, and the making of copper bolts for the navy, and of pans and other vessels in copper, are carried on here to a considerable extent. Temple mills, esteemed among the most complete and powerful of the kind in the kingdom, received this name from having been in the possession of the Knights Templars, who established a preceptory here, on receiving a grant of the manor from Robert de Ferraris, in the reign of Stephen. This institution, on the dissolution of the society, was succeeded by an Augustine priory, founded in 1338, by William de Montacute, Earl of Salisbury, the revenue of which, in the 26th of Henry VIII., amounted to £327. 4. 6. It was surrendered in 1536, was re-founded by the king, for a mitted abbot and thirteen Benedictine monks, and was finally dissolved on the 19th of June, 1538: the abbey was frequently visited by Henry VIII., and also by Queen Elizabeth, who resided here some time, a large state apartment being still called the Queen's council-chamber; but a very small portion only of the conventual buildings can be traced in the mansion which now occupies its site.

BISHAMPTON, a parish in the middle division of the hundred of OLWALDSLOW, county of WORCESTER, 5½ miles (N. E. by N.) from Pershore, containing 374 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Worcester, rated in the king's books at £7. 9. 9½, endowed with £400 private benefaction, and £400 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Bishop of Worcester. The church is dedicated to St. Peter.

BISHOP'S-BOURNE, a parish in the hundred of KINGHAMFORD, lathe of ST. AUGUSTINE, county of KENT, 4 miles (S. E. by S.) from Canterbury, containing 325 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, with the perpetual curacy of Barham annexed, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Canterbury, rated in the king's books at £39. 19. 2., and in the alternate patronage of the Crown and the Archbishop of Canterbury. The church is dedicated to St. Mary.

VOL. I.

BISHOP'S- CASTLE, a borough, market town, and parish, having separate jurisdiction, locally in the hundred of Purslow, county of SALOP, 19 miles (N. W. by N.) from Ludlow, 20¼ (S. W. by S.) from Shrewsbury, and 157 (N. W. by W.) from London, containing 1880 inhabitants, of which number, 1616 are within the borough. This place owes its name to a castle belonging to the bishops of Hereford, that stood here, but of which the site alone, now a bowling-green belonging to the Castle Inn, and some small portions of the enclosing walls, can be traced: a subterraneous passage is said to have subsisted from this castle to another at some distance, the arched entrance to which is shown in the garden of an adjoining house; but it is scarcely distinguishable from the heaps of stones found in various parts of the hill on which the castle stood. The town is partly situated on the summit, but chiefly on the steep declivity, of a hill: the houses in general are meanly built of unhewn stone, with thatched roofs; though, in detached situations, there are several handsome edifices of modern erection. Such of the inhabitants as have not pumps attached to their houses, are indifferently supplied with water, from a reservoir under the town-hall, into which it is conveyed by pipes from the neighbouring hills. The market is on Friday, and is well supplied with grain, which is sold by sample: the market-house, built within the last twenty years, by the Earl of Powis, is a handsome edifice of stone, supported on piazzas: the area is used as a corn market, and the upper part as a school-room. The fairs are on February 13th, for cattle and sheep; on the Friday preceding Good Friday, which is a very large fair for horned cattle; on the first Friday after May-day, a pleasure and statute fair; July 5th, formerly a great wool fair; September 9th, and November 13th, for horned cattle, sheep, and horses. The government, by charter granted in the 15th year of the reign of Elizabeth, and confirmed and extended by James I., is vested in a bailiff, recorder, and fifteen capital burgesses, assisted by a town-clerk, two serjeants at mace, and subordinate officers: the bailiff, late bailiff, and recorder, are justices of the peace. The bailiff is elected from among the capital burgesses, on the first Monday before Michaelmas-day, and sworn into office on the first Monday after it: the capital burgesses are chosen by a majority of the burgesses at large: the freedom is acquired only by birth. The corporation hold a court of session quarterly for the borough on the next Wednesday after the general quarter sessions for the county, at which the bailiff, the late bailiff or justice, and the recorder, preside; and a court of record is held every alternate Saturday, for the recovery of debts under £20, under the presidency of the bailiff and two capital burgesses. The town-hall is a plain brick edifice on pillars and arches, built by the subscriptions of the burgesses, in 1750, with a prison on the basement story for criminals, and above it one for debtors. The elective franchise was conferred in the 26th of Elizabeth, since which time the borough has returned two members to parliament. The right of election is vested in the burgesses generally, about sixty in number, provided they have been resident within the borough twelve months prior to the election, in default of which they lose their title to vote: the bailiff is the returning officer.

Corporate Seal.

The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Salop, and diocese of Hereford, rated in the king's books at £9. 12. 10., and in the patronage of the Earl of Powis. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, is a fine old structure, principally in the Norman style, with a square embattled tower, crowned with pinnacles: it was burnt in the parliamentary war, by Cromwell, and has been rebuilt without a due regard to the original style of its architecture. The free school was founded, in 1737, by Mrs. Mary Morris, in memory of her first husband, Mr. John Wright, of Wimbledon in Surrey, merchant, a native of Bishop's Castle, and endowed with £1000 in the three per cents., for the instruction of twenty-five boys and twenty-five girls in reading, writing, and arithmetic, and the latter in sewing and knitting. Some charitable benefactions are distributed by the vicar and churchwardens, in money and bread. Jeremy Stephens, author of various doctrinal works, the learned coadjutor of Sir Henry Spelman in the compilation of the "English Councils," was a native of the place.

BISHOP'S-DALE, a township in the parish of Aysgarth, western division of the wapentake of Hang, North riding of the county of York, 12 miles (S. W. by W.) from Middleham, containing 95 inhabitants. The neighbourhood contains several waterfalls, and abounds with picturesque scenery.

BISHOP'S-FEE, a liberty in the parish of St. Margaret, borough of Leicester, though locally in the hundred of Gartree, county of Leicester. The population is returned with Leicester. The magistrates for the borough, and those for the county, exercise concurrent jurisdiction throughout the liberty, the inhabitants of which pay church and poor rates to the parish of St. Margaret, but are assessed for the king's taxes with the hundred of Gartree, the petty sessions for which are occasionally held here.

BISHOP-SIDE (HIGH and LOW), a township in that part of the parish of Ripon which is within the liberty of Ripon, West riding of the county of York, 10½ miles (W. S. W.) from Ripon, containing, with the market town of Pateley-Bridge, 2072 inhabitants.

BISHOPSTON, a chapelry in the parish of Old Stratford, Stratford division of the hundred of Barlichway, county of Warwick, 2¼ miles (N. N. W.) from Stratford upon Avon, with which place the population is returned. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Worcester, endowed with £1000 royal bounty, and £200 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Vicar of Stratford. The chapel, dedicated to St. Peter, is in ruins.

BISHOPSTON, a parish in the hundred of Down-ton, though locally in the hundred of Chalk, county of Wilts, 3½ miles (S. by W.) from Wilton, containing 663 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Salisbury, rated in the king's books at £12. 1. 3.; there is also a sinecure rectory, rated at £19. 14. 2.; both are in the patronage of the Earl of Pembroke and Montgomery. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, is a handsome cruciform edifice, in the decorated style of English architecture; the chancel contains three seats in canopied niches, and has a finely ornamented roof.

BISHOPSTON, a parish in the hundred of Ramsbury, county of Wilts, 5½ miles (E.) from Swindon, containing 573 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the peculiar jurisdiction and patronage of the Prebendary of Bishopston in the Cathedral Church of Salisbury, rated in the king's books at £6. 6. 8. The church is dedicated to St. Mary.

BISHOPSTONE, a parish in the hundred of Grims-worth, county of Hereford, 7 miles (W. N. W.) from Hereford, containing 270 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, with the vicarage of Yazor annexed, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Hereford, rated in the king's books at £7. 7. 6., and in the patronage of Sir Uvedale Price, Bart. The church is dedicated to St. Lawrence.

BISHOPSTONE, a parish in the hundred of Bishop-stone, rape of Pevensey, county of Sussex, 1¼ mile (N. W. by N.) from Seaford, containing 277 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Lewes, and diocese of Chichester, rated in the king's books at £8. 13. 4., endowed with £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Bishop of Chichester. The church, comprising a nave, two chancels, and a tower, is chiefly in the Norman style of architecture. The Rev. James Hurdis, Professor of Poetry at Oxford, and author of the "Village Curate," and other interesting poems, was born here, in 1763.

BISHOP'S STORTFORD, county of Hertford.—See STORTFORD (BISHOP'S).

BISHOPSTROW, a parish in the hundred of Warminster, county of Wilts, 1¼ mile (E. S. E.) from Warminster, containing 275 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Salisbury, rated in the king's books at £11. 10., and in the patronage of Sir J. D. Astley, Bart. The church is dedicated to St. Adelme. About the commencement of the present century, three urns, containing Roman brass coins, were dug up here.

BISHOP'S-WOOD, a township in the parish of Brewood, eastern division of the hundred of Cuttle-stone, county of Stafford. The population is returned with the parish.

BISHOP-THORPE, a parish in the ainsty of the city, and east riding of the county, of York, 3½ miles (S. by W.) from York, containing 301 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of York, rated in the king's books at £4, endowed with £400 private benefaction, and £400 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Archbishop of York. The church, dedicated to St. Andrew, was rebuilt by Archbishop Drummond, in 1766, and adorned with a curious window, brought from the castle of Cawood. The parish was called St. Andrew's Thorpe until the manor was purchased, in the reign of John, by Walter de Grey, Archbishop of York, who built a palace and a chapel here; on which account, the episcopal prefix was given to it, and it has been the constant residence of the archbishops since the destruction of Cawood castle, in the parliamentary war. The palace was greatly enlarged and embellished by Archbishop Drummond, when that prelate took down and rebuilt the church. A National school was erected in 1815. Attached to it is a chapel, founded by De Grey; it is in the early style of English architecture.

BISHOPTON, a parish in the south-western division of STOCKTON ward, county palatine of DURHAM, comprising the townships of Bishopton, East and West Newbiggins, and Little Stainton, and containing 453 inhabitants, of which number, 365 are in the township of Bishopton, 6 miles (W. by N.) from Stockton. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Durham, rated in the king's books at £4. 5. 10., endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Master and Brethren of Sherburn Hospital. The church is dedicated to St. Peter. A parochial school, with a house for the master, was built a few years ago, by subscription, and is partly supported by a small annuity. In a field at the eastern extremity of the village there are vestiges of an intrenchment, which is supposed to have been part of the fortifications that guarded the mansion of the faithful Roger de Conyers, from whom William De St. Barbara, elect bishop of Durham, received powerful assistance in his struggle against Comyn, the usurper of the see, about the middle of the twelfth century, and at this secure retreat received the homage of those of his vassals who returned to their duty.

BISHOPTON, a township in that part of the parish of RIPON which is in the liberty of RIPON, West riding of the county of YORK, 2½ miles (N. by W.) from Ripon, containing 136 inhabitants.

BISHTON, a parish in the lower division of the hundred of CALDICOTT, county of MONMOUTH, 4 miles (S. E. by E.) from Caerleon, containing 153 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Llandaff, endowed with £1000 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Archdeacon of Llandaff. The church is dedicated to St. Cadwallader.

BISLEY, a parish (formerly a market town) in the hundred of BISLEY, county of GLOUCESTER, 11 miles (S. E.) from Gloucester, and 97 (W.) from London, containing 5421 inhabitants. The town is situated partly on the acclivity of a hill, and partly in the vale beneath it, which is watered by a small stream. The streets are irregularly formed, and contain few houses of respectable appearance. The inhabitants are chiefly employed in the manufacture of broad cloth, which is carried on to a considerable extent. The Thames and Severn canal passes through the parish, and, near the extremity of it, enters a tunnel, through which it is conducted for nearly two miles and a half under Salferton hill. A market was formerly held here, but it has been discontinued: the fairs are on May 4th and November 12th. The town is within the jurisdiction of a court of requests held at Cirencester, for the seven hundreds of Cirencester, established by an act passed in the 32nd of George III., for the recovery of debts under 40s.: a constable and other officers are appointed at the court leet of the lord of the manor. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Gloucester, rated in the king's books at £19. 10. 5., and in the patronage of the Crown. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a spacious and handsome structure, partly in the decorated, and partly in the later, style of English architecture, with a tower surmounted by a lofty spire: among other interesting monuments is a statue of one of the family of Nottingham. In the churchyard there is an octagonal cross, handsomely panelled in trefoil, and surmounted with an ancient font, erected over a well, in which a man having been drowned, the cemetery was placed under an interdict for three years, during which time the dead were carried to Bibury for interment. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. The free school is supported by a portion of the produce of lands left for the repair of the church, the payment of the clerk, and the salary of the schoolmaster, who receives at present £13. 14. per annum. A Blue-coat school for clothing and instructing ten boys, endowed in 1820, by Mr. Taylor, has been incorporated with the free school, and the master receives a salary of £12. 12. per annum, for instructing the boys. The common, then consisting of one thousand two hundred acres, was given to the poor of this parish by Roger Mortimer, Earl of March, in the reign of Edward III.; a considerable part of it has been enclosed. At Lilly-house, a hamlet near the town, a vaulted chamber was discovered, with several adjoining apartments, having tessellated pavements, and niches in the walls; some other relics of antiquity, supposed to be Roman, have also been found at Custom-Scrubs, another adjacent hamlet.

BISLEY, a parish in the first division of the hundred of GODLEY, county of SURREY, 4 miles (S. E.) from Bagshot, containing 273 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Surrey, and diocese of Winchester, rated in the king's books at £7. 16. 8., and in the patronage of the Rev. John King, the Rev. Charles Simeon, and the Rev. — Ball. The church, part of which is built with timber and brick plastered over, is dedicated to St. John the Baptist, and is said to be six centuries old: near it there is a chalybeate spring, called St. John the Baptist's well.

BISPHAM, a parish in the hundred of AMOUNDERNESS, county palatine of LANCASTER, comprising the townships of Bispham with Norbreck, and Layton with Warbrick, and containing 1072 inhabitants, of which number, 323 are in the township of Bispham with Norbreck, 3 miles (W. N. W.) from Poulton. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Richmond, and diocese of Chester, endowed with £400 private benefaction, and £400 royal bounty, and in the patronage of B. Hesketh, Esq. Richard Higginson founded a school in 1659, which he endowed with a rent-charge of £30; the income, by subsequent benefactors, has been augmented to £70 per annum.

BISPHAM, a chapelry in the parish of CROSTON, hundred of LEYLAND, county palatine of LANCASTER, 6½ miles (N. E. by E.) from Ormskirk, containing 254 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Chester, and in the patronage of the Trustees of the founders of the chapel, which is dedicated to St. John. A free grammar school, founded by Richard Durning, in 1692, is endowed with an estate producing about £200 per annum.

BISTERN-BARTLEY, a tything in the parish of ELING, hundred of REDBRIDGE, New Forest (East) division of the county of SOUTHAMPTON. The population is returned with the parish.

BITCHFIELD, a parish in the wapentake of BELTISLOE, parts of KESTEVEN, county of LINCOLN, 3½ miles (N. by W.) from Corby, containing 144 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £5. 11. 5½., endowed with £200 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Bishop of Lincoln. The church is dedicated to St. Mary Magdalene.

BITCHFIELD, a township in the parish of STAMFORDHAM, north-eastern division of TINDALE ward, county of NORTHUMBERLAND, 13 miles (N. W.) from Newcastle, containing 39 inhabitants.

BITTADON, a parish in the hundred of BRAUNTON, county of DEVON, 6½ miles (N. by W.) from Barnstaple, containing 52 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Barnstaple, and diocese of Exeter, rated in the king's books at £5. 2. 8½., and in the patronage of G. A. Barbor, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Peter.

BITTERING (LITTLE), a parish in the hundred of LAUNDITCH, county of NORFOLK, 5 miles (N. W.) from East Dereham. The population is returned with the parish of Beeston St. Mary. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £2. 13. 6½., endowed with £800 royal bounty, and in the patronage of James Dover, Esq.

BITTERLEY, a parish partly in the hundred of MUNSLow, but chiefly in the hundred of OVERS, county of SALOP, 4½ miles (E. N. E.) from Ludlow, containing 1064 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Salop, and diocese of Hereford, rated in the king's books at £18. 6. 3., and in the patronage of Sir J. D. King, Bart. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. John Newborough, in 1712, gave £400, now producing £34 per annum, towards the support of a free grammar school.

BITTERN, a tything in that part of the parish of SOUTH STONEHAM which is in the hundred of MANSBRIDGE, Fawley division of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, 2 miles (N. E.) from Southampton. The population is returned with the parish. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. Bittern is within the jurisdiction of the Cheyney Court held at Winchester every Thursday, for the recovery of debts to any amount. This was the site of the Roman station Clausentum: a variety of Roman relics has been found.

BITTESBY, a liberty in the parish of CLAYBROOKE, hundred of GUTHLAXTON, county of LEICESTER, 3 miles (W. by N.) from Lutterworth, containing 11 inhabitants.

BITTESWELL, a parish in the hundred of GUTHLAXTON, county of LEICESTER, 1 mile (N. by W.) from Lutterworth, containing 427 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Leicester, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £4. 3. 0½., and in the alternate patronage of the Master and Wardens of the Haberdashers' Company, and the Governors of Christ's Hospital, London. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. The Roman Watling-street passes along the verge of the parish, and there is a mineral spring within its limits.

BITTISCOMBE, a hamlet in the parish of UPTON, hundred of WILLITON and FREEMANNERS, county of SOMERSET. The population is returned with the parish. Here was anciently a chapel, which has been demolished.

BITTON, a parish in the upper division of the hundred of LANGLEY and SWINEHEAD, county of GLOUCESTER, comprising the chapelries of Hanham and Oldland, and the hamlet of Bitton, and containing 7171 inhabitants, of which number, 1788 are in the hamlet of Bitton, 6½ miles (E. S. E.) from Bristol. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry, and diocese of Gloucester, rated in the king's books at £18. 15., and in the patronage of the Prebendary of Bitton in the Cathedral Church of Salisbury. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a large and handsome edifice, with a finely ornamented tower, partly Norman and partly in the later style of English architecture; it contains one thousand and nineteen sittings, of which eight hundred and eighty-eight are free, and in 1892, was constituted a district church. A chapel was built in 1820, under the provisions of a late act, toward the expense of which the parliamentary commissioners granted £2293. The river Avon flows along the southern side of the parish.

BIX-BRAND, a parish in the hundred of BINFIELD, county of OXFORD, 4 miles (N. W. by N.) from Henley upon Thames, containing, with Bix-Gibwen, 383 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, with that of Bix-Gibwen consolidated, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford, rated in the king's books at £9. 15., and in the patronage of the Earl of Macclesfield. The church is dedicated to St. James.

BIX-GIBWEN, a parish in the hundred of BINFIELD, county of OXFORD, 2½ miles (N. W.) from Henley upon Thames. The population is returned with Bix-Brand. The living is a rectory, consolidated with that of Bix-Brand, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford. The church, which was dedicated to St. Michael, is in ruins.

BIXLEY, a parish in the hundred of HENSTEAD, county of NORFOLK, 3 miles (S. E. by S.) from Norwich, containing 107 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, with that of Earl's Framlingham united, in the archdeaconry of Norfolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £5, and in the patronage of the Duke of Norfolk. The church, dedicated to St. Wandegisilus, to whose image here pilgrimages were formerly made, is an ancient edifice, built by William de Dunwich, in 1272.

BIXTON, or BICKERSTON, a parish in the hundred of FOREHOE, county of NORFOLK, 5½ miles (N. by W.) from Wymondham. The population is returned with Barnham-Broom. The living is a rectory, united, with that of Barnham-Broom, to the vicarage of Kimberley, in the archdeaconry of Norfolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £2. 6. 8. The church, now desecrated, was dedicated to St. Andrew.

BLABY, a parish in the hundred of GUTHLAXTON, county of LEICESTER, 4½ miles (S. by W.) from Leicester, containing, with the chapelry of Countess-Thorpe, 1730 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Leicester, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £15. 5., and in the patronage of the Crown. The church is dedicated to All Saints. There are places of worship for Baptists and Wesleyan Methodists. The Union canal passes through the parish.

BLACKAUTON, a parish in the hundred of COLERIDGE, county of DEVON, 5 miles (W. by N.) from Dartmouth, containing 1227 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Totness, and diocese of Exeter, rated in the king's books at £15. 8. 9., endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of Col. Seale. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, contains a Norman font, and a wooden screen richly carved. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists.

BLACKBOROUGH, a parish in the hundred of HAYRIDGE, county of DEVON, 5 miles (E. S. E.) from Cullompton, containing 74 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, annexed to that of Bundley, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Exeter, rated in the king's books at £4. The church, which was dedicated to All Saints, is desecrated, but the cemetery is still used.

BLACKBROOK, or BLAKEBROOK, a hamlet in that part of the parish of KIDDERMINSTER which is called the Foreign, lower division of the hundred of HALFESHIRE, county of WORCESTER, $\frac{1}{2}$ a mile (W.) from Kidderminster. The population is returned with the parish. Several new houses have lately been erected in this hamlet, which has become an agreeable part of the environs of Kidderminster.

BLACKBURN, a parish in the lower division of the hundred of BLACKBURN, county palatine of LANCASTER, comprising the market town of Blackburn, the chapelries of Balderston, Billington, Great Harwood, Over Darwen, Mellor, Salesbury, Samlesbury, Tockholes, and Walton le Dale, and the townships of Clayton le Dale, Cuerdale, Lower Darwen, Dinkley, Eccleshill, Little Harwood, Livesey, Osbaldeston, Pleasington, Ramsgrave, Rishton, Wilshire, and Witton, and containing 53,350 inhabitants, of which number, 21,940 are in the town of Blackburn, 31 miles (S. E. by S.) from Lancaster, and 210 (N. N. W.) from London. This place takes its name from a small rivulet flowing near the town, which, from the turbid state of the water, was anciently called Blakeburn, or the yellow bourne. A castle is said to have been built here, probably by the Romans, which, after their departure from the island, was occupied successively by the Britons and the Saxons; but there are no vestiges of it, nor can even its site be distinctly ascertained. Blackburn was formerly the capital of a district, called Blackburnshire, which for many ages was a dreary and uncultivated waste. In the reign of Elizabeth, it was distinguished as a good market town, and, in the middle of the following century, was celebrated for its supplies of corn, cattle, and provisions. The town is pleasantly situated on the northern bank of the river Derwent, over which are three stone bridges, and in a valley sheltered by a ridge of hills, extending from the north-east to the north-west: it consists of several streets, irregularly formed, but containing several well-built, and many respectable, houses; it is well paved, lighted with gas, and amply supplied with water. In 1824, an act of parliament was obtained for constructing a new turnpike road to Preston, crossing the river Ribble at Brockholes, by which the distance is shortened nearly two miles; and under the same act the town has been greatly improved. There are assembly-rooms, a subscription library, a Linnæan Society, and a theatre, which was erected in 1818. The manufacture of Blackburn checks, and subsequently that of Blackburn greys, a mixture of linen and cotton, which formerly flourished here to a considerable extent, have been superseded by the manufacture of calico, muslin, and cotton goods: not less than forty thousand pieces of the last are, on an average, made weekly, in which about ten thousand persons are employed: the value of these goods, exclusively of dyeing and printing, is estimated at two millions sterling per annum. There are large factories for the spinning of cotton, printing and dyeing establishments, and extensive bleaching grounds.

Some of the earliest and most important improvements in the spinning and manufacture of cotton originated with James Hargreave, a carpenter in this town, who was the inventor and patentee of the spinning jenny, which has since been so generally adopted. The introduction of machinery into the factories excited powerful sensation among the workmen of this place, and created such tumultuous proceedings on the part of the populace, who destroyed several of the factories in which it was used, that the inventor was driven from the town; and many individuals who had invested large capitals in the establishment of cotton-factories, were so intimidated, that they embraced the earliest opportunity of withdrawing their investments, and removing to places where they might employ them with greater security. There are at present about one hundred thousand spindles in operation in the town and neighbourhood, which produce about thirty-five thousand pounds of yarn weekly. The Leeds and Liverpool canal passes the town, and affords communication with the Mersey, the Dee, the Ouse, the Trent, the Humber, the Severn, and the Thames, forming a most extensive line of inland navigation. The market days are Wednesday and Saturday: the fairs are held on Easter-Monday, May 11th and 12th, and October 17th; a cattle fair is also held on the first Wednesday before February 2nd, and on every alternate Wednesday till Michaelmas. The want of a convenient market-place is strongly felt in this populous town: Fleming-square has been recently appropriated for this purpose, but the area is scarcely large enough. One side of the square is occupied by a spacious cloth-hall, erected for the exhibition and sale of Yorkshire woollen cloths, a great quantity of which is brought hither. Blackburn is within the jurisdiction of the magistrates acting for the hundred to which it gives name: two high constables are appointed, one for the upper, and one for the lower, division, for which latter, together with Whalley, a court of petty session is held here. Its local concerns are under the superintendence of commissioners appointed by a special act of parliament.

This extensive parish, which is fourteen miles in length, and ten in breadth, was formerly part of the parish of Whalley; on being separated from which, it was, on account of its sterility, endowed with a fourth part of the tithes of that parish, in addition to its own. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Chester, rated in the king's books at £8. 1. 8., and in the patronage of the Archbishop of Canterbury. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, and formerly the conventual church of the monastery of Whalley, was rebuilt in the reign of Edward III., and again in that of Henry VIII.; but in 1819 it was taken down, with the exception of the tower, and the chapel of the Duncan family, which contains the altar, and in which baptisms and marriages are still solemnized, and the funeral service is performed. A new church was completed in 1826, on the site of the old grammar school, at an expense of £26,000, raised by a rate under an act of parliament passed in 1819; it was a spacious and elegant edifice, partly in the decorated, and partly in the later, style of English architecture, with a lofty square tower, highly enriched, and crowned with a pierced parapet and crocketed pinnacles, but was burned down in January 1831. The interior was lofty in its proportions, and elegant in its details; the nave lighted with a fine range of double clerestory windows, and those in the aisles enriched with flowing tracery of graceful character. The chapels of St. John and St. Peter are both neat modern edifices: St. Peter's is a chapel of ease; the living of St. John's is a perpetual curacy, in the patronage of the Vicar of Blackburn, in whom is also vested the presentation to the several perpetual curacies in the parish, with the exception of that of Salesbury. At Lower Darwen, Over Darwen, and Mellor, new churches have been erected, the expense of each having been partly defrayed by grant from the parliamentary commissioners; they are all in the later style of English architecture, with towers, and were begun in 1827, and completed in 1829. The church at Lower Darwen contains seven hundred and twenty-three free sittings, and the cost of its erection was £5491. 2. 6.: that at Over Darwen, which contains nine hundred and eighty-five free sittings, was erected at an expense of £6573. 4. 9.; and that at Mellor, which has a spire, and contains six hundred and seventy-eight free sittings, cost £5275. 6. 9. There are two places of worship each for Baptists and Independents, and one each for the Society of Friends, Primitive and Wesleyan Methodists, Swedenborgians, and Unitarians, besides two Roman Catholic chapels. The free grammar school was founded in the reign of Elizabeth, who placed it under the superintendence of fifty governors resident in the town, who are a corporate body, and appoint a master: it is endowed with land in the neighbourhood, producing £120 per annum; there are thirty boys on the foundation: the premises, consisting of a schoolroom and house for the master, are handsomely built of stone. The Rev. Robert Bolton, an eminent divine, and one of the compilers of the Liturgy, was a native of this town, and received the rudiments of his education in the school. In 1764, Mr. John Leyland bequeathed £250 for the instruction of poor girls in reading, writing, sewing, and knitting; this sum has been augmented by subsequent benefactions, and at present ninety girls are instructed and clothed. There is also a National school, supported by subscription, in which eight hundred children of both sexes are taught. The general dispensary was established in 1828: there are a ladies' society for the relief of poor women during child-birth at their own houses, a strangers' friend society, and several other charitable institutions.

BLACK-CHAPEL, a chapelry in the parish of GREAT WALTHAM, hundred of CHELMSFORD, county of ESSEX, 9 miles (N. by W.) from Chelmsford. The population is returned with the parish.

BLACKDEN, a township in that part of the parish of SANDBACH which is in the hundred of NORTHWICH, county palatine of CHESTER, 6½ miles (S. S. E.) from Knutsford, containing 191 inhabitants.

BLACKFORD, a chapelry in the parish of WENMORE, hundred of BEMPSTONE, county of SOMERSET, 5¼ miles (S. by W.) from Axbridge. The population is returned with the parish. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Wells, and diocese of Bath and Wells, and in the patronage of the Dean of Wells. The chapel is of recent erection, towards defraying the expense of which the Incorporated Society for the enlargement of churches and chapels gave £200. The manor was given as part of the endowment of Bruton Hospital, by Hugh Saxey, Esq., the founder; and two boys are annually sent from this place to be educated at that institution. Here is a mineral spring.

BLACKFORD, a parish in the hundred of WHITLEY, though locally in the hundred of Horethorne, county of SOMERSET, 4¼ miles (W. S. W.) from Wincanton, containing 154 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Wells, and diocese of Bath and Wells, rated in the king's books at £6. 11. 0½., endowed with £1200 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Rev. J. Richards. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is in the early style of English architecture, but there is a Norman arch over the entrance.

BLACKFORDBY, a chapelry in the parish of ASHBY de la ZOUCH, western division of the hundred of GOSCOTE, county of LEICESTER, 2½ miles (W. N. W.) from Ashby de la Zouch, containing 290 inhabitants. The chapel is dedicated to St. Margaret. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. The Ashby de la Zouch canal crosses the wolds south of this place.

BLACKHEATH, a village situated within the parishes of GREENWICH, LEWISHAM, and LEE, in the hundred of BLACKHEATH, lathe of SUTTON at HONE, county of KENT, 5 miles (S. E.) from London, on the road to Dover. The population is returned with the respective parishes. This place, which takes its name either from the colour of the soil, or from the bleakness of its situation, prior to the erection of the numerous villas with which it abounds, was the scene of many important political transactions. In 1011, the Danes having landed at Greenwich, encamped on the heath, and, among other barbarities, put to death Alphege, Archbishop of Canterbury, who had refused to sanction their extortions, and who was afterwards canonized. In the reign of Richard II., the insurgents under Wat Tyler, amounting to one hundred thousand men, took up their station here, whence they marched to London. In 1400, Henry IV. held an interview at this place with the Emperor of Constantinople, who came to solicit aid against Bajazet, Emperor of the Turks; and in 1415, the lord mayor and aldermen of London, in their robes of state, attended by four hundred of the principal citizens, clothed in scarlet, came hither in procession to meet Henry V., on his triumphant return after the battle of Agincourt. In 1451, Henry VI. met many of the followers of Jack Cade, who submitted to his authority, and on their knees implored and obtained his pardon; and here, the following year, that monarch assembled his forces to oppose Richard, Duke of York, who aspired to the throne. In 1497, the Cornish rebels, headed by Lord Audley, who had advanced into Kent, encamped near Eltham, and awaited the approach of Henry VII., on whose arrival a battle ensued, on the 22nd of July, in which the insurgents were defeated, and their leader, together with two of his associates who had excited the rebellion, taken and executed. In 1519, Campejo, the pope's legate, was received here in great state by the Duke of Norfolk, with a numerous retinue of bishops, knights, and gentlemen, who conducted him to a magnificent tent of cloth of gold, whence, after having arrayed himself in his cardinal's robes, he proceeded to London; and at this place, in 1540, Henry VIII. appointed an interview with Anne of Cleves, previously to their marriage, which was celebrated with great pomp in the chapel at Greenwich. Blackheath is pleasantly situated on elevated ground, commanding diversified and extensive views of the surrounding country, which is richly cultivated, and abounds with fine scenery, in which Greenwich Hospital, the park, and the river Thames, are prominent objects. There are many elegant villas, among which the Paragon, a beautiful range of building, is eminently conspicuous: on the west, and within the park, is the residence of the Princess Sophia of Gloucester, formerly occupied by the Duchess of Brunswick: the mansion in which the Princess of Wales resided has been lately taken down. Wricklemarsh House, once the noblest ornament of the heath, erected early in the last century, by Sir Gregory Page, was rased to the ground in 1787, by the different purchasers to whom it had been sold in lots by public auction; its site, now called Park-road, is occupied by handsome cottages. There are two episcopal chapels, one on that part of the heath which is in the parish of Lewisham, and the other at Kidbrook, an extra-parochial district on the north side of the heath, built by Dr. Greenlaw. The free grammar school, for thirty-one boys of Lewisham and the adjoining parishes, and for the sons of all the clergy in the hundred of Blackheath, was founded by the Rev. Abraham Colfe, vicar of Lewisham, who erected the premises in 1652, and at his death, in 1656, bequeathed the greater part of his estate in land, and £1100 in money, in trust to the Leather-sellers' Company, for its endowment, and for other charitable uses. The income is £342. 15. 6. per annum: the master, who is allowed to take twenty-six boarders, receives about £40 per annum, and resides in the house free of rent; the instruction of the free scholars is now confined to English and writing. There were seven exhibitions, of £10 each per annum, to either of the Universities; but from a failure in the funds appropriated to that use, they have been for some years discontinued. A British school for boys, and several small schools, are also supported by the liberal benevolence of the resident gentry. Morden College, a noble institution for the support of decayed merchants in the decline of life, was founded by Sir John Morden, Bart., an opulent Turkey merchant, in 1695, who endowed it with the manor of Old Court, producing £1600 per annum: the establishment consists of thirty brethren, a chaplain, and a treasurer; and the management is vested in seven trustees, who must be either Turkey merchants, or Directors of the East India Company. The premises, which occupy a spacious quadrangle, are handsomely built of brick, with quoins and cornices of stone, and are surrounded with a piazza: over the entrance are statues of the founder and his lady, whose portraits are in the hall; and in the chapel are the arms of Sir John, who was interred there in 1708.

At the distance of two or three hundred yards north of Blackheath hill, a cavern, containing several apartments, was discovered in 1780: it is supposed to have been formed as a place of security during the Saxon and Danish contests; but every attempt to explore it has been frustrated, from the falling in of the earth, and nothing has yet been found to illustrate its history. The Watling-street, or Roman road from London to Dovor, which passed over the heath, may still be traced; and in 1710, several Roman urns were dug up, two of which were of fine red clay, one of a spherical, and the other of a cylindrical, form: the former, about two feet in diameter, contained ashes, and was rudely inscribed, near the mouth, with the words "Marcus Aurelius IIII;" the latter, eighteen inches in height, contained ashes and some coins, on which, though much obliterated, the names of the emperors Claudius and Gallienus were legible. In 1803, several urns were also discovered in the gardens of the Earl of Dartmouth, about a foot below the surface of the ground, which were presented by his lordship to the British Museum.

BLACKLAND, a parish in the hundred of CALNE, county of WILTS, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (S. E.) from Calne, containing 44 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, within the jurisdiction of the Prebendary of Calne in the Cathedral Church of Salisbury, rated in the king's books at £3. 10. 10., and in the patronage of the Rev. James Mayo. The church is dedicated to St. Peter.

BLACKLEY, a chapelry in the parish of MANCHESTER, hundred of SALFORD, county palatine of LANCASTER, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. N. E.) from Manchester, containing 2911 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Chester, endowed with £200 royal bounty, and £600 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Warden and Fellows of the Collegiate Church of Manchester. The chapel, dedicated to St. Peter, was, previously to the Reformation, a domestic chapel belonging to Blackley Hall, and, after a period of disuse, was purchased by the inhabitants, in 1610: it has lately received an addition of four hundred sittings, half of them free, towards defraying the expense of which the Incorporated Society for the enlargement of churches and chapels gave £400. There are places of worship for Wesleyan Methodists and Socinians. The inhabitants are chiefly employed in weaving, printing, bleaching, and dyeing cotton. A school, in connexion with the established church, has an endowment of £5 per annum, and is further supported by contributions: the school-room was built in 1794.

BLACKMANSTONE, a parish within the liberty of ROMNEY-MARSH, though locally in the hundred of Worth, lathe of SHEPWAY, county of KENT, 3 miles (N. by E.) from New Romney, containing 8 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Canterbury, rated in the king's books at £4, and in the patronage of the Archbishop of Canterbury. The church is desecrated, and the population has for several years been decreasing.

BLACKMORE, a parish in the hundred of CHELMSFORD, county of ESSEX, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W. by W.) from Ingatestone, containing 657 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Essex, and diocese of London, rated in the king's books at £6. 13. 4., endowed with a rent-charge of £20 private benefaction, £400 royal bounty, and £1400 parliamentary grant. The King presented by lapse in 1808. The church, dedicated to St. Lawrence, was the conventual church of a priory of Black canons, which was built by Adam and Jordan de Samford, about the commencement of the reign of John: it was dissolved in the 17th of Henry VIII., at which time the revenue, amounting to £85. 9. 7., was applied by Cardinal Wolsey toward the endowment of his two colleges at Oxford and Ipswich, and on his attainder, in 1529, was appropriated to the crown. Henry VIII. afterwards occasionally resided in the house, which, having lately undergone a thorough repair, is now an elegant private mansion.

BLACKPOOL, a chapelry and bathing-place in the parish of BISPHAM, hundred of AMOUNDERNESS, county palatine of LANCASTER, 4 miles (S.W. by W.) from Poulton, and 25 (S.W. by W.) from Lancaster, containing 800 resident inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Richmond, and diocese of Chester, endowed with £600 private benefaction, and £1700 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of P. Hesketh, Esq. The chapel was built in 1821, at an expense of £1150, and the Incorporated Society for the enlargement of churches and chapels granted £200 for defraying the expense of a greater number of sittings. Blackpool, which acquired its name from a boggy pool at the southern end of the village, was, until within the last eighty years, an inconsiderable place; but, owing to its eligibility for bathing, it is now frequented every summer by a crowd of visitors, for whose accommodation commodious hotels and lodging-houses have been erected. The beach slopes gently from the site of the houses; the sands are smooth and firm: and the air is highly salubrious. The parade forms an agreeable promenade, from which there is an extensive view of the fells in Westmorland and Cumberland, and the mountains in North Wales. Excellent regulations have been introduced for the convenience of bathers; a news-room and library have been established, a theatre erected, and assemblies are occasionally held at the different hotels. Every alternate Sunday during the season the inhabitants of the surrounding district assemble at Lane-End, and join in various rustic sports. The sea appears to have encroached considerably on the shore; a large stone, called Penny-stone, lying on the sands, about half a mile from the shore, is stated by tradition to mark the site on which a public-house formerly stood. A free school was established in 1817, which is conducted on Dr. Bell's plan.

BLACKROD, a chapelry in the parish of BOLTON, hundred of SALFORD, county palatine of LANCASTER, 4½ miles (S. S. E.) from Chorley, containing 2436 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Chester, endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Vicar of Great Bolton. The chapel is dedicated to St. Catherine. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. This is the site of a Roman station, named Coccium by Antonine, and Rigodunum by Ptolemy, which was situated on the Watling-street. The spinning of cotton, and the printing of calico, are carried on within the chapelry, its trade being facilitated by a branch of the Lancaster canal, which crosses it. A fair for toys and pedlary is held on the first Thursday after July 12th. A respectable free grammar school under the superintendence of trustees, is endowed with about £140 per annum, being the produce of various benefactions. John Holmes, in 1568, founded an exhibition at Pembroke College, Cambridge, for a scholar on this foundation; the fund having accumulated, three exhibitioners are now appointed, receiving respectively £60, £70, and £80, per annum, for four years. The house for the master was rebuilt in 1798.

BLACKTHORN, a chapelry in the parish of AMBROSDEN, hundred of BULLINGTON, county of OXFORD, 3 miles (S. E. by E.) from Bicester, containing 393 inhabitants. The chapel is in ruins. The Roman Akeman-street enters the county here, and proceeds over Blackthorn hill, in its course through the parish. The custom of running at the quintal, or quintain, the origin and practice of which are attributed to the Romans, was anciently observed on the occasion of a wedding in this chapelry.

BLACKTOFT, a parish in the wapentake of HOWDENSHERE, East riding of the county of YORK, comprising the townships of Blacktoft and Scalby, and containing 457 inhabitants, of which number, 278 are in the township of Blacktoft, 7½ miles (E. S. E.) from Howden. The living is a perpetual curacy, within the jurisdiction of the peculiar court of Howdenshire, endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £1000 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Durham. The village is situated on the northern bank of the Ouse, one mile above its confluence with the Trent, and there are usually vessels lying at anchor opposite to it.

BLACKWALL, a hamlet in the parish of STEPNEY, Tower division of the hundred of OSSULSTONE, county of MIDDLESEX, 2½ miles (E.) from London. The population is returned with Poplar. This place, which is situated near the influx of the river Lea into the Thames, consists chiefly of a few irregularly formed streets, which are paved, and lighted with gas; the houses, many of which are of wood, and of mean appearance, are inhabited chiefly by shipwrights, and persons employed in the docks: the inhabitants are supplied with water by the East London Water Company. It has long been noted for a very large private yard for ship-building, and a wet dock, formerly belonging to Mr. Perry, the former of which was purchased by Sir Robert Wigram, Bart., and is still applied to the same use; and the latter by the East India Company, for the formation of their docks, which were commenced in 1804, and completed in 1806. These docks are situated at the eastern extremity of the hamlet, and are surrounded by a lofty wall: the entrance from the shore is through a handsome gateway, surmounted by a square turret, supporting an octagonal dome, in front of which is a tablet, recording the date of their erection: they consist of an outer and an inner dock, both enclosed with walls and communicating by locks and flood gates. The entrance from the river is by a basin, nearly three acres in extent, from which vessels sail directly into the docks: the inner, or import dock, which is one thousand four hundred feet in length, five hundred and sixty in breadth, and of an average depth of thirty feet, occupies an area of eighteen acres, and, on the arrival of the fleets, affords accommodation for sixteen ships to unload their cargoes, though, from the custom-house regulations, only twelve landing officers being appointed, no more than twelve vessels can be unloaded at the same time. The outer, or export, dock is seven hundred and eighty feet long and five hundred and twenty feet wide, and of the same depth as the inner dock; it was enlarged in 1817 by an additional basin, prior to which its area was rather more than nine acres. Extensive ranges of warehouses have been erected within the walls: those on the north side are for saltpetre, on the south for storing the cargoes imported in shipping belonging to the private trade, and, on the east side of the import dock, for such goods as are not removed to the Company's warehouses. Sheds are also ranged round the docks, for the numerous vans employed in removing the merchandise to its several places of destination: these, of which seldom less than eighty are in constant use, are strong carriages built expressly for the purpose, and secured with bars and locks, with duplicate keys, one of which is kept at the docks, and the other at the Company's warehouses. At Blackwell Reach, adjoining this hamlet, are the West India docks, similarly constructed, but upon a more extensive scale. These consist of two spacious docks parallel with each other, and of equal dimensions, being nearly half a mile in length, excavated in a direction crossing the isthmus of the Isle of Dogs, and having an entrance basin of large extent at each extremity, by which vessels sailing in either direction may avoid the circuitous bend of the river. Between the docks are extensive ranges of warehouses, as also on the south side of the inner dock, for the convenience of forwarding goods by land carriage, and on the north side of the outer dock, in front of which is a canal three quarters of a mile in length, intersecting the Isle of Dogs, and forming a direct communication with the river at two points, between which the distance, by sailing round the isle, is nearly four miles and a half.

BLACKWATER, a large village in the parish of YATELY, hundred of CRONDALL, Basingstoke division of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, 15 miles (E. N. E.) from Basingstoke. The population is returned with the parish. It occupies a low situation on the great western road, at the point of junction of the three counties of Southampton, Surrey, and Berks, on the western bank of the river Blackwater, which is here crossed by a bridge: on the northern side of the road is a range of handsome buildings, appropriated as residences for the masters of the adjoining college of Sandhurst. It is principally indebted for the traffic it enjoys to the number of coaches that pass through it daily. There is a place of worship for Particular Baptists. A fair for cattle and sheep is held on September 8th. Blackwater is within the jurisdiction of the Cheyney Court held at Winchester every Thursday, for the recovery of debts to any amount.

BLACKWELL, or BLACKHALL (HIGH), a township in that part of the parish of ST. CUTHBERT, CARLISLE, which is in CUMBERLAND ward, county of CUMBERLAND, $2\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S.) from Carlisle, containing 283 inhabitants. This manor was given by Margaret de Wigton, heiress of Sir John de Wigton, to Sir Robert Parvinge, serjeant at law, and afterwards Lord High Chancellor, in the reign of Edward III., for successfully conducting her cause against Sir Robert de Bridekirk, who had impugned her title to the barony of Wigton. Thomas Lowrey, Esq., in 1779, bequeathed £200, directing that one-half of the interest should be given to a schoolmaster for teaching poor children, and the remainder to poor widows. In 1798, Grace Graham gave £100 to a school at Durdar, in this township.

BLACKWELL, or BLACKHALL (LOW), a township in that part of the parish of ST. CUTHBERT, CARLISLE, which is in CUMBERLAND ward, county of CUMBERLAND, 2 miles (S.) from Carlisle, containing 124 inhabitants.

BLACKWELL, a chapelry in the parish of BAKEWELL, hundred of HIGH PEAK, county of DERBY, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. W.) from Tideswell, containing 58 inhabitants.

BLACKWELL, a parish in the hundred of SCARSDALE, county of DERBY, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. E. by E.) from Alfreton, containing 457 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Derby, and diocese of Lichfield and Coventry, rated in the king's books at £5. 4. 2., endowed with £800 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Duke of Devonshire. The church, dedicated to St. Werburgh, was rebuilt in 1826. Coal is obtained in the parish.

BLACKWELL, a township in the parish of DARLINGTON, south-eastern division of DARLINGTON ward, county palatine of DURHAM, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (S. W. by S.) from Darlington, containing 268 inhabitants. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. The river Tees is navigable here, and a railway from Croftbridge to Darlington passes in the vicinity. At the Grange, in this township, then the property and residence of George Allan, Esq., there was formerly an extensive collection of books, manuscripts, paintings, natural and artificial curiosities, and British birds stuffed, formed at a considerable expense by that gentleman, who had also a press, with which he printed several works, some of them very scarce: this ingenious topographer, antiquary, and virtuoso, the early part of whose life was spent in the profession of the law, died of paralysis, May 18th, 1800.

BLACKWELL, a hamlet in the parish of TREDINGTON, upper division of the hundred of OSWALDSLOW, county of WORCESTER, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. N. W.) from Shipston upon Stour, containing 228 inhabitants.

BLACKWOOD, a joint township with Croborough, in the parish of HORTON, northern division of the hundred of TOTMONSLOW, county of STAFFORD, 4 miles (W.) from Leek, containing, with Croborough, 561 inhabitants.

BLACKWORTH, a township in the parish of EARSDON, eastern division of CASTLE ward, county of NORTHUMBERLAND, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W.) from North Shields, containing 243 inhabitants. Here is an extensive colliery, the produce of which, known as "Northumberland Wallsend," and "Earsdon Main," is of a superior quality. A school-room has been built, chiefly at the expense of the Duke of Northumberland.

BLACON, a joint township with Crabhall, in that part of the parish of HOLY TRINITY, CHESTER, which is in the higher division of the hundred of WIRRAL, county palatine of CHESTER, 2 miles (W. N. W.) from Chester, containing, with Crabhall, 75 inhabitants. The Ellesmere canal passes in the vicinity.

BLADON, a parish in the hundred of WOOTTON, county of OXFORD, 2 miles (S.) from Woodstock, containing, with the hamlet of Hensington, 510 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, with the chapelry of New Woodstock annexed, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford, rated in the king's books at £16. 0. 5., and in the patronage of the Duke of Marlborough. The church is dedicated to St. Martin. There is a small endowment for the education of poor children.

BLAENAVON, a parochial chapelry in the hundred of ABERGAVENNY, county of MONMOUTH, 5 miles (S.W.) from Abergavenny, containing about 2500 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Llandaff, endowed with £400 royal bounty, and £2000 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of Thomas Hill, Esq. There are two places of worship for Baptists. The village, which has of late assumed the appearance of a thriving town, lies in a mountainous district, near the source of the Avon Lwyd, whence it derives its name; many of the houses are excavated in the solid rock. The neighbourhood abounds with iron-ore, coal, and limestone; and iron-works, on an extensive scale, were completed here in 1789, since which they have been progressively increasing: the major portion of the pig iron is conveyed, by means of a canal and a rail-road, to Newport, whence it is exported. A customary market is held on Saturday. Near the iron-works stands a spacious English free school, endowed in 1816 by Mrs. Sarah Hopkins, for the instruction of the children of the miners: the present number, including both sexes, is about two hundred and forty.

BLAGDON, a township in the parish of STANNINGTON, western division of CASTLE ward, county of NORTHUMBERLAND, 6½ miles (S.) from Morpeth, containing 64 inhabitants.

BLAGDON, a tything in the parish of PITMINSTER, hundred of TAUNTON and TAUNTON-DEAN, county of SOMERSET, 5 miles (S. by W.) from Taunton. The population is returned with the parish. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists.

BLAGDON, a parish in the hundred of WINTERSTOKE, county of SOMERSET, 6½ miles (N. E. by E.) from Axbridge, containing 1068 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Wells, and diocese of Bath and Wells, rated in the king's books at £29. 13. 9., and in the patronage of George Thorne, Esq. The church, dedicated to St. Andrew, has lately been rebuilt, towards defraying the expense of which the Incorporated Society for the enlargement of churches and chapels granted £500. John Langhorne, D.D., a poet and miscellaneous writer, for some time rector of this parish, lies interred in the churchyard. There is a place of worship for Methodists. Lapis calaminaris is found in the vicinity, and teasel, for the use of the clothiers, is cultivated to a great extent: here is also a paper-mill. Thomas Baynard, by indenture dated November 8th, 1687, gave land for the instruction of eight poor children: the endowment now produces £17. 10. per annum, for which seventeen children are gratuitously taught to read and write. There are also benefactions for the use of the poor, and a fund of £13 per annum, arising from land given by John Leman, for apprenticing children. At a place called Reg-hill-bury, where are some ruins, tradition relates that a royal palace once stood.

BLAGRAVE, a joint tything with Hadley, in the parish and hundred of LAMBOURN, county of BERKS, containing, with Hadley, 451 inhabitants.

BLAISDON, a parish in the hundred of WESTBURY, county of GLOUCESTER, 3½ miles (E. S. E.) from Michel-Dean, containing 243 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Hereford, and diocese of Gloucester, rated in the king's books at £5. 7. 3½., and in the patronage of Anna Gordon. The church is dedicated to St. Michael.

BLAKEMERE, a parish in the hundred of WEBTREE, county of HEREFORD, 10½ miles (W. by N.) from Hereford, containing 163 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, with that of Preston upon Wye united, in the peculiar jurisdiction and patronage of the Dean of Hereford, rated in the king's books at £3, endowed with £400 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter. The church is dedicated to St. Leonard.

BLAKENEY, a chapelry in the parish of AWRE, hundred of BLIDESLOE, county of GLOUCESTER, 15 miles (S. W. by W.) from Gloucester. The population is returned with the parish. The chapel, dedicated to All Saints, has lately been enlarged by the addition of five hundred sittings, three hundred and sixty-four of which are free, and towards defraying the expense the Incorporated Society for the enlargement of churches and chapels granted £110. There is a place of worship for Baptists. The navigable river Severn passes through the vicinity. Fairs for the sale of live stock are held on April 23rd and November 12th.

BLAKENEY, a small sea-port and parish in the hundred of HOLT, county of NORFOLK, 1¼ mile (N. W.) from Clay, and 125 (N. E.) from London, containing 803 inhabitants. This place is chiefly noted for its excellent harbour, which is well situated for sheltering vessels, and has a good opening to the North sea. It was called Snitterley in the reign of Henry III., who granted it a market; it first assumed its present name in the reign of Edward III., in the 31st of which a statute was passed for the regulation of the fish trade, which was then carried on to a considerable extent, and attracted a great number of German merchants, several of whom fixed their residence in the town. The harbour has been improved under an act of parliament obtained in 1817, and vessels of considerable burden can now approach the quay. The port is under the superintendence of the custom-house establishment at Clay: the trade with the northern states of Europe is rapidly increasing; a few vessels are employed in the oyster fisheries, and the coasting trade is considerable. The number of vessels belonging to the port, according to the return made in 1828, was fifty, averaging sixty-five tons' burden. There is an ancient guildhall in the town, relative to which some old deeds are yet extant. The living is a rectory, with the rectory of Cockthorpe, the vicarage of Little Langham, and the perpetual curacy of Glandford annexed, in the archdeaconry of Norfolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £26. 13. 4., and in the patronage of Lord Calthorpe. The church, dedicated to St. Nicholas, is a spacious structure of stone and flint, with a square embattled tower, which serves as a land-mark to mariners: a lofty turret rises at the north-eastern corner of the chancel, and is stated to have formerly contained a light for the guidance of vessels; the roof of the chancel is curiously vaulted with stone. There is a place of worship for Methodists. The Sunday school near the church was erected by Lord Calthorpe, and is conducted upon Dr. Bell's system. There are some remains, consisting principally of several fine arches, of an ancient monastery for Carmelites, founded in 1320 to the honour of God and the Virgin Mary, in which John de-Baconthorpe, a learned divine and acute metaphysician, became a friar, and ultimately Provincial of the English Carmelites; he was born here, and died in London in 1346.

BLAKENHALL, a township in the parish of WYBURNBURY, hundred of NANTWICH, county palatine of CHESTER, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S.E. by E.) from Nantwich, containing 225 inhabitants.

BLAKENHAM (GREAT), a parish in the hundred of BOSMERE and CLAYDON, county of SUFFOLK, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S.E. by S.) from Needham, containing 162 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Suffolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £6. 16. 0 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of the Provost and Fellows of Eton College. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. Walter Gifford, Earl of Buckingham, appropriated this manor, in the time of William II., to the abbey of Bec in Normandy, the society of which established a cell here, which was suppressed with other Alien priories, whereupon the manor was given by Henry VI. to the provost and fellows. The Stow-Market and Ipswich canal passes along the south-eastern side of the parish.

BLAKENHAM (LITTLE), a parish in the hundred of BOSMERE and CLAYDON, county of SUFFOLK, 5 miles (N. W.) from Ipswich, containing 120 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Suffolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £10. 3. 4., and in the patronage of the Rev. Stephen Jackson. The church is dedicated to St. Mary.

BLAKESLEY, a parish in the hundred of GREENS-NORTON, county of NORTHAMPTON, 4 miles (W.N.W.) from Towcester, containing, with the hamlet of Woodend, 752 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Northampton, and diocese of Peterborough, rated in the king's books at £9. 17. The King, for that turn, presented in 1828. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. A free school was founded by William Foxley, in 1669, and endowed with property now producing about £85 per annum; it is open to all boys whose parents reside in the parish. A Sunday school is endowed with a bequest of £200 by Sir John Knightley, Bart. There are also charities called Cleave's charity, the Foxley and Bidford charities, and others, some of which Blakesley enjoys in common with other parishes. Blakesley Hall is stated to have been anciently occupied by a fraternity of the order of St. John of Jerusalem.

BLANCHLAND (HIGH), a chapelry in the parish of SHOTLEY, eastern division of TINDALE ward, county of NORTHUMBERLAND, 10 miles (S. by E.) from Hexham, containing 412 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Northumberland, and diocese of Durham, endowed with £400 private benefaction, £600 royal bounty, and £300 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of Lord Crewe's Trustees. The chapel was formed, in 1752, by the trustees of Bishop Crewe, out of the tower of an abbey of Premonstratensian canons, founded by Walter de Bolbec, in 1175, in honour of the Blessed Virgin, the abbot of which was elevated to the house of peers in the 23rd of Edward I.: the establishment, at the time of the dissolution, consisted of an abbot and fourteen canons, and the revenue amounted to £44. 9. 1. After having passed through various hands, the estate was purchased by Bishop Crewe, who bequeathed it for charitable purposes: besides that part converted into a chapel, the principal gateway and other portions of the conventual buildings are still visible. The trustees also endowed a free school with £50 per annum, allowing the master to charge a small quarterage in addition. This township is situated on the north side of the river Derwent, and is celebrated for its lead mines, which have been extensively worked for a very long period: the company of proprietors have a large smelting-furnace at Shildon.

BLANDFORD (ST. MARY), a parish in the hundred of COOMBS-DITCH, Blandford (North) division of the county of DORSET, $\frac{3}{4}$ of a mile (S.) from Blandford-Forum, containing 358 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Dorset, and diocese of Bristol, rated in the king's books at £15. 17. 8 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of the Rev. T. Burrough. The church, with the exception of the tower, was rebuilt in 1711. Browne Willis, L.L.D., the celebrated antiquary, was born here, September 14th, 1682; he died at Whaddon Hall, in Buckinghamshire, February 5th, 1760, and was interred in the chapel at Fenny-Stratford, which had been built chiefly through his exertions in soliciting contributions.

BLANDFORD-FORUM, a market town and parish in the hundred of PIMPERNE, Blandford (North) division of the county of DORSET, 16 miles (N.E.) from Dorchester, and 104 (S.W.) from London, on the road to Exeter, containing 2643 inhabitants. This place derived its name from being situated near an ancient ford on the river Stour, called by the Romans Trajectus Balaniensis. It was nearly destroyed by an accidental fire, in the year 1579, but was soon afterwards rebuilt. During the civil war in the reign of Charles I., it suffered severely for its loyalty to that monarch. In 1644, it was plundered by the parliamentary forces under Major Sydenham, and not being fortified, became an easy prey to the contending parties, having been frequently assailed and alternately possessed by each of them. In 1677, and in 1713, it again suffered greatly from fire, and, in 1731, was, with the exception of forty houses only, consumed by a conflagration, which destroyed also the hamlets of Blandford St. Mary and Bryanston, in which only three dwellings were left. After this calamity, which is recorded on a marble tablet over a pump near the church, it was rebuilt by act of parliament, in 1732. The town is pleasantly situated within a curve of the river Stour, over which is a bridge of six arches; there are also two other bridges, erected to facilitate the entrance into it during occasional overflowings of the river: the streets are regularly formed and well paved, the houses modern and uniformly built of brick, and the inhabitants amply supplied with water. The theatre, a neat and commodious building, is opened occasionally; and the races, which have been established for more than a century, are annually held, in August, on a fine down near the town, the course being one of the best in the kingdom. The manufacture of lace of a very fine quality, equal, if not superior, to that made in Flanders, and valued at £30 per yard, formerly flourished here: the making of shirt buttons, for which Blandford has long been noted, affords employment to a very considerable number of females in the town and the adjacent villages. The market is on Saturday: the fairs, chiefly for horses, horned cattle, and cheese, are held on March 7th, July 10th, and November 8th, to each of which a court of pie-powder is attached. The government, by charter of incorporation granted in the 3rd of James I., who made the town a free borough, and confirmed and extended the privileges which it had previously enjoyed by prescription, is vested in a bailiff, seneschal, and ten capital burgesses. The bailiff, who, with the inferior officers of the town, is chosen annually at the court leet of the lord of the manor; the seneschal, who holds his office for life, and the two senior capital burgesses, hold a court of record, for the determining of suits, and the recovery of debts under £10, but they do not exercise magisterial authority. The county magistrates hold petty sessions here for the North Blandford division of the county. The bishop's and archdeacon's courts are held monthly. The town-hall is a neat edifice of Portland stone, on pillars of the Doric order, with an entablature. The burgesses exercised the elective franchise from the 23rd of Edward I. till the 22nd of Edward III., when it was discontinued.

The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Dorset, and diocese of Bristol, rated in the king's books at £12. 8. 1½., and in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Winchester. The church, dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul, is a handsome modern edifice, in the Grecian style of architecture, with a tower and spire, and ornamented with a balustrade and urns. There is a place of worship for Independents. The free school, to the north-west of the church, is of uncertain foundation; it has a small endowment. Archbishop Wake is said to have received the rudiments of his education here. The Blue-coat school, for the clothing and instruction of twelve boys, was founded in 1729, by Archbishop Wake, who endowed it with £1616, producing an annual income of £48. 9. 8. Almshouses for ten aged persons were founded and endowed by George Ryves, Esq., who, in 1685, bequeathed the residue of his estate for apprenticing poor boys: the entire annual income is about £120. In the churchyard are others for six aged persons, which were rebuilt by the corporation in 1736. William Williams, in 1621, gave £3000, since laid out in land producing £300 annually, for teaching four poor children, and other charitable purposes. On a hill to the north of the town was formerly an intrenchment, enclosing an area of three hundred paces in length, and two hundred in breadth, which has long been under cultivation, and the only relic now visible is an adjoining barrow. Sir Thomas Ryves, L.L.D., a learned antiquary and civilian; the Rev. Bruno Ryves, D.D., publisher of the Mercurius Rusticus, an early newspaper in the time of the parliamentary war, and one of the writers of the Polyglott Bible, born in 1596; the Rev. Thomas Creech, M.A., translator of Lucretius, born in 1659; William Wake, Archbishop of Canterbury, born in 1657; Edward Wake, uncle to that prelate, and founder of the institution for the sons of the clergy; Dr. Lindsey, Archbishop of Armagh; Dr. Samuel Lisle, Bishop of Norwich; and the Rev. Christopher Pitt, translator of Virgil's Æneid, born in 1700, and who, dying in 1748, was buried in the church; were natives of this parish. Blandford gives the inferior title of marquis to the Duke of Marlborough.

BLANKNEY, a parish in the second division of the wapentake of LANGOE, parts of KESTEVEN, county of LINCOLN, 9½ miles (N.) from Sleaford, containing 495 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £16. 10. 7½., and in the patronage of C. Chaplin, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Oswald.

BLASTON (ST. MICHAEL), a chapelry in the parish of HALLATON, hundred of GARTREE, county of LEICESTER, 7 miles (N.E.) from Market-Harborough, containing, with Blaston St. Giles, 58 inhabitants. The chapel is a small plain building, without either tower or turret. Another chapel, called the Nether chapel, dedicated to St. Giles, was founded by Richard I., to whom the manor belonged, and rebuilt about 1710. He endowed it with all the tithes of the manor, decreeing the payment of 5s. annually to the rector of Medburn, for burial there: this sum is still paid, but the chapel is exempt from ecclesiastical jurisdiction, being a donative belonging to the lord of the manor.

BLATCHINGTON (EAST), a parish in the hundred of FLEXBOROUGH, rape of PEVESEY, county of SUSSEX, 3 miles (N.E.) from Brighton, containing 187 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Lewes, and diocese of Chichester, rated in the king's books at £14, and in the patronage of Mr. Chambers. The church is dedicated to St. Peter. This parish is bounded on the east by the river Cuckmere, and on the south-west by the English channel: here is a strong battery for the defence of the coast.

BLATCHINGTON (WEST), a parish in the hundred of WHALESBONE, rape of LEWES, county of SUSSEX, 2¼ miles (N.W. by W.) from Brighton, containing 54 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, consolidated with the vicarage of Brighthelmston, in the archdeaconry of Lewes, and diocese of Chichester, rated in the king's books at £6. 4. 4½. The church is dedicated to St. Peter.

BLATCHINWORTH, a chapelry in that part of the parish of ROCHDALE which is in the hundred of SALFORD, county palatine of LANCASTER, 3 miles (N.E.) from Rochdale, containing 3143 inhabitants. The manufacture of flannel, and the printing of calico, prevail extensively in this chapelry, which also abounds with coal-works.

BLATHERWYCKE, a parish in the hundred of CORBY, county of NORTHAMPTON, 8 miles (E.N.E.) from Rockingham, containing 240 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Northampton, and diocese of Peterborough, rated in the king's books at £14. 13. 3., and in the patronage of S. O'Brien, Esq. The church is dedicated to the Holy Trinity. Blatherwycke anciently comprised two parishes, which were united in 1448, since which, one of the churches, dedicated to St. Mary Magdalene, has been demolished.

BLAWITH, a chapelry in the parish of ULVERSTONE, hundred of LONSDALE, north of the sands, county palatine of LANCASTER, 7 miles (N.) from Ulverstone, containing 190 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Richmond, and diocese of Chester, endowed with £800 royal bounty, and in the patronage of T. R. G. Braddyll, Esq. In 1772, Margaret Lancaster bequeathed £50, and, in 1777, William Lancaster gave £110 to trustees, directing the produce to be applied toward the support of a school: a school-room has been built by the inhabitants, but only four children are taught gratuitously.

BLAXHALL, a parish in the hundred of PLOMESGATE, county of SUFFOLK, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. by N.) from Wickham-Market, containing 474 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Suffolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £20, and in the patronage of Agnes Ingleby and others. The church is dedicated to St. Peter.

BLAXTON, a township in that part of the parish of FINNINGLEY which is in the soke of DONCASTER, West riding of the county of YORK, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. by E.) from Bawtry, containing 117 inhabitants.

BLAZEY (ST.), a parish in the eastern division of the hundred of POWDER, county of CORNWALL, 4 miles (E. N. E.) from St. Austell, containing 938 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, annexed to that of St. Austell, in the archdeaconry of Cornwall, and diocese of Exeter. There are places of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. The parish contains tin and copper mines. Here is an almshouse of remote foundation.

BLEADON, a parish in the hundred of WINTERSTOKE, county of SOMERSET, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. N. W.) from Axbridge, containing 518 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Wells, and diocese of Bath and Wells, rated in the king's books at £27. 7. 8½., and in the patronage of the Bishop of Winchester. The church is dedicated to St. Peter. The Rev. Meric Casaubon, D.D., an eminent critic and divine, and son of the celebrated critic, Isaac Casaubon, was collated to this benefice about 1624. The navigable river Axe passes through the parish, and by means of it a considerable trade in coal is carried on. Here are vestiges of a British settlement, but the Roman road on which it stood can scarcely be traced. There are several barrows on an eminence in the vicinity, some of which, on being opened, were found to contain human bones, which, from their position, and the evidence of some coins lying near them, were supposed to have been those of Danes; a large quantity of ancient armour has also been dug up.

BLEANE, county of KENT.—See COSMUS (ST.) and DAMIAN.

BLEASBY, a parish in that part of the liberty of SOUTHWELL and SCROOBY which separates the northern from the southern division of the wapentake of Thurgarton, county of NOTTINGHAM, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. S. E.) from Southwell, containing 290 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the peculiar jurisdiction and patronage of the Chapter of the Collegiate Church of Southwell, rated in the king's books at £4, and endowed with £200 royal bounty. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is an ancient edifice, in very good repair. The village occupies a secluded situation on the western side of the river Trent, over which there is a ferry. The free grammar school at East Retford has considerable property in this parish.

BLEASDALE, a chapelry in that part of the parish of LANCASTER which is in the hundred of AMOUNDERNESS, county palatine of LANCASTER, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. by N.) from Garstang, containing 212 inhabitants. The forest of Bleasdale, comprising eight thousand acres, was co-extensive with the township; a great part of it has been enclosed. Christopher Parkinson, by will dated July 8th, 1702, founded a school, and endowed it with an estate now yielding about £65 per annum, one-third of which is given to a schoolmaster, and the greater part of the remainder to the poor; the school is kept in a building adjoining the chapel at Admarsh. There are also some minor charities for the benefit of the poor.

BLEATARN, a hamlet in the parish of WARCOP, EAST ward, county of WESTMORLAND, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. by S.) from Brough, containing 129 inhabitants. John Tailbois, in the reign of Henry II., gave this manor to the abbot and convent of Byland, in Yorkshire, who founded a cell in the vicinity, the ruins of which indicate the conventual buildings to have been somewhat extensive. The Sawbridge estate, and others within the manor, are tithe-free, if occupied by their respective owners, but subject to the claim, if held by a tenant. Limestone abounds here.

BLECHINGDON, a parish in the hundred of PLOUGHLEY, county of OXFORD, 5 miles (E. by N.) from Woodstock, containing 570 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford, rated in the king's books at £12. 9. 4½., and in the patronage of the Provost and Fellows of Queen's College, Oxford. The church is dedicated to St. Giles. Leonard Power, by will in 1620, endowed an almshouse for four poor persons, and a school, which he had previously built, with £200, on condition that certain parcels of land should be given by the respective owners for the same purpose, which was accordingly done: the almshouses were rebuilt about the end of the last century, and about £33 per annum is assigned for the support of the inmates: the school has been discontinued, but another, on a large scale, is supported by Arthur Annesley, Esq., in a building of his own.

BLDINGTON, a parish in the upper division of the hundred of SLAUGHTER, county of GLOUCESTER, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. E. by E.) from Stow on the Wold, containing 340 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Gloucester, rated in the king's books at £6. 13. 4., endowed with £600 private benefaction, and £600 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Dean and Canons of Christ Church, Oxford. The church is dedicated to St. Leonard.

BLDLOW, a parish in the hundred of AYLESBURY, county of BUCKINGHAM, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. S. E.) from Thame, containing, with Bledlow-Ridge, 1050 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Buckingham, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £16. 9. 7., endowed with £400 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of Lord Carrington. The church, dedicated to the Holy Trinity, stands on the edge of a cliff, overhanging a deep glen, into which several springs fall, and uniting form a pool, called the Lyde, the water of which is stated to be continually undermining the rock, so as to have given rise to a rhyming distich, expressive of the insecure foundation of the church.

BLENCARN, a joint township with Kirkland, in the parish of KIRKLAND, LEATH ward, county of CUMBERLAND, $10\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E.) from Penrith. The population is returned with Kirkland. At Blencarn-gate there is a free school, erected in 1775, and endowed with one hundred acres of land allotted to it on enclosing Culgaith common, and now let for £42 per annum, for which the master instructs gratuitously the children of Blencarn and Culgaith. Near the village is a spring, the water of which is of a powerfully astringent quality.

BLENCOGO, a township in that part of the parish of BROMFIELD which is in CUMBERLAND ward, county of CUMBERLAND, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. by S.) from Wigton, containing 216 inhabitants. The Rev. Jonathan Boucher, who published a "Supplement to Dr. Johnson's Dictionary," was born here, in 1738.

BLENCOW (GREAT), a township in the parish of DACRE, LEATH ward, county of CUMBERLAND, 5 miles (W. N. W.) from Penrith. The population is returned with the parish. A grammar school, of high repute, was founded in 1576, by Thomas Burbank, who endowed it with property now producing about £200 per annum: it is free, with the exception of a small entrance-fee, to children from all parts of the world, for instruction in the classics. A new school-room, with a writing-school added to it, and a house for the master, affording extensive accommodation for boarders, were built in 1793. The late Lord Ellenborough received a small portion of his early education at this school, which has also produced several distinguished clergymen.

BLENCOW (LITTLE), a township in the parish of GREYSTOCK, LEATH ward, county of CUMBERLAND, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. N. W.) from Penrith, containing 53 inhabitants. Near an ancient house, once the residence of the family of Blencow, but now occupied by a farmer, are some dispersed ruins of buildings, particularly those of a chapel, with a burial-ground adjoining; and not far distant, near the road, there is an enclosed cemetery, in which stands a stone cross, with the arms of the family of Blencow engraved on it.

BLENDWORTH, a parish in the hundred of FINCH-DEAN, Alton (South) division of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, 8 miles (S. S. W.) from Petersfield, containing 249 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Winchester, rated in the king's books at £6. 7. 8½., and in the patronage of the Rev. Sir S. C. Jervoise, Bart. The church is dedicated to St. Giles. William Appleford, in 1695, gave £200 in trust, directing it to be invested in land, and the proceeds to be applied to the education of children: the income is now about £19 per annum; five boys are sent to a schoolmaster in the adjoining parish of Catherington, and twelve children are instructed by a mistress at Blendworth.

BLENHEIM-PARK, an extra-parochial district, within the liberty of OXFORD, though locally in the hundred of Wootton, county of OXFORD, containing 90 inhabitants. Blenheim castle was founded in 1704; pursuant to a parliamentary grant of £500,000, to be expended in raising the structure, and laying out the grounds, which, together with the honour of Woodstock, were bestowed on John, Duke of Marlborough, in testimony of national gratitude for his brilliant military and diplomatic services. The house was built from a design by Sir John Vanbrugh, and was called Blenheim from a village of that name on the banks of the Danube, near which this illustrious general obtained a signal victory over the French and Bavarians, on the 2nd of August, 1704, on which day annually, the inheritors of his Grace's honours and titles render at Windsor one standard, or colours, with three fleurs-de-lis painted thereon, as an acquittance for all manner of rents, suits, and services. It has all the appendages of a first-rate mansion, and the grounds and gardens are disposed with the most refined taste, and princely magnificence. The Roman road Akeman-street passes through the northern part of the park, being distinctly visible near the north lodge; and a little to the right of it, in the parish of Stonesfield, remains of Roman buildings were discovered in 1711 and 1779, and, a little further on, of a Roman villa, in 1813. For the early national events which took place at the old manor-house, see WOODSTOCK.

BLENKINSOP, a township in the parish of HALTWHISTLE, western division of TINDALE ward, county of NORTHUMBERLAND, $2\frac{3}{4}$ miles (W.) from Haltwhistle, containing 317 inhabitants. There are coal-works on a large scale in the neighbourhood. The ruins of Blenkinsop castle, once the residence of a family of that name, occupy part of an eminence in the neighbourhood, which appears to have been surrounded by a ditch.

BLENNERHASSET, a joint township with Kirkland, in the parish of TORPENHOW, ALLERDALE ward below Derwent, county of CUMBERLAND, $8\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. W.) from Wigton, containing, with Kirkland, 224 inhabitants. A chapel for Independents was rebuilt in 1828.

BLETCHINGLEY, or BLECHINGLEY, a borough and parish (formerly a market town), in the first division of the hundred of TANDRIDGE, county of SURREY, 24 miles (E.) from Guildford, and 20 (S.) from London, containing 1187 inhabitants. The town is pleasantly situated on an eminence commanding an extensive prospect of the South Downs and other parts of Sussex: it is of considerable antiquity, and had a castle, erected soon after the Conquest, by Gilbert, Earl of Clare, which was demolished by Prince Edward after the battle of Lewes, which took place in 1264, and the foundations alone are now remaining. The market has long been discontinued: fairs are held on June 22nd and November 2nd, for horses and hogs, and for the sale of lean cattle brought from Scotland and Wales. The Croydon rail-road passes through the northern part of the parish. A bailiff and other officers for the internal regulation of the town are appointed at the court leet of the lord of the manor. The borough received the elective franchise in the 23rd of Edward I., since which time it has continued to return two members to parliament: the right of election is vested in the burgage-holders, in number one hundred and thirty. Matthew Russell, Esq. is patron of the borough; there is no returning officer, the bailiff taking no part in elections. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Surrey, and diocese of Winchester, rated in the king's books at £19. 19. 4½, and in the patronage of the Rev. J. Kenrick. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a spacious and venerable structure, in the early style of English architecture, with a low tower; it had a lofty spire, which was destroyed by lightning in 1606. Near the church is a charity school for twenty-five boys, founded by Mr. John Whatman, who, in the 8th of Elizabeth, endowed it with a messuage now producing £23 per annum, to which Mr. Bostock, of Tandridge, added a house and garden for the master. Almshouses for ten aged men and women were built by the inhabitants, in 1668, to which the rector, Dr. Charles Hampton, added another, and gave a rent-charge of £1. 6. 8., for supplying the alms-people with fuel. This town is near a Roman road, and at a short distance, in the parish of Caterham, is a fortification, called the Cardinal's Cap. At Pendhill, in this parish, some workmen discovered part of the foundations of a Roman bath, the different apartments in which were paved, and some of the walls lined with Roman tiles. There are inconsiderable vestiges of the residence of Earl Godwin, who retreated to this place when his estates in Kent were inundated by the sea.

BLETCHLEY, a parish in the hundred of NEWPORT, county of BUCKINGHAM, 1½ mile (W. by S.) from Fenny-Stratford, containing, with the chapelry of Fenny-Stratford (part of which is in the parish of Simpson), and the township of Water-Eaton, 1160 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Buckingham, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £29. 13. 1½, and in the patronage of J. Fleming, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. On the enclosure of the common, an allotment of twenty-five acres was assigned for the benefit of the poor, in lieu of cutting furze.

BLETSOE, a parish in the hundred of WILLEY, county of BEDFORD, 6½ miles (N. N. W.) from Bedford, containing 383 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Bedford, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £17, and in the patronage of Lord St. John. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. The river Ouse runs through the parish, in which are the remains of an ancient castle, formerly belonging to Lord Bolingbroke, part of which has been destroyed for the materials. Here is a mineral spring, but the water is seldom used medicinally.

BLEWBERRY, a parish partly in the hundred of MORETON, but chiefly in that of READING, county of BERKS, 4½ miles (N. E. by N.) from East Ilsley, comprising the chapelries of Aston-Upthorp and Upton, and the liberty of Nottingham-Fee, and containing 941 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the peculiar jurisdiction of the Dean of Salisbury, rated in the king's books at £16. 6. 10½, and in the patronage of the Bishop of Salisbury. The church is dedicated to St. Michael. William Malthus, by will dated November 16th, 1700, after specifying certain bequests, directed the residue of his estate to be sold, and the purchase money to be invested in land, part of the proceeds of which was to be applied to the maintenance and education of ten boys in the Blue-coat school at Reading, and allowing the bishop of the diocese a discretionary power in the appropriation of the remainder. By deed dated May 13th, 1702, Dr. Burnett, then Bishop of Salisbury, and five other persons, were constituted governors, and agreed on a certain mode of applying the rents, which was confirmed by a decree in Chancery, on the 12th of June, but altered, pursuant to an order from Lord Chancellor King, in 1730. The clear annual income of the charity is about £916, the disbursement of which is regulated by a scheme devised in 1816, agreeably to which the trustees allow annually £161 for the support of ten boys at Reading; £50 to a master, and £20 to a mistress, for instructing thirty boys and thirty girls, who are partly clothed and provided with books and stationery; £60 for apprenticing four boys, and £25 for apprenticing four girls; £100 for clothing sixty children; and £70 in compensation to the parents of some of the children for the loss of their labour; besides paying small salaries to certain officers, and defraying incidental expenses. An almshouse for one poor man was founded, and endowed with a gift of £271. 13. 4., by Mr. Bacon, in 1732. A large edifice, called the Charter-house, supposed to have been used as a place of worship previously to the Reformation, has lately been taken down. The manor-house was formerly surrounded by an earthwork, and a deep moat crossed by a drawbridge, the remains of which have been obliterated within the memory of man. A field between Blewberry and Aston is thought to have been the scene of a severe conflict between the Saxons, under Ethelred and his brother Alfred, and the Danes, in which the latter were defeated with great slaughter: in forming a new turnpike road, in 1804, many human skeletons and military weapons were found near the spot. The parish is intersected by a Roman road and a British road, termed respectively Ickleton and Grimsditch. There is an encampment of considerable extent on a hill called Blewberton; and Loughborough hill, the loftiest eminence in this county, has been crowned by an ancient work, apparently constructed for purposes of warfare.

BLICKLING, a parish in the southern division of the hundred of ERPINGHAM, county of NORFOLK, 1½ mile (N. W. by N.) from Aylsham, containing 359 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £10. 13. 4., and in the patronage of Lord Suffield. The church is dedicated to St. Andrew. In the time of the Confessor, this ancient manor was in the possession of Harold, afterwards king of England, and, although subsequently divided, it continued exempt from the hundred, and enjoyed all the privileges of royal demesne: it was afterwards held by the bishops of Norwich, who had a palace here. Blickling Hall was built by Sir John Hobart, Knt., in 1628, at which time the domestic chapel was consecrated. The previous edifice, with the estate, was in the possession of the family of Boleyn, and in it was born Anne Boleyn, afterwards queen of Henry VIII.; this monarch is stated to have been here on a visit. Blickling was subsequently visited by Charles II. and his queen.

BLIDESLOE, a tything in the parish of AWRE, hundred of BLIDESLOE, county of GLOUCESTER. The population is returned with the parish.

BLIDWORTH, a parish within the liberty of SOUTHWELL and SCROOBY, though locally in the wapentake of Broxtow, county of NOTTINGHAM, 5 miles

(S. E.) from Mansfield, containing 744 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the peculiar jurisdiction of the Chapter of the Collegiate Church of Southwell, rated in the king's books at £4, endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the alternate patronage of the two prebendaries of Oxtun. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a small edifice, built about the time of Richard III. There are places of worship for Baptists and Wesleyan Methodists, also a school with a small endowment. At the time of the Norman Survey this place formed a berewic to Oxtun. The village occupies a very elevated site, nearly in the centre of the ancient forest of Sherwood, in all the perambulations of which, from the reign of Henry I. to that of Charles II., it is mentioned as a forest town: several of the inhabitants are employed in frame-work knitting. At the enclosure of waste land in the parish, pursuant to an act passed in 1806, upwards of one thousand acres were planted, and are now in a flourishing condition. In a field near the village is a rocky formation of sand and gravel, commonly called plum-pudding stone; it is fourteen feet high, and eighty-four in circumference, and is supposed to have been a Druidical idol.

BLINDBOTHEL, a township in the parish of BRIGHAM, ALLERDALE ward above Derwent, county of CUMBERLAND, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S.) from Cockermouth, containing 112 inhabitants.

BLINDCRACK, a joint township with Isall and Redmain, in the parish of ISALL, ALLERDALE ward below Derwent, county of CUMBERLAND, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. E. by N.) from Cockermouth. The population is returned with Isall.

BLISLAND, a parish in the hundred of TRIGG, county of CORNWALL, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. N. E.) from Bodmin, containing 637 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Cornwall, and diocese of Exeter, rated in the king's books at £13. 10., and in the patronage of the Rev. C. Pye. The church is dedicated to St. Pratt. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. A cattle fair is held annually on the Monday next after September 22nd.

BLISWORTH, a parish in the hundred of WYMERSLEY, county of NORTHAMPTON, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. E. by N.) from Towcester, containing 696 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Northampton, and diocese of Peterborough, rated in the king's books at £20. 3. 9., and in the patronage of George F. Hatton, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. John the Baptist. The Grand Junction canal enters this parish by means of a tunnel from the adjoining parish of Stoke-Bruerne, and continues its course northward until it is joined by the Northampton canal.

BLITHFIELD, a parish in the southern division of the hundred of PIREHILL, county of STAFFORD, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N.) from Rugeley, containing, with the liberty of Newton, 470 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Stafford, and diocese of Lichfield and Coventry, rated in the king's books at £10. 19. 2., and in the patronage of Lord Bagot. The church is dedicated to St. Leonard. The river Blith runs through the parish. Elizabeth Bagot and Jane Jones, in 1729, gave land, now producing about £35 per annum, which, with voluntary contributions, is applied to the support of a school for the instruction of boys, and another for girls, in which about forty of each sex are educated on the National system.

BLOCKLEY, a parish situated in a detached portion of the upper division of the hundred of OSWALDSLOW, county of WORCESTER, surrounded by Gloucestershire and a small portion of Warwickshire, comprising the hamlets of Aston Magna, Blockley, Ditchford, Dorne, Draycott, Northwich, and Paxford, and containing 1890 inhabitants, of which number, 1158 are in the hamlet of Blockley, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W. by W.) from Moreton in the Marsh. The living is a vicarage, in the peculiar jurisdiction and patronage of the Bishop of Worcester, rated in the king's books at £54. The church, dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul, is partly Norman, and partly in the early style of English architecture: the tower was rebuilt in 1725, at the expense of the inhabitants. A neat chapel has recently been erected by the Baptists. The village, which is situated on elevated ground, contains several neat dwelling-houses, and presents a clean and pleasing appearance: here are several silk-mills, worked by small streams which rise in Dove-dale, a short distance hence. Fairs are held on the Tuesday next after Easter week, for cattle, and October 10th, for hiring servants. A charity school for twenty boys and six girls is partly supported by bequests, and partly by subscription. Pursuant to a statute passed in the 9th of George IV., the magistrates for the county came to a resolution, at the general quarter sessions held at Worcester, in October 1829, to alter the divisions of the county, making Blockley the head of one division, the petty sessions for which are held here. The Bishop of Worcester is lord of the manor, and, by his steward, occasionally holds a manorial court. Previously to the Reformation here was a palace in which the prelates resided, but the only memorial of it is in the name of a hill opposite to the vicarage, called the Parks. In a charter of King Buhrrad, dated in 855, mention is made of a monastery, which then existed, and which was subsequently annexed to the bishoprick of Worcester. The Roman Fosse-way passed between this village and Moreton in the Marsh. Urns and other Roman remains have been found on Moor hill; and there are several chalybeate springs.

BLODWELL, county of SALOP.—See LLAN-Y-BLODWELL.

BLOFIELD, a parish in the hundred of BLOFIELD, county of NORFOLK, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. by S.) from Acle, containing 979 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £23. 6. 8., and in the patronage of the Master and Fellows of Caius College, Cambridge. The church is dedicated to St. Andrew. The Rev. Charles Reeve, by will dated in 1729, charged some land with an annual payment toward the support of a free school, and for other charitable uses.

BLOORE in TYRLEY, a township in that part of the parish of DRAYTON in HALES which is in the northern division of the hundred of PIREHILL, county of STAFFORD, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E.) from Drayton, containing 214 inhabitants. Bloore heath is distinguished as the scene of a sanguinary battle fought in 1459, between the Lancastrians under the command of Lord Audley, and the Yorkists under that of the Earl of Salisbury, in which the former were defeated: about two thousand four hundred persons of distinction were slain, among whom was Lord Audley; a wooden cross, resting upon a stone pedestal bearing an inscription commemorative of the event, marks the spot on which his lordship fell.

BLORE, a parish in the northern division of the hundred of TORMONSLow, county of STAFFORD, comprising the township of Blore with Swainscoe, and a part of the chapelry of Calton, and containing 351 inhabitants, of which number, 288 are in the township of Blore with Swainscoe, 4 miles (N. W. by W.) from Ashbourn. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Stafford, and diocese of Lichfield and Coventry, rated in the king's books at £8. 8., and in the patronage of S. Shore, Esq. The church, dedicated to St. Bartholomew, is an ancient structure, with a square tower; it contains several ancient monuments to the memory of different members of the family of Basset, the site of whose mansion is now occupied by a modern farm-house. Blore is in the honour of Tutbury, duchy of Lancaster, and within the jurisdiction of a court of pleas held at Tutbury every third Tuesday, for the recovery of debts under 40s.

BLOWNORTON, a parish in the hundred of GUILT-CROSS, county of NORFOLK, 6 miles (S. by E.) from East Harling, containing 341 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Norfolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £5. 6. 3., and in the patronage of the Rev. Charles Brown. The church is dedicated to St. Andrew.

BLOXHAM, a parish in the wapentake of FLAXWELL, parts of KESTIVEN, county of LINCOLN, 5 miles (N. by W.) from Sleaford, containing 109 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, to which the vicarage of Digby was united in 1717, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £9. 9. 4½., and in the patronage of R. Manners, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Mary.

BLOXHAM, a parish in the hundred of BLOXHAM, county of OXFORD, 4 miles (S. W. by S.) from Banbury, containing, with the chapelry of Milcombe, 1520 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford, rated in the king's books at £17. 9. 4., endowed with £205 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Provost and Fellows of Eton College. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. There is a place of worship for Baptists.

BLOXWICH, a chapelry in the parish of WALSALL, southern division of the hundred of OFFLOW, county of STAFFORD, 3 miles (N. N. W.) from Walsall, with which the population is returned. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Stafford, and diocese of Lichfield and Coventry, endowed with £600 private benefaction, and £2500 parliamentary grant. The Bishop of Lichfield and Coventry presented by lapse in 1826. The chapel, dedicated to St. Thomas, is of modern erection. There are places of worship for Wesleyan Methodists and Roman Catholics. Bloxwich, from its vicinity to Walsall, participates to a considerable extent in the manufactures and trade of that town, and derives benefit from the Essington and Wyrley canal, which passes through the chapelry.

BLOXWORTH, a parish in the hundred of COOMBS-DITCH, Blandford (North) division of the county of DORSET, 5½ miles (N. N. W.) from Wareham, containing 210 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the peculiar jurisdiction of the Dean of Salisbury, rated in the king's books at £15. 7. 1., and in the patronage of J. Pickard, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Andrew. On a hill called Woolsbarrow, situated on the heath, about a mile toward the east, are vestiges of a small fortification, supposed to be of Danish origin, the ramparts and trenches of which may be traced; near it there are several tumuli.

BLUBBER-HOUSES, a township in the parish of FEWSTON, lower division of the wapentake of CLARO, West riding of the county of YORK, 7 miles (N. by W.) from Otley, containing 126 inhabitants.

BLUNDESTON, a parish in the hundred of MURFORD and LOTHINGLAND, county of SUFFOLK, 3½ miles (N. W.) from Lowestoft, containing 448 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, with that of Flixton united, in the archdeaconry of Suffolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £13. 6. 8., and in the patronage of the Rev. George Anguish. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. The navigable river Waveney runs on the south-western side of the parish. The Rev. Gregory Clarke, in 1726, gave a house and some land for the instruction of poor children.

BLUNHAM, a parish (formerly a market town) in the hundred of WIXAMTREE, county of BEDFORD, 5½ miles (N. N. W.) from Biggleswade, containing, with the hamlet of Moggerhanger, 945 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Bedford, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £46. 2. 11., and in the patronage of Countess de Grey. The church, dedicated to St. Edmund, contains several ancient monuments to the memory of different members of the families of Longueville and Bromsall. There is a place of worship for Particular Baptists. The market, which was on Wednesday, and a fair on the festival of St. James, were granted in 1315. The navigable river Ouse runs on the western, and the Ivel on the eastern, side of the parish. There is a mineral spring, called Poplarwell, but the water is not used for medicinal purposes.

BLUNSDON (ST. ANDREW), a parish in the hundred of HIGHWORTH, CRICKLADE, and STAPLE, county of WILTS, 4¼ miles (W. S. W.) from Highworth, containing 65 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Wilts, and diocese of Salisbury, rated in the king's books at £8. 19. 2., and in the patronage of Mrs. Barker.

BLUNSDON (BROAD), a chapelry in the parish of HIGHWORTH, hundred of HIGHWORTH, CRICKLADE, and STAPLE, county of WILTS, 3 miles (W. by S.) from Highworth, containing 552 inhabitants.

BLUNTISHAM, a parish in the hundred of HURSTINGSTONE, county of HUNTINGDON, 4½ miles (N. E. by E.) from St. Ives, containing 635 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Huntingdon, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £32. 16. 0½., and in the patronage of the Bishop of Ely. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. There is a place of worship for Particular Baptists. The Dean and Chapter of Ely are in possession of a manor here, for which they hold courts. The navigable river Ouse forms the southern boundary of the parish for the distance of about three miles. The Rev. Mr. Saywell, in 1708, gave land, now producing about £50 per annum, for the support of a charity school. Lands are held in trust, by a body of feoffees, for the use of the poor, who have also the benefit of divers small benefactions, periodically distributed. A tremendous hurricane, in September 1741, in its sweeping ravages across the country, threw down sixty barns, and about twelve dwelling-houses in this parish, besides effecting considerable damage on other kinds of property.

BLURTON, a chapelry in the parish of TRENTHAM, northern division of the hundred of PIREHILL, county of STAFFORD, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S.E. by E.) from Newcastle under Line, containing, with Lightwood Forest, 844 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Stafford, and diocese of Lichfield and Coventry, endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Marquis of Stafford.

BLYBOROUGH, a parish in the western division of the wapentake of ASLACOE, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, 9 miles (E.N.E.) from Gainsborough, containing 184 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Stow, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £19, and in the patronage of the Crown. The church is dedicated to St. Alkmund. There are mineral springs in the parish.

BLYMILL, a parish in the western division of the hundred of CUTTLESTONE, county of STAFFORD, 6 miles (W.N.W.) from Brewood, containing, with Brington, 604 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Stafford, and diocese of Lichfield and Coventry, rated in the king's books at £13. 10. 7 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of the Earl of Bradford. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. An annuity of £3. 5., the joint benefactions of the Rev. John Taylor, in 1671, and Mrs. Manning, is given to a schoolmaster, in addition to a small dwelling-house and garden, rent-free, for teaching six poor children to read.

BLYTH, a parish comprising the chapelry of Austerfeld in the northern, and the chapelry of Bawtry in the southern, division of the wapentake of STRARFORTH and TICKHILL, West riding of the county of YORK,—the township of Ranskill, within the liberty of SOUTHWELL and SCROOBY,—the market town of Blyth, the townships of Barnby-Moor with Bilby, Styrrup, and Torworth, and the lordship of Hodsock, in the Hatfield division of the wapentake of BASSETLAW, county of NOTTINGHAM, $31\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. by E.) from Nottingham, and $151\frac{1}{2}$ (N.N.W.) from London, on the old road to York, and containing 3456 inhabitants. This place, anciently called Blia and Blida, was chiefly noted in former times for its religious and charitable establishments. In 1088, a priory was founded in honour of the Blessed Virgin, by Roger de Builly and his wife Muriel, for monks of the Benedictine order, which, though considered as an Alien priory, being in some respects subordinate to the abbey of the Holy Trinity, near Rouen in Normandy, was spared at the suppression of Alien priories, and subsisted till the general dissolution, when its revenue was estimated at £126. 8. 2. An hospital for lepers, dedicated to St. John the Evangelist, was founded by Hugh de Cressy, lord of Hodsock, in the reign of John, for a warden, three chaplains, and brethren, the revenue of which, at the dissolution, was £8. 14.: of these buildings, as well as of a strong castle which is said to have been anciently erected here, there are not any remains. The town is clean, well built, pleasantly situated, and amply supplied with water. The market is on Wednesday; and the fairs are on Holy Thursday and October 20th. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Nottingham, and diocese of York, rated in the king's books at £14. 9. 4 $\frac{1}{2}$., endowed with £220 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Master and Fellows of Trinity College, Cambridge. The church, dedicated to St. Martin, is a lofty structure in the Norman style, and once formed the ante-choir of the splendid cruciform church of the priory; it has a handsome tower, in the later style of English architecture, with crocketed pinnacles. There are places of worship for the Society of Friends and Wesleyan Methodists. A school for ten poor children of the town, and for two from each of the adjoining townships, is endowed with land producing £18 per annum, to which £5 from the parish funds is annually added as a salary to the master, who is appointed by the vicar of the parish. Almshouses for six aged people, who have a small allowance of money and coal, have been lately rebuilt, and are supposed to have been originally an appendage to the hospital founded by Hugh de Cressy. There are also almshouses for two aged women, endowed with £10 per annum, under the management of seven trustees, chosen from the Society of Friends, besides other charitable bequests for the relief of the poor.

BLYTH (NORTH), a joint township with Cambois, in the parish of BEDLINGTON, eastern division of CHESTER ward, county palatine of DURHAM, $8\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E.S.E.) from Morpeth. The population is returned with the parish. The village is situated on a peninsula, on the northern side of the river Blyth, opposite to the town and port of South Blyth, and is chiefly inhabited by fishermen and pilots. The manufacture of salt and earthenware was formerly carried on to a considerable extent, but has been wholly discontinued. There are a quay, several storehouses for corn, and a ship-yard, at Link-End, a hamlet situated at the extremity of the peninsula.

BLYTH (SOUTH), or BLYTH-NOOK, a small sea-port and chapelry, partly in the parish of HORTON, but chiefly in the parish of EARSDON, eastern division of CASTLE ward, county of NORTHUMBERLAND, $9\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E.S.E.) from Morpeth, 13 (N.N.E.) from Newcastle, and 283 (N.N.W.) from London, containing, with the lordship of Newsham, and exclusively of that part of the town which is in the parish of Horton, 1805 inhabitants. The town is situated at the mouth of the river Blyth, where it empties itself into the North sea; and, until of late years, consisted of a few narrow and irregularly formed streets. Considerable improvement, however, has been made; but this has taken place principally in that part of it which is in the parish of Horton, owing to the tenure of property in that manor being less objectionable than that in the parish of Earsdon; so that the entire population of the town and its environs may be estimated at about three thousand. The trade of the port consists principally in the exportation of coal, and the importation of various articles of local consumption. The coal trade, during the siege of Newcastle in 1644, flourished greatly, but subsequently experienced considerable depression; it has, however, revived, and now furnishes occupation to nearly one hundred vessels, of the aggregate burden of upwards of fifteen thousand tons. The produce of the Bedlington iron-works, which are about three miles distant, is brought down the river Blyth to this port, where the articles are shipped for London. Muscles abound on the coast. The harbour, the entrance to which is at all times free from obstruction, is extremely secure, even during the most tempestuous weather. The tide formerly flowed over an extensive waste on the western side of the harbour, but, with a view to counteract this, a quay has been partly formed on the margin of the river; the undertaking, however, has been advisedly suspended, from an opinion that the free admission of the tide is essential to the preservation of the harbour. A dry dock, capable of receiving four vessels, was constructed in 1811: the custom-house is a branch of the establishment at Newcastle. A circular stone light-house was built by Sir M. W. Ridley, in 1788; and there is a beacon-light, called the Basket Rock-light. A detachment of troops from Tynemouth was stationed here during the late war with France, in a small fort commanding the mouth of the harbour. A chapel of ease was built by Sir M. W. Ridley, in 1751, the right of presentation to which belongs to the present baronet: attached to it is a burial-ground. A meeting-house for Presbyterians was built in 1814, one for Wesleyan Methodists in 1815, one for a congregation of the New Connexion of Methodists in 1818, and one for Scotch Seceders in 1827. George Marshall, author of a miscellaneous volume of poems, and "Letters from an Elder to a Younger Brother," was born at this place.

BLYTHBURGH, a parish (formerly a market town) in the hundred of BLYTHING, county of SUFFOLK, $4\frac{1}{4}$ miles (W. by S.) from Southwold, containing, with the hamlets of Bulcamp and Hinton, 513 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Suffolk, and diocese of Norwich, endowed with £400 royal bounty, and £1800 parliamentary grant; and in the patronage of Sir Charles Blois, Bart. The church, dedicated to the Holy Trinity, was profusely adorned with paintings, sculpture, and stained glass, but the former was destroyed in the time of Cromwell, and of the latter only a few fragments remain. Blythburgh, the origin of which has been ascribed to the Britons, though the only relics of antiquity that have been discovered are some Roman urns, which were dug up about 1768, was formerly a place of considerable importance, both as regards its trade and the extent of its buildings: it had a weekly market and three annual fairs. Its decay is attributed to the suppression of the priory, and also to a fire which, in 1676, destroyed a great part of the town. This priory is stated, by some, to have been founded for Black canons, by the abbot and convent of St. Osyth, in Essex, to which monastery it was subordinate; and, according to others, by Henry I. Its revenue, in 1532, two years previously to its dissolution, was estimated at £48. 8. 10.; a small portion of the ruins is visible. There are also inconsiderable remains of an ancient chapel, called Holy Rood chapel. In this parish is Westwood Lodge, a venerable edifice in the Elizabethan style of architecture. Anna, King of the East Angles, and his eldest son Ferminus, who were slain at Bulcamp, in the battle with Penda (unless we yield credence to Rapiu, who states that Anna expired whilst preparing for the battle), were first interred in the church here, and subsequently removed to Bury St. Edmund's. The river Blyth is navigable hence to the North sea. Thomas Neal, in 1589, gave a small portion of land for teaching five poor children; and Burham Raymond, in 1728, assigned a rent-charge for the instruction of twelve more.

BLYTHFORD, a parish in the hundred of BLYTHING, county of SUFFOLK, $2\frac{1}{4}$ miles (E. by S.) from Halesworth, containing 163 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Suffolk, and diocese of Norwich, and in the patronage of the Rev. Jeremy Day. The church is dedicated to All Saints.

BLYTON, a parish in the wapentake of CORRINGTON, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, 4 miles (N.E.) from Gainsborough, containing, with Wharton, 504 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Stow, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £12, and in the patronage of the Earl of Scarborough. The church is dedicated to St. Martin. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists.

BOARHUNT, a parish in the hundred of PORTSDOWN, Portsdown division of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, $1\frac{1}{4}$ mile (N.E.) from Fareham, containing 205 inhabitants. The living is a donative, in the patronage of T. Thistlethwayte, Esq. On that part of Portsdown which is within this parish a monument has been erected, in memory of Admiral Lord Nelson, which also serves as a beacon. Here was formerly a Cistercian monastery, but there are no remains of it.

BOARSTALL, a parish in the hundred of ASHENDON, county of BUCKINGHAM, $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S.S.E.) from Bicester, containing 231 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to that of Brill, in the archdeaconry of Buckingham, and diocese of Lincoln, endowed with £15 per annum private benefaction, and £400 royal bounty. The church, dedicated to St. James, was a chapel of ease to the vicarage of Oakley until 1418, when it was made parochial. Boarstall House, in the early part of the civil war, was garrisoned for the king, but was evacuated in 1644, and immediately taken possession of by the parliamentary garrison at Aylesbury. Col. Gage recovered it again, and placed a garrison therein, but it was ultimately surrendered to Fairfax, in 1646: the only part now remaining is a large gateway, with turrets at the angles.

BOBBING, a parish in the hundred of MILTON, lathe of SCRAY, county of KENT, $1\frac{1}{4}$ mile (W. by N.) from Milton, containing 325 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Canterbury, endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of Miss Simpson. The church, dedicated to St. Bartholomew, is composed of two aisles, two chancels, and a western tower supporting a spire. A fair is held on the 4th of September. A benefaction of £50 from Ann Gibbon has been vested in land, now producing £6. 6. per annum, for which seven girls are instructed gratuitously. At Key-Street, a small hamlet in this parish, corruptly so called for Caius' street (Caii stratum), being situated on a Roman highway, there is a gravel-pit of unusual size and depth, from which Hasted conjectures the Romans obtained part of the materials for making the road.

BOBBINGTON, a parish partly in the hundred of BRIMSTREE, county of SALOP, but chiefly in the southern division of the hundred of SEISDON, county of STAFFORD, 9 miles (S. W.) from Wolverhampton, containing 393 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, within the jurisdiction of the court of the royal peculiar of Bridgenorth, endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £400 royal bounty, and in the patronage of T. Whitmore, Esq. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, has recently been enlarged by the addition of ninety-three free sittings, towards defraying the expense of which, the Incorporated Society for enlarging churches and chapels granted £50. A free school was built in 1792, by Hannah Cobbett, who endowed it with £1400 three per cents., for the instruction of twenty boys and twelve girls.

BOBBINGWORTH, a parish in the hundred of ONGAR, county of ESSEX, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W.) from Chipping-Ongar, containing 277 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Essex, and diocese of London, rated in the king's books at £13. 6. 8., and in the patronage of Thomas Smith, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. German.

BOCKENFIELD, a township in that part of the parish of FELTON which is in the eastern division of MORPETH ward, county of NORTHUMBERLAND, $8\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. by W.) from Morpeth, containing 107 inhabitants.

BOCKHAMPTON, a joint tything with Eastbury, in the parish and hundred of LAMBOURN, county of BERKS, $\frac{2}{3}$ of a mile (S. E. by E.) from Lambourn. The population is returned with Eastbury.

BOCKING, a parish in the hundred of HINCKFORD, county of ESSEX, 1 mile (N.) from Braintree, containing 2786 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, and the head of a deanery, which still exercises its ancient rights, in the peculiar jurisdiction and patronage of the Archbishop of Canterbury, rated in the king's books at £35. 10. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. This village formerly enjoyed considerable trade in baize, for manufacturing one species of which it was so distinguished, that the articles were called Bockings, and a great quantity was annually sent to Portugal. The petty sessions for the division are held here. John Gauden, Bishop of Worcester, gave £21 per annum for the instruction of thirty poor children. A Lancasterian school for boys was established in 1812, and one for girls in 1825. An almshouse, consisting of nine tenements, is endowed with about £80 per annum, arising from different benefactions; and there are various minor charitable donations. Bishop Tanner states that John Doreward, Esq., in the 18th of Henry VI., founded here an hospital, called Le maison Dieu, or God's house, for a provost, or master, and six poor persons.

BOCKLETON, a parish partly in the hundred of BROXASH, county of HEREFORD, but chiefly in the upper division of the hundred of DODDINGTON, county of WORCESTER, 5 miles (S.) from Tenbury, containing, with the hamlet of Hampton-Charles, 385 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Salop, and diocese of Hereford, endowed with £400 private benefaction, and £400 royal bounty, and in the patronage of John Bleke Lye, Esq., M.D. The church is dedicated to St. Michael. A school, in which about one hundred and seventy boys and girls are instructed, is supported partly by subscription, but chiefly by the Rev. T. E. Miller.

BOCONNOC, a parish in the hundred of WAGR, county of CORNWALL, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. N. E.) from Lostwithiel, containing 253 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, with which that of Broad oak was consolidated in 1742, in the peculiar jurisdiction of the Dean and Chapter of Exeter, rated in the king's books at £9. 17. 8., and in the patronage of Lord Grenville. In 1644, during the parliamentary war, Charles abode a short time at Boccannoc House, when he narrowly escaped death, having been fired at by a rebel whilst walking in the grounds. In the park are vestiges of lead mines, one of which was worked about that period, and again about the middle of the eighteenth century, but the produce was found too small to defray the expense.

BODDINGTON, a parish partly in the lower division of the hundred of TWICKSBURY, and partly in the lower division of the hundred of WESTMINSTER, county of GLOUCESTER, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W. by W.) from Cheltenham, containing 413 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to the vicarage of Staverton, in the jurisdiction of the peculiar court of Deerhurst, in which, however, no spiritual authority is exercised. The church is dedicated to St. Mary Magdalene.

BODDINGTON (LOWER and UPPER), a parish in the hundred of CHIPPING-WARDEN, county of NORTHAMPTON, $9\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. W. by S.) from Daventry, containing 634 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Northampton, and diocese of Peterborough, rated in the king's books at £20, and in the patronage of Emanuel College, Cambridge. The church is dedicated to St. John the Baptist. Richard Lamprey, in 1758, gave a tenement for a school-house, and the interest on £300, being the amount of different benefactions, is paid to a schoolmaster for instructing sixteen poor children.

BODENHAM, a parish (anciently a market town) in the hundred of BROXASH, county of HEREFORD, $8\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. N. E.) from Hereford, containing 964 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Hereford, rated in the king's books at £12. 1. 5 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of R. Arkwright, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Michael. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. The river Lug winds through the parish. Here is a small endowed school. Walter Devereux, in 1379, obtained permission to hold a market on Tuesday, and a fair on the eve, day, and morrow of the Assumption of Our Lady, but they have been long discontinued. Thomas Mason, Esq., by will dated in 1773, gave nine acres of land, lying within the parish, directing the rental to be distributed among poor housekeepers not receiving parochial aid.

BODENHAM, a tything in the parish and hundred of DOWNTON, county of WILTS, 3 miles (S. S. E.) from Salisbury, containing, with the chapelry of Nunton, 286 inhabitants.

BODHAM, a parish in the hundred of HOLT, county of NORFOLK, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E.) from Holt, containing 298 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £9, and in the patronage of Thomas V. Mott, Esq. The church is dedicated to All Saints.

BODIAM, a parish in the hundred of STAPLE, rape of HASTINGS, county of SUSSEX, 9 miles (N. W.) from Winchelsea, containing 314 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Lewes, and diocese of Chichester, rated in the king's books at £6. 18. 6½., and in the patronage of Sir G. V. Webster, Bart. The church, an ancient edifice, is dedicated to St. Giles. The parish is bounded on the north and south by two branches of the river Rother, which unite at its eastern extremity. The castle has become uninhabitable, and in its present mouldering state forms an extensive and interesting ruin, though still complete in some of its parts.

BODICOTT, a chapelry in the parish of EAST ANDERBURY, hundred of BLOXHAM, county of OXFORD, 1½ mile (S. by E.) from Banbury, containing 638 inhabitants. There is a place of worship for Particular Baptists.

Corporate Seal.

BODMIN, a parish in the hundred of TRIGG, county of CORNWALL, containing, with the borough of Bodmin, which possesses separate jurisdiction, 3278 inhabitants, of which number, 2902 are in the borough, 20½ miles (S. W. by W.) from Launceston, and 234½ (W. S. W.) from London, on the high western road. Bodmin, in the Cornish language called Bosvenna, "the houses on the hill," and in ancient charters Bos-mana, and Bod-minian, "the abode of the monks," owes its origin to a monastery founded by King Athelstan, in 936, in supersession of a cell for four brethren, previously established by St. Petrock, about 518, on the site of a solitary hermitage originally occupied by St. Guron. Historians are widely at variance concerning the claims which Bodmin possesses to the distinction of having been the primary seat of the bishoprick of Cornwall. Dr. Borlase, whose opinion has been entertained by others, states that Edward the Elder, in 905, conferred this honour upon it, and it became the residence of the bishops until 981, when the town, church, and monastery having been burnt by the Danes, the episcopal chair was removed to St. German's. But this has been successfully refuted by Mr. Whitaker, in his work entitled "The ancient Cathedral of Cornwall historically surveyed," wherein he shews that the see was founded so early as 614, and that St. German's was made the original seat thereof, asserting, on the authority of a grant by King Ethelred, that the monastery of Bodmin was annexed by that monarch, in 994, to the episcopate of St. German's, and that both places combined to furnish a title to the future prelates until the annexation of the bishoprick of Cornwall to that of Crediton, in the county of Devon, in 1031, about twenty years after which Exeter was made the head of the diocese. He refers the Danish conflagration to the monastery of St. Petrock, at Padstow, and in this conclusion he is borne out by the flourishing state of the church at Bodmin, as described in Domesday-book, wherein its possessions are enumerated, including sixty-eight houses, with the privilege of a market there. This religious house, under different renewals of the establishment, the last of which was by one Algar, in 1125, appears to have been successively inhabited by Benedictine monks, nuns, secular priests, monks again, and canons regular of the order of St. Augustine. From the circumstance of his possessing a gallows and a pillory, the prior had evidently the power of inflicting capital punishment. Its revenue, at the dissolution, amounted to £289. 11. 11.; the site and demesne were granted to Thomas Sternhold, one of the first translators of the Psalms into English metre. St. Petrock was buried here; for, says Leland, "The Shrine and Tumbe of St. Petrok yet stondith in thest part of the Chirche." The town appears to have increased rapidly after the Conquest, since the same antiquary describes the market as being "lyke a fair for the confluence of people," and enumerates, in addition to the parochial church and the cantuary chapel near it, two other chapels, a house and church of Grey friars, begun by John of London, a merchant, about 11239, augmented by Edward, Earl o Cornwall, and in the time of Elizabeth converted into a house of correction for the county; and two hospitals, dedicated respectively to St. Anthony and St. George, besides the hospital of St. Lawrence, a mile off. Norden also says, "It hath bene of larger receite then now it is, as appeareth by the ruynes of sundrye buyldings decayde." William of Worcester, citing the register in the church belonging to the Grey friars, states that one thousand five hundred of the inhabitants died of the plague, about the middle of the fourteenth century. It was one of those decayed towns in the county, to repair which an act passed in the 32nd of Henry VIII.

In 1496, Perkin Warbeck, the pretended duke of York, on landing in Cornwall, assembled here a force of three thousand men, with which he marched to attack the city of Exeter; and, in 1498, an insurrection of the Cornish men was organized, under the influence of Thos. Flammoc, a lawyer, and Michael Joseph, a farrier, in this town, who, being chosen leaders, conducted the insurgents to Wells, where they were joined by Lord Audley, who placed himself at their head. The rebels continued their march into Kent, and encamped at Eltham, where, in the battle of Blackheath, having been surrounded by the king's troops, they were made prisoners, and dismissed without further punishment; but Lord Audley, Flammoc, and Joseph, were executed as ringleaders. During the depression of trade and agriculture, in the reign of Edward VI, the Cornish men, superstitiously attributing their distresses to the Reformation, assembled at Bodmin to the number of ten thousand, under the command of Humphrey Arundel, governor of St. Michael's Mount, and being countenanced by the inhabitants, encamped at Castle Kynoc, near the town. The insurgents marched thence to besiege Exeter, demanding the re-establishment of the mass and the restoration of the abbey lands; but, after having reduced the inhabitants of that city to extreme privation, they were defeated by Lord Russell, who had been sent with a reinforcement to the relief of the citizens. After their dispersion, Sir Anthony Kingston, Provost-Marshal, who had been sent to Bodmin to punish the insurgents, is said to have hanged the mayor at his own door, after having been hospitably entertained in his house. During the civil war in the reign of Charles I, the town, which had no permanent garrison, was alternately occupied by each party, till, in 1646, General Fairfax finally took possession of it for the parliament. After the Restoration, Charles II. visited Bodmin, on his journey to Scilly.

The town is situated on a gentle elevation rising out of the vale, between two hills, almost in the centre of the county: it consists of one street, nearly a mile in length, containing many ancient houses, and several neat modern edifices; it has been recently well paved, is partially lighted, and amply supplied with water. The races, which took place annually in the week after the summer assizes, have been discontinued for the last few years; the course, which is one of the best in the county, is about a mile and a half distant. Assemblies are held occasionally; and in July an annual procession of the populace, on horseback and on foot, carrying garlands of flowers, is made to a place in the vicinity, called Halgaver moor; this ceremony, the memorial of some ancient festival, now falling into disuse, is called Bodmin Riding. The manufacture of bone lace, which formerly flourished, has given place to that of shoes, a great quantity of which is exposed for sale in the markets and fairs; there is also a small manufactory for woollen cloth, and the spinning of worsted-yarn is carried on to a limited extent. The market is on Saturday: the fairs are on January 25th, the Saturday preceding Palm-Sunday, the Tuesday and Wednesday before Whitsuntide, and December 6th, for horses and horned cattle; large cattle fairs are also held in the hamlet of St. Lawrence, August 21st, and October 29th and 30th. The government, by charter of incorporation originally granted in the twelfth century, by Richard, Earl of Cornwall, confirmed by the kings Edward I. and III., and which, after having been forfeited through neglect, was renewed and extended by George III., is vested in a mayor, eleven aldermen, and twenty-four common council-men, assisted by a town-clerk, who acts as recorder, and subordinate officers. The mayor, the late mayor, and the recorder, are justices of the peace, and hold courts of session for the borough, at Easter and Michaelmas. The summer assizes, and the Epiphany, Midsummer, and Michaelmas quarter sessions for the county, are also held here. The town-hall consists of the two ends of the spacious refectory formerly belonging to an ancient convent of Grey friars, the only remains of that building, which have been fitted up as courts; the intermediate area is appropriated to the use of the corn market, and over the whole, a room for the grand jury, and a large assembly-room, have been built. The county gaol, built in 1780, on Mr Howard's plan, has been lately enlarged for the proper classification of prisoners; it is a neat and compact building near the town, and includes also the sheriffs' ward and bridewell. The elective franchise was conferred in the 23rd of Edward I., since which time the borough has continued to return two members to parliament: the right of election is vested exclusively in the members of the corporation, in number thirty-seven, who are in the interest of the Marquis of Hertford: the mayor is the returning officer.

The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Cornwall, and diocese of Exeter, rated in the king's books at £13. 6. 8., and in the patronage of Lord de Dunstanville. The church, dedicated to St. Petrock, and formerly the conventual church of the monastery, was rebuilt in 1472; it is a spacious structure, chiefly in the later style of English architecture, with a venerable tower on the north side, formerly surmounted by a lofty spire, which was destroyed by lightning in 1699. The interior, part of which is of an earlier date, contains the ashes of St. Petrock, a fine monument to Thomas Vivian, prior, and a large Norman font. There are places of worship for Bryanites and Wesleyan Methodists, and a chapel belonging to the trustees of the late Countess of Huntingdon. The grammar school was founded by Queen Elizabeth, who endowed it with £5. 6. 8. per annum, payable out of the Exchequer, to which the corporation have added £95 per annum, and, in addition to this, the master is allowed to charge annually £2. 2. for each scholar: a commodious school-room has been erected on the north side of the town, and the old building in the churchyard is appropriated as a National school for girls. Dr. Prideaux, Dean of Norwich, received the rudiments of his education in this school. There is also an English school, the master of which is appointed by the corporation. A commodious lunatic asylum was built at the western extremity of the town in 1820. About a mile to the east are some remains of the hospital of St. Lawrence, originally endowed for nineteen lepers, two sound men and women, and a priest, who were incorporated by Queen Elizabeth, in 1582, from whom they received the grant of a market, now discontinued, and a fair, still held on the 21st of August: the revenue, about £140 per annum, was subsequently, by a decree of the court of Chancery, transferred to the infirmary at Truro. Within a small distance is Castle Kynock, a considerable intrenchment; and on the northern side of the town there is a ruined tower, the only relic of Bury chapel, so called from a tumulus on an eminence near the spot. The curious Druidical circles, called the Hurlers, are in this neighbourhood.

BODNEY, a parish in the southern division of the hundred of GREENHOE, county of NORFOLK, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. by S.) from Watton, containing 90 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, united to that of Great Cressingham, in the archdeaconry of Norfolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £6. 7. 3 $\frac{1}{2}$. The church is dedicated to St. Mary.

BOGNOR, a market town and chapelry in the parish of SOUTH BERSTED, hundred of ALDWICK, rape of CHICHESTER, county of SUSSEX, 7 miles (S. E.) from Chichester, and 68 (S. W. by S.) from London. The population is returned with the parish. This place, anciently called Bogenor, implying, in the Saxon language a rocky shore, was, prior to 1790, an insignificant village, inhabited only by a few labourers and fishermen. The rocks, extending several miles along the coast, render it accessible only to ships of small burden, detracting from those commercial advantages which the situation in other respects offers: it owes its increase to the salubrity of the air, and the commodiousness of the beach, which have made it eligible as a place for bathing. In 1790, Sir Richard Hotham, Knt., member of parliament for the borough of Southwark, perceiving the natural advantages which Bognor possessed as a watering-place, erected a handsome villa for his own residence, and several lodging-houses, which he furnished at considerable expense for the accommodation of visitors. From this circumstance the town is also frequently called Hothampton, in honour of Sir Richard, whose additions to it were such as to entitle him to be considered its founder. After his decease, his estate here being sold to different purchasers, Bognor increased the more, and in a few years became a place of fashionable resort. The town is pleasantly situated near the peninsula of Selsea, and is sheltered from the north winds by a chain of hills, called the South Downs, extending from Portsdown to Dover; but it is exposed to inundations of the sea, which frequently breaks in upon the adjacent coast: it commands an extensive view of the Isle of Wight; and, in a clear day, the Ower's light may be distinctly seen, which at night assumes the appearance of a gem in the ocean. It contains several handsome villas, respectable lodging-houses, and a commodious hotel, and is connected by good roads with the pleasant village of Aldwick, and other places in the vicinity, and by a ferry over the river Arun with Little Hampton, whence are pleasant rides to Worthing and Brighton. The warm and cold baths are conveniently arranged for the use of invalids; there are two subscription libraries, and races occasionally take place on the sands. The character of the place seems to render it peculiarly eligible to families who seek to avail themselves of the benefit of sea-bathing and a marine atmosphere in tranquillity and retirement, rather than to frequent watering-places in search of amusement. There is no other trade than what is necessary for the supply of the inhabitants, of whom several are employed in the fishery, for the supply of the London market. The Portsmouth and Arun canal passes within three miles of the town. The markets, recently established by act of parliament, and for which a spacious market-place has been formed, are on Thursday and Saturday; and a fair is held on the 5th and 6th of July. The internal regulation of the town is under the superintendence of commissioners appointed under an act, who meet once a month: they levy a duty of two shillings per chaldron upon coal, culm, and coke brought into the town, which is applied in repairing the roads. The chapel, dedicated to St. John, was built and endowed by subscription, in 1821. There are places of worship for Independents and Wesleyan Methodists. The Jubilee school, for the instruction of fifty girls, founded by the late Princess Charlotte; and a school for clothing and educating twenty girls, founded by Mrs. Smith, of Bersted Lodge, are supported by subscription. In opening the rocks various fossils have been discovered; beautiful agates and pebbles, and, after storms and high tides, pyrites, are found in profusion on the beach.

BOLAM, a township in that part of the parish of GAINFORD which is in the south-western division of DARLINGTON ward, county palatine of DURHAM, $8\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W.) from Darlington, containing 131 inhabitants.

BOLAM, a parish comprising the township of Tre-wick in the western division of CASTLE ward, the townships of Bolam, Bolam-Vicarage, and Gallow-Hill, in the western division of MORPETH ward, and the townships of Belsey, Bradford, Harnham, and Shortflatt, in the north-eastern division of TINDALE ward, county of NORTHUMBERLAND, and containing 651 inhabitants, of which number, 55 are in the township of Bolam, $9\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. S. W.) from Morpeth. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Northumberland, and diocese of Durham, rated in the king's books at £6. 13. 4., and in the patronage of the Crown. The church, an ancient edifice, is dedicated to St. Andrew. On the western side of the village are vestiges of an oblong intrenchment, consisting of a rampart with a double ditch, which was approached by a raised road. Mr. Gale ascribes it to the Britons, and is of opinion that this was the town of Glanoventa, which Camden fixes on the banks of the Wansbeck; some consider it to be of Roman, and others of Saxon, origin. A branch of the Watling-street, called the Devil's Causeway, may be distinctly traced about a mile westward, near which are two stone pillars, with a tumulus between them, which, on being opened, was found to contain a stone coffin. On an intrenched rock, on the north-eastern side of Bolam moor, are the ruins of some ancient buildings. The village was formerly much larger than it is at present; there are coal and limestone in the parish. The township of Bolam-Vicarage comprises only the glebe land, lying on the eastern side of the church.

BOLAS (GREAT), a parish in the Newport division of the hundred of BRADFORD (South), county of SALOP, $7\frac{1}{4}$ miles (W. by N.) from Newport, containing, with Mee-son, 274 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Salop, and diocese of Lichfield and Coventry, rated in the king's books at £7. 9. 4 $\frac{1}{2}$, and in the patronage of Sir. R. Hill, Bart. The church is dedicated to St. John the Baptist.

BOLD, a township in the parish of PRESCOT, hundred of WEST DERBY, county palatine of LANCASTER, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. S. E.) from Prescott, containing 818 inhabitants. The present elegant mansion of Bold Hall was built after a design by Leoni; and the old hall, a curious edifice, is now the farm-house belonging to it. The family of Bold resided here previously to the Conquest, and preserved an uninterrupted succession of male heirs down to the death of Peter Bold, Esq., parliamentary representative for the county, who died in 1761. The Rev. Richard Barnes, promoted to the see of Carlisle in 1570, and to that of Durham in 1577; and his brother, John Barnes, the chancellor, were natives of this place.

BOLD, a chapelry in the parish of ASTON BOTTERELL, hundred of STOTTESDEN, county of SALOP, $8\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. N. W.) from Cleobury-Mortimer. The population is returned with the parish. The chapel is in ruins.

BOLDON, a parish in the eastern division of CHESTER ward, county palatine of DURHAM, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W.) from Sunderland, comprising the villages of East and West Boldon, and containing 733 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Durham, rated in the king's books at £24. 13. 4., and in the patronage of the Bishop of Durham. The church, which has a short spire, is dedicated to St. Nicholas. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. The village of West Boldon stands on an eminence, and contains several respectable houses, some of which are occupied in summer by families from Newcastle upon Tyne and Sunderland, for the sake of enjoying the salubrity of the air. The manor has been annexed time immemorially to the see of Durham, and gave name to an early survey of the possessions of the bishoprick, called "Boldon Buke," being the first manor which occurs in that record, and on account of the numerous references in it to the services in this district. On Boldon hills, in the spring of 1644-5, some severe conflicts occurred between the army under the command of the Marquis of Newcastle, and the Scots, who then held possession of Sunderland. The parish abounds with limestone. The Rev. Henry Blacket, who died rector, in 1808, gave £10 per annum for the education of eight poor children belonging to the parish.

BOLDRE, a parish partly in the eastern division of the hundred of NEW FOREST, New Forest (East) division, and partly in the hundred of CHRISTCHURCH, New Forest (West) division, of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, 2 miles (N.) from Lymington, containing, with the hamlets of Sway and Walhampton, 2180 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, with the perpetual curacy of Lymington annexed, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Winchester, rated in the king's books at £12, endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of J. P. Shrubbs, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. John. There is a place of worship for Particular Baptists. A school for instructing and clothing twenty poor boys and twenty girls was founded at Pilley, in this parish, by the Rev. William Gilpin, vicar of Boldre, who erected the school-house, with dwellings for a master and a mistress, and, in 1803, endowed the school with the profits of his literary publications, viz., "The Lives of Bernard Gilpin, Archbishop Cranmer, Bishop Latimer," "Picturesque Tours through the New Forest, and other parts of England," "Illustrations of the New Testament," "Explanation of the Church Catechism," &c. The school is under the superintendence of special visitors.

BOLDRON, a township in the parish of BOWES, western division of the wapentake of GILLING, North riding of the county of YORK, 2 miles (S. W. by S.) from Barnard-Castle, containing 168 inhabitants.

BOLE, a parish in the North-clay division of the wapentake of BASSETLAW, county of NOTTINGHAM, 3½ miles (S. W. by S.) from Gainsborough, containing 193 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the peculiar jurisdiction of the Prebendary of Bole in the Cathedral Church of York, rated in the king's books at £4. 13. 4., endowed with £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of York. The church is dedicated to St. Martin. Bole ferry, across the Trent, is about a mile distant. William Nettlehip, in 1780, gave a small rent-charge for the instruction of four poor children.

BOLEHALL, a joint township with Glascote, in that part of the parish of TAMWORTH which is in the Tamworth division of the hundred of HEMLINGFORD, county of WARWICK, 1 mile (S. S. E.) from Tamworth, containing, with Glascote, 414 inhabitants.

BOLINGBROKE, a market town and parish in the western division of the soke of BOLINGBROKE, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, 30 miles (E. S. E.) from Lincoln, and 129 (N.) from London, containing 753 inhabitants. This town is pleasantly situated near the source of a small river, which runs into the Witham. A castle was built by William de Romara, Earl of Lincoln, of which his descendant, Alicia de Lacey, was dispossessed by Edward II. Henry IV. was born in this castle, and from it took the name of Henry of Bolingbroke: the south-west tower is still remaining, and, from the site and other vestiges, the castle appears to have been a quadrilateral building, with a tower at each angle, and to have been defended by a rampart. There is a manufactory for earthenware: the market is on Tuesday, and a fair is held on St. Peter's day. The town is within the jurisdiction of a court of requests for the recovery of debts under £5, which extends through the soke, and is held under an act passed in the 47th of George III.: constables and other officers are appointed at the court leet of the lord of the manor. The living is a discharged rectory, to which that of Hareby was united in 1739, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £9. 19. 2., and in the patronage of Mr. and Mrs. Warren. The church, dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul, is a spacious and venerable structure, but a considerable part of it was destroyed in the civil war during the reign of Charles I. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. A free school has a trifling endowment for the instruction of poor children.

BOLLEN-FEE, a township in the parish of WILMSLOW, hundred of MACCLESFIELD, county palatine of CHESTER, 6 miles (S. W.) from Stockport, containing 1761 inhabitants.

BOLLINGTON, a township partly in the parish of Bowdon, but chiefly in the parish of ROSTHERN, hundred of BUCKLOW, county palatine of CHESTER, 5½ miles (N. by W.) from Nether Knutsford, containing 264 inhabitants. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists.

BOLLINGTON, a township in the parish of PRESTBURY, hundred of MACCLESFIELD, county palatine of CHESTER, 2½ miles (N. by E.) from Macclesfield, containing 1723 inhabitants. The village lies on the banks of a small stream, called the Bolling, from which its name is derived. Here are some silk and cotton factories, collieries, and a water-mill for grinding bark; and so prosperous has been the trade of the place, that the population has increased one-third since the census of 1821. The Macclesfield canal passes through the township. A chapel has lately been erected, by means of a grant obtained from the parliamentary commissioners. The Wesleyan Methodists have a meeting-house, attached to which is a Sunday school, wherein five hundred children are instructed. At Kerridge Hill, which is partly in this township, and partly in that of Rainow, there are quarries of freestone and slate, worked to a considerable extent, the produce being chiefly sent to the neighbouring towns; they were formerly leased by the Crown to the corporation of Macclesfield, but have been assigned, by an act passed in the 1st of Charles I., to the proprietors of land in the vicinity.

BOLNEY, a hamlet in the parish of HARPSDEN, hundred of BINFIELD, county of OXFORD, 2 miles (S. S. E.) from Henley upon Thames. The population is returned with the parish. Bolney was formerly a parish, but the church having become desecrated, the living has been united to the rectory of Harpsden.

BOLNEY, a parish in the hundred of BUTTINGHILL, rape of LEWES, county of SUSSEX, 3½ miles (W. S. W.) from Cuckfield, containing 560 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Lewes, and diocese of Chichester, rated in the king's books at £5. 5. 2½., endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Prebendary of Hove in the Cathedral Church of Chichester. The church is dedicated to St. Mary Magdalene.

BOLNHURST, a parish in the hundred of STONDEN, county of BEDFORD, 7 miles (N. by E.) from Bed- ford, containing 264 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Bedford, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £9, and in the patronage of William Guppy, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Dunstan. A free school, founded by the Rev. Mr. Baker, in 1791, has an endowment of £12 per annum, for which about twelve children are instructed gratuitously.

BOLSOVER, a parish (formerly a market town) in the hundred of SCARSDALE, county of DERBY, 28½ miles (N. N.E.) from Derby, and 145½ (N. by W.) from London, containing, with part of the township of Glapwell, 1355 inhabitants. This place, prior to the Conquest called Belesoure, was, soon after the Norman survey, noted for a castle erected by William Peveril, which having been forfeited by his son, in 1153, became the occasional residence of King John; but in a few years, together with the castle of the Peak, was garrisoned by the barons against that monarch. In 1215, William, Earl Ferrars, retook both these castles from the barons, and was made governor of them, as a reward for his fidelity. That part of Bolsover castle which is now habitable was built by Sir Charles Cavendish, in 1613, in which his eldest son William, afterwards Duke of Newcastle, thrice entertained Charles I. and his court, and upon one occasion, when the queen was present, expended £15,000. In the reign of Charles II. the duke erected the splendid pile of building near it, which is now in a state of ruin. During the civil war, while the duke was abroad, the parliament having seized and sold this mansion, it was about to be pulled down, but Sir Charles, the duke's younger brother, recovered it by purchase, and restored it to the family: it occupies a lofty eminence commanding an extensive prospect. The town is large and well built, and is pleasantly situated on rising ground, environed on every side, except where the ground forms a natural rampart, with a deep intrenchment. It is within the jurisdiction of the court for the honour of Peveril, which is held at Lenton, near Nottingham: a court leet belonging to the lord of the manor is held every third week, for the recovery of debts under 40s. There is a fair on Midsummer-day. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Derby, and diocese of Lichfield and Coventry, rated in the king's books at £5. 19. 4., endowed with £200 and £10 per annum private benefaction, £400 royal bounty, and £200 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Duke of Portland. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a spacious structure, having portions in the Norman style intermixed with later English architecture, and many modern insertions: within is a sepulchral chapel belonging to the Cavendish family, in which are some splendid monuments. There are places of worship for Independents and Wesleyan Methodists. A small endowed school was erected in 1756; and, in 1761, Mrs Smithson bequeathed £200 for portioning young women with £25 each, directing the overplus to be given to the poor.

BOLTBY, a chapelry in that part of the parish of FELIX-KIRK which is in the wapentake of BREDFORTH, North riding of the county of YORK, 4½ miles (N. E.) from Thirsk, containing 403 inhabitants. The chapel is dedicated to the Holy Trinity.

BOLTERSTONE, a chapelry in the parish of ECCLESFIELD, northern division of the wapentake of VOL. I.

STRAFFORTH and TICKHILL, West riding of the county of YORK, 9 miles (N. W. by N.) from Sheffield. The population is returned with the parish. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry and diocese of York, endowed with £200 royal bounty, and £200 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of J. Remington, Esq.

BOLTON, a parish in ALLERDALE ward below Derwent, county of CUMBERLAND, 1½ mile (N. by W.) from Ireby, containing, with the townships of Bolton High-Side, and Bolton Low-Side, 1123 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Carlisle, rated in the king's books at £19. 18. 4., and in the patronage of the Earl of Lonsdale. The church is dedicated to All Saints. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. Here are collieries and limekilns, the neighbourhood abounding with coal and limestone to a great extent. A copper mine has been opened within the last few years, but it is not very productive. A copper battle-axe was lately found in the moss at Bolton wood, four feet below the surface. It is recorded in an old manuscript, that John Porter, of Bolton-Gate, a man of temperate habits and a sound constitution, died at the age of ninety-six, and that some time prior to that event, his hair, nails, teeth, and skin, and the whole crasis (temperature and constitution) was renewed, and became fresh as a child's.

BOLTON, a chapelry in the parish of EDLINGHAM, northern division of COQUETDALE ward, county of NORTHUMBERLAND, 6½ miles (W.) from Alnwick, containing 144 inhabitants. On the 5th of September, in the 5th of Henry VIII., a short time previously to the battle of Branxton, a congress was held here, at which several noblemen and other distinguished persons, with a train of about twenty-six thousand troops, were present. An hospital for a master, three chaplains, thirteen lepers, and other lay brethren, was founded and endowed prior to 1225, by Robert de Roos, Baron of Wark, in honour of St. Thomas the Martyr, or the Holy Trinity, and made subordinate to the abbey of Rivaux, and the priory of Kirkham, in Yorkshire. Several stone chests and urns, containing ashes, charcoal, and fragments of human bones, together with a celt, have been discovered at a short distance from this place.

BOLTON, a chapelry in the parish of MORLAND, West ward, county of WESTMORLAND, 4 miles (N. W. by W.) from Appleby, containing 445 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Carlisle, endowed with £400 private benefaction, and £600 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Landowners. The chapel is dedicated to All Saints, and a grant of £100 was lately assigned by the Incorporated Society for the enlargement of churches and chapels for its re-erection on a more extended plan. A meeting-house for the Methodists was built in 1818. A free school for the instruction of fourteen children is endowed with £14. 10. per annum, being the produce of various benefactions, and is under the control of eleven trustees: the school-room was built by subscription. In 1816, a chain bridge, thirty yards in length, was constructed across the Eden, about a mile north of the village, at the expense of the landowners. Bewley castle, which stands in the neighbourhood, and is now occupied as a farm-house, was anciently the residence of the bishops of Carlisle.

BOLTON, a township in the parish of BISHOP-WILTON, partly in the liberty of ST. PETER of YORK, and partly in the Wilton-Beacon division of the wapentake of HARTHILL, East riding of the county of YORK, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N.W.) from Pocklington, containing 112 inhabitants. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists.

BOLTON, a township in the parish of CALVERLEY, wapentake of MORLEY, West riding of the county of YORK, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N.N.E.) from Bradford, containing 634 inhabitants. The woollen manufacture prevails to a great extent in the vicinity.

BOLTON, a joint township with East Halton, in that part of the parish of SKIPTON which is in the eastern division of the wapentake of STAINCLIFFE and EWECROSS, West riding of the county of YORK, 6 miles (E.) from Skipton. The population is returned with East Halton.

BOLTON-ABBEY, a chapelry in that part of the parish of SKIPTON which is in the eastern division of the wapentake of STAINCLIFFE and EWECROSS, West riding of the county of YORK, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E.N.E.) from Skipton, containing 127 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of the East riding, and diocese of York, endowed with £400 private benefaction, and £1800 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Vicar of Pocklington. The chapel, dedicated to St. Mary and St. Cuthbert, was formed out of the nave of the conventual church belonging to a priory originally founded at Embsay, by William de Meschines, and his wife Cecilia, in 1121, for canons Regular of the order of St. Augustine, and removed hither, thirty-three years afterwards by their daughter Adeliza, who was married to William Fitz-Duncan. In the 26th of Henry VIII., the revenue was valued at £302. 9. 3., and the society was dissolved in 1540. The ruins, which are extensive, are surrounded by scenery celebrated for its surpassing beauty, being composed of a variety of picturesque objects, so arranged as to constitute an almost perfect landscape. Here was also an establishment of Carmelite friars, founded by the Earl of Albemarle, or, according to some, by Lord Gray of Codnor. The Hon. Robert Boyle, in 1697, established a free grammar school, and endowed it with certain houses, lands, and a rent-charge of £20: the annual income, amounting to about £100, is, by consent of the master (the perpetual curate), paid to an usher for teaching the scholars: the premises comprise a house and garden in the occupation of the master, and a detached school-room, which is open to all children of the chapelry; the present number, about twenty, receive only an English education, though the school is free for instruction in the classics.

BOLTON by BOWLAND, a parish in the western division of the wapentake of STAINCLIFFE and EWECROSS, West riding of the county of YORK, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N.N.E.) from Clitheroe, containing 1205 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of York, rated in the king's books at £11. 13. 4., and in the patronage of J. P. Haywood and another. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, contains a large monumental slab of grey limestone, bearing an effigy supposed to be that of Sir Ralph Pudsay, together with effigies of his three wives and twenty-five children. Sir Ralph afforded a brief asylum to Henry VI., at his house, Bolton Hall, shortly after the battle of Hexham, so disastrous to the Lancastrian party: a pair of boots, a pair of gloves, and a spoon, are still preserved as relics of that monarch, and a well, stated to have been dug and formed into a bath by his orders, retains the name of King Henry's Well. The rivers Ribble and Skiridon run through the parish, in which there are two mineral springs, also a lead mine.

BOLTON-CASTLE, a chapelry in the parish of WENSLEY, western division of the wapentake of HANG, North riding of the county of YORK, $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N.W. by W.) from Middleham, containing 278 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, with that of Redmire annexed, in the archdeaconry of Richmond, and diocese of Chester, endowed with £1000 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Rector of Wensley. The chapel is dedicated to St. Oswald. On the brow of a hill are the ruins of the castle, which was built by Richard, Lord Scrope, Chancellor of England in the reign of Richard II., in which the Queen of Scots was kept prisoner, in 1568. During the parliamentary war it sustained a pressing siege, which terminated in its surrender to the insurgents in 1645: the north-eastern tower fell down in 1761, and the eastern and northern sides are entirely in ruins; the west front, however, is in good repair. There is a small endowment in land for the instruction of poor children, bequeathed by the Rev. Thomas Baynes, in 1725.

BOLTON upon DEARNE, a parish in the northern division of the wapentake of STRAFFORTH and TICKHILL, West riding of the county of YORK, $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. by E.) from Rotherham, containing 623 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of York, rated in the king's books at £6. 15. 5., endowed with £800 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of W. Marsden, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Andrew. A statute fair for hiring servants is held on the second Thursday in November. There is a charitable fund from which £11. 10. are paid annually for the instruction of twenty poor children, principally arising from a bequest by Richard Bingley, in 1756, and one by Elizabeth Pashley, in 1759.

BOLTON le MOORS, a parish in the hundred of SALFORD, county palatine of LANCASTER, comprising the market town of Bolton, the chapelries of Blackrod, Bradshaw, Darcy-Lever, Rivington, and Turton, the townships of Anglezarke, Brightmet, Edgworth, Entwisle, Harwood, Little Lever, Longworth, Quarlton, Sharple, and Tonge with Haulgh, and the hamlet of Lostock, and containing 50,197 inhabitants, of which number, 31,295 are in the town of Bolton, 43 miles (S.S.E.) from Lancaster, and 197 (N.W. by N.) from London. This place, which derives the adjunct to its name from being situated on the moors, was of little importance until about 1337, when the emigrant Flemings, who fixed their residence here, introduced the manufacture of woollen cloth, and laid the foundation of its future increase as a manufacturing town; and after the revocation of the edict of Nantz, many of the French refugees, attracted by the means of employment which its trade at that time afforded, took up their abode in the town. At the commencement of the civil war in the reign of Charles I., the inhabitants espoused the cause of the parliament, by whom the town was garrisoned, and in whose possession it remained till 1644, when Prince Rupert, advancing with ten thousand men to the relief of Latham House, which was besieged by a body of two thousand parliamentary troops, compelled them to raise the siege, and retire into this town. Having been joined by the Earl of Derby, the Prince resolved to invest Bolton, and an attempt was made to take it by storm; but the garrison, after sustaining several assaults with desperate valour, finally repulsed the assailants. The earl, placing himself at the head of his Lancashire tenantry, made a second attempt upon the town, which fell into his hands, and the parliamentary governor escaped with the remnant of the garrison into Yorkshire. After continuing for some time in possession of the royalists, Bolton was given up to the parliament; and after the disastrous battle of Worcester, the gallant earl, who had come from the Isle of Man to the assistance of Charles II., being taken prisoner, was condemned by a military tribunal at Chester, and sent under an escort to this place, where he was beheaded.

The town, comprising the townships of Great and Little Bolton, which are separated by the rivulet Croal, has been greatly enlarged, under an act of parliament obtained in 1792, for enclosing Bolton moor, of which more than two hundred and fifty acres were divided into allotments, a portion of which is occupied with buildings. The powers of the commissioners appointed under that act were extended by an act in 1817, since which time three spacious squares, several ranges of buildings, and a few public edifices, have been erected: four hundred and twenty-eight houses in Great Bolton, and one hundred and ninety-six in Little Bolton, were built during the year 1823, and considerable improvement has been made in the roads leading to the town. The houses are handsomely built; the streets, which are well paved, are lighted with gas by a company incorporated in 1820, and the inhabitants are supplied with excellent water, brought from a distance of a mile and a half, by earthenware pipes, into a reservoir which occupies a space of twenty-two acres, whence it is conveyed by an iron main of thirteen inches diameter to the various parts of the town: the water, descending from an elevation of seven hundred feet into the reservoir, rushes through the main with a pressure sufficient to raise it to the height of eighty feet, and is thus rendered available, without the assistance of an engine, to the prompt extinction of fire in the loftiest buildings. This undertaking was effected at an expense of £40,000, subscribed in shares of £50 each, by a company established by act of parliament, in 1824, for whose use a handsome stone building has been erected, in front of which is an emblematical tablet, representing a Naiad seated by a fountain, pouring water from a ewer to a thirsty child. The theatre is regularly open during the season; and a new assembly-room has been lately erected, in which also concerts take place occasionally. There are three public libraries; one of them, recently established, is conducted on principles less restrictive than either of the two former: it is held in the Exchange Buildings, a neat stone edifice, with two Ionic columns at the entrance, erected in 1825; the lower room, which is of ample dimensions, is appropriated to the transaction of general business, and fitted up as a news-room; the upper part contains the library and reading-rooms. A mechanics' institution was established in 1825.

The principal branch of manufacture, and to the introduction of which Bolton owes its present extent and importance, is that of cotton, in the improvement of which, many ingenious and valuable discoveries originated in this town. Sir Richard Arkwright, a resident here, after he had established his works at Derby and Nottingham, brought the spinning jenny and the water-frame machines to perfection; and Samuel Crompton, who was also an inhabitant of Bolton, invented a machine, called the mule, combining the properties of both, for which, after receiving two several donations of £105 and £400, subscribed as acknowledgments of his merit, he was ultimately remunerated by parliament with a grant of £5000. Previously to the introduction of the cotton trade, some weavers, who arrived in this country from the palatinate of the Rhine, had added to the manufacture of woollen cloth that of a fabric, partly composed of linen yarn, chiefly imported from Germany, and partly of cotton. The chief articles were fustian, jean, and thickset: velvet, entirely of cotton, was first made here in 1756, and muslin, quilting, and dimity, succeeded. After the introduction of the improved machinery several factories were established, but, being chiefly worked by water, they were consequently on a small scale; the subsequent employment of steam enabled the proprietors to enlarge their works, and the adoption of power-looms contributed greatly to improve and extend the trade: there are at present more than twenty factories, worked by thirty-one steam-engines, of the aggregate power of seven hundred horses. The bleaching grounds are very extensive, and more than ten millions of pieces of cloth are annually bleached in the parish: among these are three large establishments, in each of which, from one hundred and thirty to one hundred and fifty thousand pieces are, on the average, bleached every month. There are ten iron-foundries, some of them on a very extensive scale, and one employing three hundred persons, chiefly in the construction of steam-engines. Machinery of all kinds, and mills of every description, are made to a great extent. The neighbourhood abounds with coal, which is brought into the town at a moderate expense, by means of a rail-road communicating with the Leeds and Liverpool canal at Leigh, eight miles distant: this work was begun under an act of parliament, in 1825, and completed at an expense of £80,000, subscribed in shares of £100 each. The canal from Manchester to Bolton was constructed in 1791; a branch to Bury diverges from it at Little Lever, in this parish. Veins of lead-ore and of calamine have been worked at Rivington, but they have not been found productive. The market days are Monday and Saturday: the fairs are on July 30th and 31st, and October 13th and 14th, for horned cattle, horses, pigs, and pedlary; a fair for lean cattle is also held every alternate Wednesday, from January 5th to May 12th. The market is held in the area of the new square, in the centre of which is a hand, some cast-iron column, thirty feet high, rising from a pedestal in the form of a vase, and supporting a lantern which is lighted with gas.

The town is within the jurisdiction of the county magistrates, one of whom attends every Monday, and a petty session is held for the division every Monday and Friday. A boroughreeve, two constables, and a deputy constable, are chosen for each of the townships of Great and Little Bolton, at the court leet of the lord of the manor; under whom also a court for the recovery of debts under 40s. was held till the 6th of George III., when it was discontinued. A town-hall, a neat and commodious edifice, has been recently erected at Little Bolton, at an expense of £2000; and it is in contemplation to erect a similar structure in Great Bolton, more adapted to the use, and more suited to the importance, of the town than the present rooms in which the public business is transacted. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Chester, rated in the king's books at £10. 3. 1½., endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Bishop of Chester. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a spacious structure, principally in the later style of English architecture, and there are some interesting monuments in the chancel. A church, dedicated to the Holy Trinity, was erected in 1825, at an expense of £13,412. 13., part of which was defrayed by grant from the parliamentary commissioners: it is a handsome structure in the later style of English architecture, with a tower, and contains nine hundred and twenty free sittings: the living is a perpetual curacy, in the patronage of the Vicar of Bolton. The church, dedicated to St. George, in Little Bolton, was erected by subscription, in 1796: the living is a perpetual curacy, in the patronage of the Trustees. The chapel, dedicated to All Saints, in Little Bolton, has been recently rebuilt: the living is a perpetual curacy, endowed with £200 private benefaction, £200 royal bounty, and £2200 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the lord of the manor. There are two places of worship each for Baptists, Independents, and Unitarians, one each for the Society of Friends and Swedenborgians, seven for the various denominations of Methodists, and a Roman Catholic chapel. The free grammar school was founded by Robert Lever, Esq., citizen of London, who, in 1641, bequeathed estates now producing about £400 per annum, with which the revenue of a school previously existing has been united, amounting in the whole to £485 per annum: it is under the direction of governors incorporated in 1784, who appoint a head-master, with a salary of £160 per annum; a second master, with a salary of £100; and a writing master, with a salary of £75: there is a small exhibition to either of the Universities. Robert Ainsworth, the compiler of the Latin Dictionary, and Dr. Lempriere, the compiler of the Classical Dictionary, were masters of this school; and the former was educated here. A charity school was founded and endowed, in 1693, by Mr. Nathaniel Hulton, for the instruction of thirty boys and thirty girls; the income is £277 per annum: the school is under the management of trustees, who appoint a master and a mistress, the former with a salary of £45, and the latter with a salary of £25, per annum. A school for the clothing and education of poor children was founded, in 1714, by Thomas Marsden, Esq., who endowed it with £150, now producing £14. 10. per annum, of which the master receives £10. 10., and the remainder is expended in repairs. There are Sunday schools in connexion with the established church and the numerous dissenting congregations, in which more than seven thousand children are instructed. The school-room in connexion with the parish church is a large and handsome building of freestone, in the later style of English architecture, erected by subscription, in 1819, at an expense of £1800; it contains a good organ. A dispensary was established in 1814, and is liberally supported by subscription: the building, which is of a neat and appropriate character, was erected at an expense of £1700. A clothing society is supported chiefly by ladies, and a society for the relief of poor women during childbirth was established in 1798. John Bradshaw, president of the court which sentenced Charles I. to the scaffold, is said to have been born near this town.

BOLTON le SANDS, a parish in the hundred of LONSDALE, south of the sands, county palatine of LANCASTER, comprising the chapelry of Over Kellet, and the townships of Bolton le Sands, Nether Kellet, and Slyne with Hest, and containing 1821 inhabitants, of which number, 615 are in the township of Bolton le Sands, 4 miles (N.) from Lancaster. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Richmond, and diocese of Chester, rated in the king's books at £4. 15., endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Bishop of Chester. The church was rebuilt in 1813. The free grammar school, for children belonging to the townships of Bolton, Nether Kellet, and Slyne with Hest, was founded in 1619, by Thomas Assheton, and has an income of £23 per annum, arising from the original endowment and subsequent benefactions. The village of Hest is considerably resorted to for sea-bathing. There are limekilns in the township of Nether Kellet.

BOLTON upon SWALE, a chapelry in the parish of CATTERICK, eastern division of the wapentake of GILLING, North riding of the county of YORK, 1½ mile (N.E.) from Catterick, containing 100 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Richmond, and diocese of Chester, endowed with £600 royal bounty, and £1000 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Crown. The chapel, dedicated to St. Mary, contains a neat pyramidal tablet, erected by subscription, in 1743, over the grave of Henry Jenkins, a native of this place, who died at the age of one hundred and sixty-nine, the oldest Englishman on record.

BOLTON-PERCY, a parish in the ainsty of the city, and East riding of the county, of YORK, comprising the townships of Appleton-Roebeck, Bolton-Percy, Colton, and Steeton, and containing 1054 inhabitants, of which number, 238 are in the township of Bolton-Percy, 4 miles (E. by S.) from Tadcaster. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of the East riding, and diocese of York, rated in the king's books at £39. 15. 2½., and in the patronage of the Archbishop of York. The church, dedicated to All Saints, was built in 1423, by Thomas Parker, the rector: it is a neat structure, decorated with a considerable quantity of stained glass, and containing several monuments belonging to the family of Fairfax. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists.

BONBY, a parish in the northern division of the wapentake of YARBOROUGH, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N.) from Glandford-Bridge, containing 275 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £6. 4. 4., and in the patronage of Lord Yarborough. The church, dedicated to St. Andrew, has lately received an addition of one hundred sittings, fifty of which are free, the Incorporated Society for the enlargement of churches and chapels having granted £50 towards defraying the expense. In the reign of John, an Alien priory was established by the prior and convent at Merton, to whom this church, with others, had been granted in the 4th of Henry IV., which was given to the Chartreux-house at Beaul.

BONCHURCH, a parish in the liberty of EAST MEDINA, Isle of Wight division of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, 10 miles (S. E. by S.) from Newport, containing 132 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, with the perpetual curacy of Shanklin annexed, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Winchester, rated in the king's books at £6. 15. 5., and in the patronage of Lord H. Seymour and J. Popham, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Boniface.

BONDGATE, a joint township with Aismunderby, in that part of the parish of RIPON which is within the liberty of RIPON, West riding of the county of YORK, $\frac{1}{2}$ a mile (S.) from Ripon. The population is returned with Aismunderby. An hospital for two poor women was founded here, by one of the archbishops of York, about the time of King John.

BONDS, a joint township with Barnacre, in the parish of GARSTANG, hundred of AMOUNDERNESS, county palatine of LANCASTER, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (E. N. E.) from Garstang. The population is returned with Barnacre. Here are the relics of a castle, called Greenhalgh castle.

BONEHILL, a township in that part of the parish of TAMWORTH which is in the southern division of the hundred of OFFLOW, county of STAFFORD, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (S. W. by W.) from Tamworth, containing 279 inhabitants.

BONINGALE, or BONINGHALL, a parish in the Shiffnall division of the hundred of BRIMSTREE, county of SALOP, $5\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. E.) from Shiffnall, containing 160 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to the rectory of Stockton, in the archdeaconry of Salop, and diocese of Lichfield and Coventry.

BONNINGTON, a parish partly in the liberty of ROMNEY-MARSH, but chiefly in the hundred of STREET, lathe of SHEPWAY, county of KENT, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. E. by S.) from Ashford, containing 152 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Canterbury, rated in the king's books at £10. 12. 8 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of T. Papillon, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Rumwald. The Grand Military, or the Shorncliff and Rye, canal crosses the parish.

BONNINGTON (SUTTON), county of NOTTINGHAM.—See SUTTON-BONNINGTON.

BONSALL, a parish (formerly a market town) in the hundred of WIRKSWORTH, county of DERBY, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. by W.) from Wirksworth, containing 1396 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Derby, and diocese of Lichfield and Coventry, rated in the king's books at £9. 16. 0 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of the Dean of Lincoln. The church, dedicated to St. James, is a handsome embattled edifice, having a tower terminating in pinnacles, and supporting an octagonal spire, curiously ornamented, and encircled with coronets. There is a place of worship for General Baptists. The houses are scattered over a considerable plot of ground, and form a large village, at which a market was formerly held; the market cross, consisting of a pillar, bearing date 1687, resting on a base formed by an ascent of fifteen steps, and crowned by a ball, still remains. The vicinity is diversified with hills and dales, among which latter, the Dale of Bonsall is the most interesting; its geological formation consists of four strata of limestone, and three of toad-stone: the neighbouring hills also abound with limestone. Lead-ore and lapis calaminaris are obtained to a considerable extent, and prepared on the spot, the greater part of the population being engaged in the different works: here is also a comb-manufactory. A school, in which fifty boys and girls are instructed gratuitously, is endowed with about £100 per annum, arising from the gift of certain tenements by William Cragge and his wife Elizabeth, in 1704, and of some land by Elizabeth Turner, in 1763. Adjoining the school-room is a comfortable dwelling-house, with a garden attached to it, for the use of the master, whose salary is about £46 per annum: of the remainder of the income, a portion is appropriated for apprenticing boys and for purchasing religious books. Bonsall is in the honour of Tutbury, duchy of Lancaster, and within the jurisdiction of a court of pleas held at Tutbury every third Tuesday, for the recovery of debts under 40s. Vestiges of a Roman road may be traced within the parish.

BONWICK, a township in the parish of SKIPSEA, northern division of the wapentake of HOLDERNESS, East riding of the county of YORK, $11\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. S. E.) from Great Driffield, containing 30 inhabitants.

BOOKHAM (GREAT), a parish in the hundred of EFFINGHAM, county of SURREY, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. S. W.) from Leatherhead, containing 732 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Surrey, and diocese of Winchester, rated in the king's books at £9. 17. 3 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of Dr. Heberden. The church is dedicated to St. Nicholas.

BOOKHAM (LITTLE), a parish in the hundred of EFFINGHAM, county of SURREY, 3 miles (W. S. W.) from Leatherhead, containing 153 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Surrey, and diocese of Winchester, rated in the king's books at £6. 15. 7., and in the patronage of the Rev. G. P. Boileau Pollen. Certain tenements in London, producing about £65 per annum, were assigned by Sir Benjamin Maddox with the intent that a moiety of the rental should be given to the clergyman of this parish, and that the other moiety should be applied for the benefit of the poor and the parish clerk, and for the reparation of the church and the highways.

BOOLEY, a township in the parish of STANTON upon HINE-HEATH, Whitchurch division of the hundred of BRADFORD (North), county of SALOP, containing 134 inhabitants.

BOOTH, a hamlet in the parish of HOWDEN, wapentake of HOWDENSHERE, East riding of the county of YORK, 2 miles (S. W.) from Howden, with which the population is returned. The village lies on the northern bank of the river Ouse, across which there is a ferry, called Booth ferry.

BOOTHBY, a parish in the higher division of the wapentake of BOOTHBY-GRAFFO, parts of KESTEVEN, county of LINCOLN, 10 miles (N. W. by N.) from Sleaford, containing 155 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £11. 12. 3½., and in the patronage of Viscount Melbourne. The church is dedicated to St. Andrew.

BOOTHBY-PAGNELL, a parish in the wapentake of WINNIBRIGGS and THREO, parts of KESTEVEN, county of LINCOLN, 5½ miles (N. N. W.) from Corby, containing 110 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £11. 10. 5., and in the patronage of J. Litchford, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Andrew.

BOOTHEN, a joint township with Penkhul, in the parish of STOKE upon TRENT, northern division of the hundred of PIREHILL, county of STAFFORD. The population is returned with Penkhul.

BOOTHES (HIGHER), a township in that part of the parish of WHALLEY which is in the higher division of the hundred of BLACKBURN, county palatine of LANCASTER, 3 miles (E.) from Burnley, containing 3172 inhabitants.

BOOTHES (LOWER), a township in that part of the parish of WHALLEY which is in the higher division of the hundred of BLACKBURN, county palatine of LANCASTER, containing 1513 inhabitants.

BOOTLE, a market town and parish in ALLERDALE ward above Derwent, county of CUMBERLAND, 5½ miles (S. S. E.) from Ravenglass, and 282 (N. W. by N.) from London, containing 656 inhabitants. The name, formerly "Bothill," is supposed to be derived from the booths erected on a hill above the town, for the watchmen whose duty it was to light the beacon on its summit, upon the discovery of any ships in the Irish channel, which might appear to threaten a descent upon the coast. A Benedictine nunnery was founded at Seton, in this parish, by Gunild, daughter of Henry de Boyvill, fourth lord of Millorn, to which Henry IV. annexed the hospital of St. Leonard, in Lancaster: its revenue, at the dissolution, was £13. 17. 4.; there are still some remains. The town is pleasantly situated within two miles of the sea; the houses are neatly built, and the inhabitants well supplied with water: the land in the neighbourhood is in a high state of cultivation, and the environs abound with pleasing scenery. The Corney and Bootle Fells, eminences in the adjoining forest of Copeland, afford extensive views; and from Black Coombe, which is nearly two thousand feet high, may be seen the coast of Scotland, the Isle of Man, and the Welch mountains. The trade is principally in corn, pork, and bacon, which are sent to Liverpool. The market is on Saturday: the fairs are on April 5th and September 24th, for the sale of corn, and for hiring servants; and April 26th and August 3rd, for horses, horned cattle, and sheep. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Richmond, and diocese of Chester, rated in the king's books at £19. 17. 3½., and in the patronage of the Earl of Lonsdale. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a very ancient edifice, though much modernised by successive repairs; the interior, which has been deprived of its original character, contains some interesting monuments, among which is an effigy on a brass plate of Sir Hugh Askew, who was knighted at the battle of Musselburgh, and a large octagonal font of black marble, ornamented on each side with two ancient shields, and bearing inscriptions in old English and Saxon characters. There is a place of worship for Independents, built in 1780, by Mr. Joseph Whitridge, a native of Bootle, who endowed it with £1000, vested in trustees. The free school was founded in 1713, by Mr. Henry Singleton, who endowed it with £200, which sum, with subsequent benefactions, produces about £20 per annum, as a salary to the master, who is appointed by the rector and four trustees, and teaches six boys gratuitously: there are other bequests for the benefit of the poor. At Selker Bay, a small inlet of the sea, are sometimes seen the remains of vessels, which are traditionally said to have been Roman galleys, sunk there at the time of an invasion by that people; and at Esk-Meots are vestiges of an encampment, where Roman coins and fragments of altars have been frequently discovered.

BOOTLE, a chapelry in the parish of WALTON on the HILL, hundred of WEST DERBY, county palatine of LANCASTER, 3¼ miles (N.) from Liverpool, containing, with the township of Linacre, 808 inhabitants. The village comprises several good houses, and is very much resorted to during summer, for the benefit of sea-bathing.

BOOTON, a parish in the southern division of the hundred of ERPINGHAM, county of NORFOLK, 1¼ mile (E. S. E.) from Reepham, containing 204 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £7. 12. 6., and in the patronage of Mrs. Elwin. The church is dedicated to St. Michael.

BORDEAN, a tything in the parish and hundred of EAST-MEON, Alton (South) division of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, 3½ miles (W. by N.) from Petersfield. The population is returned with the parish.

BORDEN, a parish in the hundred of MILTON, lathe of SCRAY, county of KENT, 2¼ miles (W. by S.) from Sittingbourne, containing 650 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Canterbury, rated in the king's books at £8. 10., and in the patronage of J. Musgrave, Esq. The church, dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul, is an ancient edifice, comprising three aisles and three chancels, with a square tower at the western end: there are some Roman bricks mixed with the flint-stones in the building, and cemented with mortar, in the composition of which pulverized cockle-shells have been used: the chief entrance is under a Saxon, or Norman, arch, and there are similar specimens of architecture in other parts of the edifice. A British coin, and several relics of Roman antiquity, together with a great quantity of round stones, like cannon-balls, have been found in the neighbourhood. Dr. Robert Plot, the natural historian of Oxfordshire and Staffordshire, was born at the manor-house of Sutton-Baron, in this parish, in 1641, where he died, April 13th, 1696.

BORDESLEY, a chapelry in the parish of ASTON, Birmingham division of the hundred of HEMLINGFORD, county of WARWICK. The population is returned with the parish. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Coventry, and diocese of Lichfield and Coventry, and in the patronage of the Vicar of Aston. The chapel, dedicated to the Holy Trinity, is in the later style of English architecture: it was built in 1820, at an expense of £12,722. 15. 6., which was raised by subscription among the inhabitants, aided by a grant from the parliamentary commissioners. This was formerly a small hamlet, consisting only of detached houses, but from its proximity to Birmingham, it has become an integral part of that town, and participates largely in its trade, manufactures, and institutions. An hospital for about twelve poor persons, an apartment in which is used for a chapel, has been built by Mr. Dowell, who appoints the inmates, but no permanent provision for their support has yet been made.

BORDESLEY, a hamlet in that part of the parish of TARDEBIGG which is in the upper division of the hundred of HALFESHIRE, county of WORCESTER, 5½ miles (E. S. E.) from Bromsgrove. The population is returned with the parish. A Cistercian abbey, in honour of the Blessed Virgin Mary, was built in 1138, by the Empress Matilda, the revenue of which, a short time previously to the dissolution, was estimated at £392. 8. 6.; the chapel, dedicated to St. Stephen, which subsisted for some time afterwards, formed part of it.

BOREHAM, a parish in the hundred of CHELMSFORD, county of Essex, 3½ miles (N. E. by E.) from Chelmsford, containing 918 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Essex, and diocese of London, rated in the king's books at £10. 3. 9., and in the patronage of the Bishop of London. The church is dedicated to St. Andrew. The Chelmer and Blackwater canal crosses the southern part of the parish. The parochial school has an endowment of about £3 per annum, the gift of Robert Clough, in 1726; and Edmund Butler, in 1717, appropriated land for clothing and instructing poor children of Little Barlow and Boreham. New Hall, in this parish, is part of a much larger mansion supposed to have been built in the reign of Henry VII., and greatly adorned by Henry VIII., who, having obtained the manor in exchange for other property, raised it into an honour: his daughter, the Princess Mary, also resided here for several years. It afterwards came into the possession of Villiers, the first duke of Buckingham, and, on the attainder of his son, was purchased by Cromwell. After the Restoration it became the property of the Duke of Albemarle, but has since been purchased by a few opulent individuals professing the Roman Catholic faith, and is now occupied by a society of English nuns, who were driven from Liege by the fury of the French republicans, and who now superintend the education of about eighty Roman Catholic young ladies. The splendid chapel which belonged to the mansion, and which contained the painted window now in St. Margaret's church, Westminster, was taken down about eighty years ago, and the great hall of the building has since been converted into a chapel.

BORESFORD, a joint township with Pedwardine, in that part of the parish of BRAMPTON-BRYAN which is in the hundred of WIGMORE, county of HEREFORD, 3 miles (S. E.) from Knighton, containing, with Pedwardine, 112 inhabitants.

BORLEY, a parish in the hundred of HINCKFORD, county of Essex, 2½ miles (N. W. by W.) from Sudbury, containing 195 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the peculiar jurisdiction of the Archbishop of Canterbury, rated in the king's books at £9, and in the patronage of Earl Waldegrave.

BORLEY, a township in the parish of OMBERSLEY, lower division of the hundred of OSWALDSLOW, county of WORCESTER. The population is returned with Ombersley.

BOROUGHBRIDGE, a hamlet situated within the parishes of LING, OTHERY, MIDDLEZOY, and WESTON-ZOYLAND, partly in the hundred of ANDERSFIELD, and partly in that of WHITLEY, county of SOMERSET. The population is returned with the respective parishes. Collinson, the county historian, considers the name to be derived from "a large borough or mount, very high and steep," and a stone bridge of three lofty arches, which here crosses the navigable river Parret: this mount is situated within an enclosure on the eastern side of the river, and has generally been thought to have been formed by nature; but the same author supposes it to be a work of art, raised for a tumulus. It is crowned with the ruins of an ancient cruciform chapel, which was dedicated to St. Michael, and dependent on the abbey of Athelney. Though previously in a dilapidated state, it was greatly damaged during the parliamentary war, when it was occupied as a military post by a small party of royalists, who, after having successfully resisted various assaults, were compelled to surrender to a body of parliamentarians, detached against them by General Fairfax.

BOROUGHBRIDGE, a borough, market town, and chapelry, in that part of the parish of ALDBOROUGH which is in the lower division of the wapentake of CLARO, West riding of the county of YORK, 17½ miles (N. W. by W.) from York, and 206 (N. N. W.) from London, containing 860 inhabitants. This place, which has risen into importance since the decline of Aldborough, within half a mile of which it is situated, derives its name from a bridge erected here over the river Ure, soon after the Conquest, when the road was diverted from Aldborough, and brought through this town. Near this bridge a battle took place, in 1322, between the forces of Edward II. and those of the celebrated Earl of Lancaster, in which the latter were defeated. The earl having taken refuge in the town, which was assaulted on the following day, was made prisoner and conveyed to Pontefract, where he was soon afterwards beheaded. Of this battle, a memorial has been obtained in the number of human bones, swords, fragments of armour, and other military relics, which, in raising the bank of the Ure, in 1792, were found near the spot. The town is pleasantly situated on the southern bank of the river, which is here navigable, and has been greatly improved and enlarged by the erection of several respectable houses on the opposite side of the river, over which a handsome stone bridge has been constructed, on the site of a former one, which was built of wood. The streets are partially paved, and the inhabitants are amply supplied with water from springs, and from the river. There is a small subscription library at the Crown Inn; and races are annually held in the vicinity. The trade is principally in hardware, but the town derives its chief support from being situated on the high road to Edinburgh. The market is on Saturday; and fairs are held on April 27th, June 22nd, and October 23rd, each for two days: the fair in June is chiefly for hardware and woollen cloth; the others are for cattle and sheep. In the market-place, which is conveniently situated in the centre of the town, there is a handsome fluted column of the Doric order, twelve feet high. A bailiff and other officers are chosen annually at the court leet of the lord of the manor, but they do not exercise magisterial authority. The elective franchise was conferred in the reign of Mary, since which time the borough has returned two members to parliament: the right of election is vested in the burgage tenants, in number sixty-five, who are chiefly in the interest of the Duke of Newcastle: the bailiff is the returning officer. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Richmond, and diocese of Chester, endowed with £800 royal bounty, and £1200 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Vicar of Aldborough. There are places of worship for Methodists. A National school, established in 1814, is supported by subscription. To the west of the bridge are three large pyramidal stones, ranged in a straight line, in a direction from north to south, and each in a separate enclosure, the central one of which is the largest, being thirty feet and a half in height: they are vulgarly called the Devil's Arrows, and were originally four in number. The purpose of their erection is involved in obscurity; some suppose them to have been raised in memory of a reconciliation effected between Caracalla and Geta, sons of the Emperor Severus, who died at York. Camden considers them to have been Roman trophies; though they may probably have been used by that people as metæ in the celebration of their chariot races, yet their origin appears to be more remote. Stukeley refers them to the earliest times of the Britons, and is of opinion that here was the great Panegyre of the Druids, where the inhabitants of the neighbouring district assembled to offer the sacrifices. From its proximity to Aldborough, a celebrated Roman station, numerous relics have been found here, consisting of tessellated pavements and coins; and, in the immediate vicinity, the remains of a Roman wall are still discernible.

BOROUGH-FEN, an extra-parochial district, in the liberty of PETERBOROUGH, county of NORTHAMPTON, 5 miles (N. E. by N.) from Peterborough, containing 204 inhabitants.

BORROWBY, a township in that part of the parish of LEAK which is in the wapentake of ALLERTONSHIRE, North riding of the county of YORK, 5 miles (N.) from Thirsk, containing 267 inhabitants. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. Some small sums have been left for the instruction of children.

BORROWBY, a township in the parish of LYTHE, eastern division of the liberty of LANGBAURGH, North riding of the county of YORK, 11½ miles (W. N. W.) from Whitby, containing 64 inhabitants.

BORROWDALE, a chapelry in that part of the parish of CROSTHWAITE which is in ALLERDALE ward above Derwent, county of CUMBERLAND, 7 miles (S. by W.) from Keswick, containing 346 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Carlisle, endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £600 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Vicar of Crosthwaite. The chapel has lately been rebuilt. There are meeting-houses for Dissenters at Grange and Rosthwaite, hamlets in this chapelry. Near Seathwaite, another hamlet, is the celebrated plum-bago, wad, or black lead mine, in the side of a steep mountain, formed by a rock of grey felspar porphyry. Owing to the abundant produce, and the facility of obtaining it, the mine was formerly opened only once in five years, and that but for a short space of time; of late, however, it has been less productive, and the demand has greatly increased, so that about eight miners have been constantly engaged for several successive years in working it. The lead is found lying in lumps, or nodules, varying in weight from an ounce to fifty pounds, in the clefts of the rock. The finer sort is packed in barrels, sent to London, and deposited in the warehouse belonging to the proprietors of the mine, where it is exposed for sale to the pencil-makers on the first Monday in every month: that of an inferior description is chiefly used in the composition of crucibles, in giving a black polish to articles of cast-iron, and in various anti-attrition compositions. To protect the interests of the proprietors, an act was passed in 1752, whereby persons stealing, or receiving this article, knowing it to be stolen, are subjected to the same punishment as felons. A house has been built over the entrance, where the workmen undress and are examined, every time they leave the mine. Black lead is found in various parts of the world, but in none to so great an extent, and of the same degree of purity, as in this: an inferior kind has been discovered in the shires of Ayr and Inverness, in Scotland, but it is unfit for pencils. Here are also several quarries of blue slate: a copper mine was formerly worked; and lead-ore exists to a limited extent in the mountain. A soft, palish substance, commonly called Borrowdale soap, is found, which, having undergone a chemical process, similar to that by which the black lead is hardened, is used for slate pencils. The romantic scenery of this district has elicited deserved eulogy from the pens of numerous tourists. Bowder stone, which has often formed a subject both for the pencil and the pen, is esteemed the largest detached piece of rock entitled to the denomination of a single stone in England: it is sixty-two feet in length, and eighty-four in circumference, and contains about twenty-three thousand and ninety feet of solid stone, weighing upwards of one thousand seven hundred and seventy-one tons: the upper part projects considerably over the small base on which it rests, and it is not unusual for parties of pleasure to regale under it. On the summit of Castle Crag, a conical hill covered with wood, are vestiges of a military work. Near a lake, at the lower extremity of the dale, there is a salt-spring, the water of which is of a quality somewhat similar to that at Cheltenham. A fair for sheep is held on the first Wednesday in September.

BORROWDON, a township in the parish of ALLENTON, western division of COQUETDALE ward, county of NORTHUMBERLAND, containing 179 inhabitants.

BORWICK, a chapelry in the parish of WARTON, hundred of LONSDALE, south of the sands, county palatine of LANCASTER, 3½ miles (S.) from Burton in Kendal, containing 251 inhabitants. Charles II. lodged for one night at Borwick Hall, on his way to Worcester, and his army encamped a short distance from it.

BOSBURY, a parish in the hundred of RADLOW, county of HEREFORD, 4½ miles (N. by W.) from Ledbury, containing, with Up-Leaddon, 966 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Hereford, rated in the king's books at £10. 3. 8., and in the patronage of the Bishop of Hereford. The church, dedicated to the Holy Trinity, is an ancient edifice, containing some interesting monuments. A free grammar school, endowed by Sir Rodland Morton, has lately been discontinued, owing to the appropriation of the income, which is about £135 per annum, to the discharge of the costs of a suit in Chancery, which, for the next twenty years, will absorb the whole of the proceeds. Mr. Bridges, of Tiberton Court, bequeathed £5 per annum for apprenticing one poor child; and there are several other small bequests for the benefit of the poor. The bishops of Hereford had formerly a palace here, the remains of which have been converted into farm buildings.

BOSCASTLE, a small sea-port, and formerly a market town, in the parishes of FORRABURY and MINSTER, hundred of LESNEWT, county of CORNWALL, 17 miles (W. by N.) from Launceston, and 230 (W. by S.) from London. The population is returned with the parishes. This place takes its name from a castle erected by some of the family of Bottereaux, who settled here in the reign of Henry II., of which only the site remains. The town is romantically situated on the northern coast, and contains several respectable houses. A pilchard fishery, established a few years since, but soon afterwards relinquished, contributed greatly to the improvement of the quay, which is accessible to ships of three hundred tons' burden. The port is a member of the port of Padstowe, and considerable trade is carried on in corn, Delabole slate, and manganese (of which last there is a mine in the neighbourhood), which are sent coastwise, and coal and timber brought in return. The fairs are on August 5th for lambs, and November 23rd for ewes and cattle. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists; and some remains of an ancient chapel, dedicated to St. James, are visible.

BOSCOBEL, an extra-parochial district, in the Hales-Owen division of the hundred of BRIMSTREE, county of SALOP, 7½ miles (E.) from Shiftnall, containing 30 inhabitants. Boscobel House is celebrated in history as the place where Charles II. concealed himself in September, 1651, after the disastrous battle of Worcester, secure in the incorruptible integrity of five brothers, named Penderell: the house has been considerably modernised, but the place of concealment, called the Sacred Hole, is carefully preserved, and in front of the house is a Latin inscription, traced with white pebbles in the pavement, recording the circumstance. The Royal Oak, thought to have sprung from an acorn of the parent tree, among the branches of which the unfortunate monarch retired for greater security, when his pursuers were searching the house and out-buildings, stands near the middle of a large field adjoining the garden; it is surrounded by an iron railing, and has an inscribed brass plate affixed to it.

BOSCOMBE, a parish in the hundred of AMESBURY, county of WILTS, 3½ miles (S.E. by E.) from Amesbury, containing 128 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Salisbury, rated in the king's books at £13. 17. 1., and in the patronage of the Bishop of Salisbury. The church is dedicated to St. Andrew. Four almshouses, for two widows and two widowers, are endowed with a rent-charge of £24.

BOSHAM, a parish in the hundred of BOSHAM, rape of CHICHESTER, county of SUSSEX, 4 miles (W. by S.)

from Chichester, containing 1049 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Chichester, rated in the king's books at £6. 11. 3., endowed with £200 private benefaction, £200 royal bounty, and £400 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Chichester. The church is dedicated to the Holy Trinity. The village is situated at the upper extremity of a creek, to which it gives name, and the parish is bounded on the east and south by Chichester harbour. Two sums of £70 each, one given by George Parker the elder, in 1722, and the other by George Parker the younger, in 1733, have been laid out pursuant to a decree in Chancery, in purchasing a rent-charge of £4, which is paid to a schoolmistress for teaching poor children. So early as the year 681, here was a small monastery of five or six religious, under the government of one Dicul, a Sottish monk. Henry I. granted the place to William Warlewast, Bishop of Exeter, who founded a college of Secular canons, dedicated to the Holy Trinity, which, prior to the dissolution, was accounted a royal free chapel, exempt from the jurisdiction of the Bishop of Chichester, and that of the Archdeacon.

BOSLEY, a chapelry in the parish of PRESTBURY, hundred of MACCLESFIELD, county palatine of CHESTER, 4½ miles (E. N. E.) from Congleton, containing 546 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Chester, endowed with £800 royal bounty, and £1000 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Vicar of Prestbury.

BOSSALL, a parish comprising the chapelry of Sand-Hutton, in the wapentake of BIRDFORTH, and the townships of Bossall, Butter-Crambe, Claxton, Harton, Sand-Hutton, and a part of that of Flaxton on the Moor, in the wapentake of BULMER, North riding of the county of YORK, and containing 1365 inhabitants, of which number, 31 are in the township of Bossall, 10 miles (N. E.) from York. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Cleveland, and diocese of York, rated in the king's books at £12, and in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Durham. The church, dedicated to St. Botolph, is a handsome cruciform structure, with a steeple rising from the centre. The village of Bossall was formerly large, but it does not now comprise more than three or four houses: foundations of buildings have been discovered in an adjoining field, thence called "Old Bossall." Courts leet are held for the several manors within the parish, which is bounded on the south and east by the river Derwent.

BOSSINEY with TREVENA, a borough and market town in the parish of TINTAGELL, hundred of LESNEWT, county of CORNWALL, 18 miles (W. by N.) from Launceston, and 231 (W. by S.) from London. The population is returned with the parish. This borough, comprising two villages, about a quarter of a mile distant from each other, is situated on a bleak and rugged part of the northern coast. The market is on Thursday; and the fair, which is held at Trevena, is on the first Monday after October 19th. Bossiney was made a free borough in the reign of Henry III., by Richard, Earl of Cornwall, brother to that monarch, but it never had a royal charter. A mayor, whose office is merely nominal, is chosen annually by a jury of burgesses empanelled by his predecessor, at the court leet held in October, when constables and other inferior officers are also appointed; the burgesses are chosen in a similar manner, as vacancies occur. The freedom of the borough descends to the eldest son of a burgess possessing freehold property within it, and is obtained by presentation of the jury. The elective franchise was conferred in the 7th of Edward VI., since which time the borough has returned two members to parliament: the right of election is vested in the burgesses possessing freehold property within the borough, and residing in the parish, the present number of whom is twenty-five, who are chiefly in the interest of Lord Wharnclyffe and Edward Rose Tunno, Esq. The town-hall, a small building, is appropriated also to the use of a charity school, which is chiefly supported by the mayor and burgesses, who appoint the master, and allow him a salary of £20 per annum. There are some remains of King Arthur's castle, on the top of a stupendous rock, formerly part of the main land, but now connected with it only by a narrow isthmus; the summit comprises an area of thirty acres of pasture, but the acclivities are so steep, that it is almost inaccessible to the sheep that graze on it.

Seal and Arms.

BOSSINGTON, a chapelry in the parish of BROUGHTON, hundred of THORNGATE, Andover division of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. W. by S.) from Stockbridge, containing 75 inhabitants. The chapel is dedicated to St. James. The Roman road from Salisbury to Winchester passes through the parish.

BOSTOCK, a township in the parish of DAVENHAM, hundred of NORTHWICH, county palatine of CHESTER, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W. by W.) from Middlewich, containing 174 inhabitants.

BOSTON, a borough, port, market town, and parish, having separate jurisdiction, locally in the wapentake of Skirbeck, parts of HOLLAND, county of LINCOLN, 34 miles (S. E.) from Lincoln, and 113 (N.) from London, containing 10,330 inhabitants, and, including a small extra-parochial district, 10,373. This place derived its name from St.

Botolph, a Saxon who founded a monastery here, about the year 650, from which circumstance it was called Botolph's town, of which its present name is a contraction. The monastery, which was destroyed by the Danes, in 870, was erected on the northern side of the present church, and its remains have been converted into a dwelling-house, called Botolph's Priory. From the discovery of the foundations of several ancient buildings, urns, and other relics of antiquity, in 1716, this place is supposed to have been of Roman origin; and according to Dr. Stukeley, the Romans built a fort at the entrance of the river Witham, over which they had a ferry, at a short distance to the south of the town. In the reign of Edward I., Robert Chamberlayne, having assembled some associates disguised as ecclesiastics, secretly set fire to the town, and, while the inhabitants were endeavouring to extinguish the flames, plundered the booths of the rich merchandise exposed for sale at the fair, and burnt such goods as they were not able to carry away: so rich is the town represented to have been at the time of this fire, that veins of melted gold and silver are said to have run, in one common current, down the streets: Chamberlayne was afterwards taken and hanged, but his confederates escaped. In 1285, Boston suffered greatly from an inundation of the river, and the mercantile ardour of the inhabitants being checked by the plunder of the fair and the conflagration of the town, its prosperity began to decline. In the early part of the reign of Edward II., it was made a staple port for wool, leather, tin, lead, and other commodities, which soon gave a new impulse to the spirit of commercial enterprise; and the settlement in England of the Hanseatic merchants, who established a guild here, tended so powerfully to revive the former prosperity of the town, that, in the reign of Edward III., Boston sent deputies to three grand councils held at Westminster, and contributed seventeen ships, and two hundred and sixty-one men, toward the armament for the invasion of Brittany. The town is situated on the banks of the river Witham, which divides it into two wards, east and west, connected by a handsome iron bridge of one arch, erected by the corporation in 1807, at an expense of £22,000, under the superintendence of Mr. Rennie. The streets are well paved, and lighted with gas, under an act passed in the 16th of George III., for the general improvement of the town, and many handsome buildings have been erected; but the inhabitants are scantily supplied with water, which the more opulent collect from rain, in cisterns attached to their houses, and the poorer bring from the river, or from pits in the neighbourhood. Frequent attempts to procure a better supply, by boring have failed; and in February 1829, after expending £1800, the last undertaking was relinquished. There are two subscription libraries; a handsome suite of assembly-rooms, built by the corporation in 1820: a commodious theatre, erected in 1806; and a theatre of arts, exhibiting views of various cities, with appropriate moving figures, which is open every Wednesday evening: about half a mile from the town are Vauxhall Gardens, which, during the season, are brilliantly illuminated, and very numerously attended.

The trade of the port, from an accumulation of silt in the river, which impeded its navigation, had begun to decline about the middle of the last century, but was revived by forming a canal, deepening the river, and enlarging the harbour. The exports consist chiefly of the agricultural produce of the county; the imports are timber, hemp, tar, and iron, from the Baltic. A considerable coasting trade is also carried on, which has rapidly increased of late years. Since the fens adjoining the town have been drained and cultivated, a tract of rich land, of nearly seventy thousand acres, has been thus obtained, which, besides producing grain, feeds a great number of sheep and oxen, remarkable for their size and fatness: oats in great quantity are shipped to various parts of the coast, and wool to the manufacturing districts in Yorkshire, whence coal and other articles are brought in return. The quay, which is conveniently adapted to the loading of vessels, is accessible to ships of one hundred tons' burden: the custom-house, a commodious building, was erected at the public expense, and the pilot-office was built in 1811; the establishment of the latter consists of a master, twelve pilots, and a few supernumeraries. The river Witham is navigable to Lincoln, from which place, by means of canals communicating with the Trent, there is an inland navigation to almost every part of the kingdom. The number of vessels belonging to the port, according to the return made in 1828, was one hundred and fifty, averaging fifty-four tons' burden. About forty boats are also employed in the fishery: shrimps of superior quality, soles, and herrings, are taken in profusion; and in 1772, the corporation erected a large fish market. The market is on Wednesday, and is abundantly supplied with poultry, a great quantity of which is sent to London every week. The fairs are on May 4th for sheep, and the day following for cattle; August 11th, which is called the Town fair; November 30th, and the three following days, for horses and horned cattle; and December 11th, for horned cattle only.

The government, according to a charter granted by Henry VIII., and enlarged by Elizabeth, who gave the corporation a court of admiralty, is vested in a mayor, recorder, deputy-recorder, twelve aldermen, and eighteen common council-men, assisted by a town-clerk, judge advocate, and marshal of the admiralty court, two sergeants at mace, and other officers. The mayor is appointed from among the aldermen, who succeed to that office by rotation: the aldermen are chosen out of the common council-men, by a majority of their own body, and the common council-men are selected by the mayor and aldermen. The mayor is clerk of the market, and admiral of the port, in which latter capacity, conjointly with the common council, he holds a court of admiralty, the jurisdiction of which extends over the whole adjacent coast. The mayor, recorder, and four senior aldermen, are justices of the peace within the borough and parish. The freedom is acquired by birth, servitude, and purchase. The corporation hold a court of session quarterly for the borough, and a court for record for the recovery of debts to any amount, at which the mayor, recorder, and town-clerk preside. The petty sessions for the wapentake of Skirbeck and Kirton are held every Wednesday at the Cross chamber; and a court of requests for the recovery of debts under £5 is held once a fortnight, under an act obtained in the 47th of George III. The elective franchise was conferred in the reign of Edward VI., since which time the borough has returned two representatives to parliament: the right of election is vested in the members of the corporation, the sons of aldermen, and eldest sons of common council-men, residing as householders within the borough, and in the resident freemen generally, in number four hundred; the mayor is the returning officer. The guildhall is an ancient building, in the council-chamber of which is a fine portrait of Sir Joseph Banks, presented by him when recorder of this borough: the borough gaol is a handsome building at the south end of the town, erected in 1811: the house of correction for the parts of Holland was built in 1809.

The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £33. 6. 8., and in the patronage of the Mayor and Corporation. The church, dedicated to St. Botolph, is a spacious and magnificent structure in the decorated style of English architecture, with a lofty square tower surmounted by an octagonal lantern turret, in the later English style: it was erected in 1309, and is in an excellent state of repair: the tower, which is three hundred feet high, and was formerly illuminated during the night, forms a conspicuous land-mark for mariners traversing the North sea. Within the church, among other interesting monuments, are the effigies of Sir John Tilney and his lady, by whom the church is said to have been founded. A chapel has lately been erected by subscription. The living is a perpetual curacy, endowed with £100 per annum by the corporation, to whom the patronage, which is now vested in the subscribers, will revert after the expiration of fifteen years. There are places of worship for General and Particular Baptists, the Society of Friends, Independents, Methodists, Unitarians, and Roman Catholics; and a piece of ground has been taken, on which it is intended to build a synagogue. The free grammar school, founded and endowed in 1554, by Queen Mary, is under the control of the corporation, who appoint the master and usher, the former having a salary of £100, and the latter one of £60, per annum: the schoolroom was built in 1567, and a convenient house for the master in 1826. A school was founded, in 1707, by Mr. Laughton, who endowed it with lands in Skirbeck, producing about £50 per annum, which has since been augmented by other benefactors: there are at present twenty-five boys, each of whom, at the age of fourteen, is entitled to an apprentice fee of £15, provided he be put out to a free burgess. A Blue-coat school, founded in 1713, for clothing and instructing thirty-three boys and the same number of girls; and two National schools, established in 1815, in which five hundred children are instructed, are supported by subscription. A general dispensary was instituted in 1795. Of the numerous monastic establishments which formerly existed in this town and its vicinity, there remain only some slight vestiges of the Black, or Dominican friary, established in the year 1288. The ancient church of St. John, formerly the parish church, has been totally removed, but the cemetery is still used as a burying-ground. John Fox, the celebrated martyrologist, was a native of this town. Boston confers the title of viscount on the Irby family.

BOSTON, a joint township with Clifford, in the parish of BRAMHAM, wapentake of BARKSTONE-ASH, West riding of the county of YORK, 4 miles (W.) from Tadcaster. The population is returned with Clifford. This village is of recent origin, the first house having been built in 1753. Owing to the discovery, in 1744, of a saline spring in the vicinity, it has now become a place of fashionable resort. A pump-room, with hot and cold baths, has been erected: the air is pure, and the situation being in a vale, on the southern side of the river Wharfe, is extremely picturesque. An episcopal chapel, built on land given by Mr. Samuel Tate, was consecrated in 1814. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. A charity school was founded by Lady Elizabeth Hastings.

BOSWORTH (HUSBAND'S), a parish in the hundred of GARTREE, county of LEICESTER, 6 miles (W.S.W.) from Market-Harborough, containing 817 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Leicester, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £24. 15. 7½, and in the patronage of the Rev. J. T. Mayne. The church, dedicated to All Saints, had its spire greatly damaged during a storm of thunder and lightning, in July 1755. There are places of worship for Particular Baptists and Wesleyan Methodists. The river Welland bounds the parish on the south and south-east, and the Avon on the north-west; and the Grand Union canal crosses the western part of it, being here conducted through a tunnel, one thousand one hundred and seventy yards in length, to the northern side of the village.

BOSWORTH (MARKET), a parish in the hundred of SPARKENHOE, county of LEICESTER, comprising the town of Market-Bosworth, the chapelries of Barleston, Carlton, Shenton, and Sutton-Cheney, the township of Barton in the Beans, and part of the township of Osbaston, and containing 2677 inhabitants, of which number 1117 are in the town of Market-Bosworth, 11½ miles (S.W.) from Leicester, and 107 (N.W.) from London. This place, in Domesday-book, called Bosworde, takes the prefix to its name from a market granted to the inhabitants in the reign of Edward I. The neighbourhood is celebrated as the scene of a decisive battle which took place on the 22nd of August, 1485, between Richard III. and the Earl of Richmond afterwards Henry VII.: this battle, the last of those sanguinary conflicts between the houses of York and Lancaster, which had for so many years disturbed the internal tranquillity of the kingdom, and deluged its plains with blood, was fought on a large moor, three miles from the town, formerly called Redmore, but since that event better known as Bosworth Field. It is at present enclosed, and the particular spot, called Richard's Well, is distinguished by a monument erected by subscription, through the exertions of the late Dr. Parr, who visited the site in 1813, and wrote an appropriate inscription for it in Latin: numerous swords, shields, spurs, and other military relics, have been dug up at different times in the neighbourhood. The town, which is pleasantly situated on an eminence, contains some respectable houses, and is well supplied with water. The manufacture of worsted stockings is carried on here, and in the adjacent villages, to a considerable extent; and greater facility has been given to trade by the Ashby canal, which, passing within a mile of the town, affords a medium for supplying it with coal and other articles of consumption. The market is on Wednesday: the fairs are on May 8th, for horses, horned cattle, and sheep, and July 10th, which is called the Cherry fair.

The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Leicester, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £55. 18. 4., and in the patronage of the Dixie family. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a spacious ancient structure, with a beautiful spire; within are many interesting monuments, among the finest of which is one to certain members of the Dixie family. There are places of worship for Baptists and Independents. The free grammar school, open to all boys whose parents reside within the parish, was founded in 1593, and endowed with land, by Sir Wolstan Dixie, Knt., who also endowed two fellowships of £30, and four scholarships of £10, per annum each, in Emanuel College, Cambridge. In consequence of its affairs being in Chancery, the school has been discontinued for the last twenty-five years, during which period, its funds have accumulated to the amount of £15,000: of this sum it is in contemplation to appropriate a part to the foundation of additional scholarships. The premises, including commodious residences for the masters, have been handsomely rebuilt in the later style of English architecture, at an expense of £5000: the management is vested in ten governors, including the rector and churchwardens of the parish: the total income arising from the endowment is £700 per annum. The Rev. Anthony Blackwall, a distinguished critic and classical scholar, was master, and the celebrated Dr. Johnson, and Thomas Simpson, the eminent mathematician, were ushers, in this school: the latter, who was a native of the town, became Professor of Mathematics at Woolwich, and died here in 1761.

BOTCHESTON, a joint township with Newton, in the parish of RATBY, hundred of SPARKENHOE, county of LEICESTER, 6 miles (E.N.E.) from Market Bosworth, containing, with Newton, 87 inhabitants.

BOTESDALE, a chapelry (formerly a market town) in the parish of REDGRAVE, hundred of HARTISMERE, county of SUFFOLK, 26 miles (N.N.W.) from Ipswich, and 86 (N.E. by N.) from London, on the road to Norwich, containing 584 inhabitants. The name, contracted from Botolph's Dale, is compounded of Botolph, the name of the tutelar saint of the chapel, and the dale in which the town is situated. The town consists principally of one long street, which extends into the parishes of Rickingham Superior and Rickingham Inferior: the houses are indifferently built, but the inhabitants are amply supplied with water. The market, formerly on Thursday, has been discontinued: a small fair for cattle and pedlary is held on Holy Thursday. Courts leet and baron are held at Whitsuntide, at the former of which constables and other officers are appointed. The chapel, which has been substantially repaired, is a neat edifice, in the later style of English architecture, of which it exhibits good specimens: within are some interesting monuments, among which may be noticed those to Sir Nicholas Bacon, and that celebrated lawyer and patriot, Lord Chief Justice Holt, whose remains are deposited here. The free grammar school was founded and endowed, in 1576, by Sir Nicholas Bacon, for a master and an usher, who are appointed by the Master and Fellows of Corpus Christi College, Cambridge, in which there are six exhibitions belonging to this school: the income is £30 per annum, of which sum, the master receives £20, and the usher £8, the remainder being expended in repairs. The school-house, which stands to the west of the chapel, was erected at the expense of Edward Britiffe, Esq.

BOTHALL, a parish in the eastern division of MORPETH ward, county of NORTHUMBERLAND, 3 miles (E.) from Morpeth, comprising the townships of Ashington with Sheepwash, Bothall-Demesne, Longhurst, Old Moor, and Pegsworth, and containing 658 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, with that of Sheepwash and the perpetual curacy of Hebburn annexed, in the archdeaconry of Northumberland, and diocese of Durham, rated in the king's books at £25, and in the patronage of the Duke of Portland. The church, dedicated to St. Andrew, contains a fine alabaster tomb, representing some member of the family of Ogle, and his lady, in a recumbent position, and at the head four ecclesiastics in niches, decorated with tabernacle work. The ancient parochial church stood at Sheepwash, where the parsonage-house now is. Between the village and the river Wansbeck, which bounds the parish on the south, are the ruins of an oratory, dedicated to the Virgin Mary. A school-room, with a house for the master, was built in 1817, by the Duke of Portland, who allows the master £10 per annum, in addition to the interest of £80 left by the Rev. Mr. Stafford, in 1716. There is also a school at Causey Park, built and endowed with £15 a year, by one of the Ogle family, in 1740. Coal abounds within the parish. Bothall was made a barony by Richard I., and was some time in the possession of the family of Bertram, but passed by marriage to Sir Robert Ogle, who bequeathed his paternal estate to his son Robert, and the barony of Bothall to his youngest son John; but the former, with a force of two hundred men, obtained possession of Bothall, from which, however, he was ejected by the parliament: having subsequently distinguished himself in the cause of the house of York, he was created baron of Bothall, and first Lord Ogle, of Ogle. The barony is now the property of the Duke of Portland, who holds a court leet and baron for it. The castle, which was situated near the precipice of a rock, at the foot of which flows the river Wansbeck, is in ruins, a large tower gateway, and fragments of the outer walls, being the only parts that remain.

BOTHAMSALL, a parish in the Hatfield division of the wapentake of BASSETLAW, county of NOTTINGHAM, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. N. W.) from Tuxford, containing 310 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Nottingham, and diocese of York, and in the patronage of the Duke of Newcastle. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. The parish is bounded on the north by the river Poulter, and intersected by the Meden, which two rivers, uniting with the Maun, form the river Idle, about two miles north of the parish. Henry Walters, in 1692, founded a free school at Houghton, in this parish, which is endowed with £25 per annum. The inhabitants are entitled to the privilege of sending a certain number of children to the school at West Drayton. There is a tumulus, called Castle Hill, a little westward from the village.

BOTHEL, a township in the parish of TORPENHOW, ALLERDALE ward below Derwent, county of CUMBERLAND, 4 miles (W.) from Ireby, containing, with the township of Threapland, 384 inhabitants. This is a long straggling village: the vicinity abounds with limestone, and there are kilns for burning it.

BOTHENHAMPTON, a parish in the liberty of LOTHERS and BOTHENHAMPTON, Bridport division of the county of DORSET, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (S. E. by S.) from Bridport, containing 385 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Dorset, and diocese of Bristol, and in the patronage of the Countess of Abingdon. The church is dedicated to the Holy Trinity. This parish is bounded on the west by an estuary called Bridport harbour.

BOTH-HERGESTS, a township in the parish of KINGTON, hundred of HUNTINGTON, county of HEREFORD, containing 145 inhabitants.

BOTLEY, a tything in the parish of CUMNER, hundred of HORMER, county of BERKS, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (W.) from Oxford, containing 118 inhabitants.

BOTLEY, a parish in the hundred of MANSBRIDGE, Fawley division of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. W.) from Bishop's Waltham, containing 690 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Winchester, rated in the king's books at £5. 10. $2\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of the Duke of Rutland. The church, dedicated to All Saints, and consisting only of a nave and a chancel, stands nearly a mile to the south of the village, and contains an ancient and curious font. Considerable trade in flour is carried on: the mills are worked by the river Hamble, which is navigable up to this place for boats. Fairs, chiefly for toys and pedlary, are held on Shrove-Tuesday, Whit-Tuesday, and the Tuesday before St. Bartholomew's day; for cheese, on February 20th and May 28th; and for cattle, on July 23rd, August 20th, and November 13th. A strong chalybeate spring near the church was formerly in great repute, but is now disused.

BOTOLPH-BRIDGE, a parish in the hundred of NORMAN-CROSS, county of HUNTINGDON, 2 miles (S. W. by W.) from Peterborough. The population is returned with Orton-Longville. The living is a rectory, united in 1721 to that of Orton-Longville, in the archdeaconry of Huntingdon, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £8. 6. $10\frac{1}{2}$.. The church, now deserted, was dedicated to All Saints.

BOTTESFORD, a parish in the hundred of FRAMLAND, county of LEICESTER, 7 miles (W. N. W.) from Grantham, containing, with Normanton, 1070 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Leicester, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £51. 5., and in the patronage of the Duke of Rutland. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a spacious cruciform structure, with a tower supporting a spire at the western end: it has been the burial-place of the noble family of Manners since the dissolution of monasteries, at which period several monuments to the memory of deceased members of that family were removed hither from the conventual church at Belvoir. There is a place of worship for Particular Baptists. The Grantham canal crosses the parish. From the discovery of various relics of antiquity, this place is supposed to have been occupied by the Romans. In 1711, the Rev. Abel Ligonier and Anthony Ravell bequeathed land for the instruction of twenty-eight children.

BOTTESFORD, a parish comprising the townships of Ashby and Burringham, and the hamlets of Holm and Yaddlethorpe, in the eastern division, and the township of Crosby, in the western division, of the wapentake of MANLEY, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, 8 miles (W.) from Glandford-Bridge, and containing 999 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, united in 1727 to the vicarage of Messingham, in the archdeaconry of Stow, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £10. The church is dedicated to St. Peter.

BOTTESLAW, a township in the parish of STOKE UPON TRENT, northern division of the hundred of PIREHILL, county of STAFFORD. The population is returned with the parish.

BOTTISHAM, a parish in the hundred of STAINED, county of CAMBRIDGE, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W.S.W.) from Newmarket, containing 1123 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Ely, rated in the king's books at £16, and in the patronage of the Master and Fellows of Trinity College, Cambridge. The church, dedicated to the Holy Trinity, contains the tomb of Elias de Beckingham, justiciary of England in the reign of Edward I. A considerable part of the village was destroyed by fire, in 1712. Sir Roger Jenyns, Knt. founded a school in 1730, and endowed it with £20 per annum, for the gratuitous instruction and clothing of sixteen boys and four girls: the master and scholars are appointed by the proprietor of Bottisham Hall. A moiety of the income of an endowed almshouse at Eastham, founded by Giles Breame, Esq., in 1621, is paid to the poor of this place. Henry I. founded a small priory of Augustine canons at Anglesey, in this parish, and dedicated it to the Blessed Virgin and St. Nicholas, the revenue of which, in the 26th of Henry VIII., was £149. 18. 6.: the site is now occupied by a farm-house, in the walls of which a portion of the conventual buildings is visible. The petty sessions are held here. At Bottisham Lode there is a place of worship for Particular Baptists.

BOTUSFLEMING, a parish in the southern division of the hundred of EAST, county of CORNWALL, 3 miles (N.W.) from Saltash, containing 297 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Cornwall, and diocese of Exeter, rated in the king's books at £16. 15. 7½., and in the patronage of the Rev. William Spry. In the centre of a field, on the northern side of the village, stands a pyramidal monument, erected to the memory of Dr. William Martin of Plymouth, who died in 1762.

BOUGHTON, a parish in the hundred of CLACKCLOSE, county of NORFOLK, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (N.) from Stoke-Ferry, containing 185 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Norfolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £10, and in the patronage of the Rev. G. Hunt. The church is dedicated to All Saints.

BOUGHTON, a hamlet in the parish of WEEKLEY, hundred of CORBY, county of NORTHAMPTON, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N.E. by N.) from Kettering. The population is returned with the parish. Here was formerly a chapel, but it has been demolished.

BOUGHTON, a parish in the hundred of SPELHOE, county of NORTHAMPTON, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N.) from Northampton, containing 351 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Northampton, and diocese of Peterborough, rated in the king's books at £20. 9. 7., and in the patronage of R. W. H. H. Vyse, Esq. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, is desecrated; but here is a chapel in which divine service is performed. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. A fair, which continues for three days, is held annually on a piece of waste ground half a mile to the south of the village.

BOUGHTON, a parish in the Hatfield division of the wapentake of BASSETLAW, county of NOTTINGHAM, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (N.E. by E.) from Ollerton, containing 289 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, with the vicarage of Kneesall, in the archdeaconry of Nottingham, and diocese of York.

BOUGHTON under BLEAN, a parish in the hundred of BOUGHTON under BLEAN, lathe of SCRAY, county of KENT, 3 miles (S.E. by E.) from Faversham, containing 1237 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the peculiar jurisdiction and patronage of the Archbishop of Canterbury, rated in the king's books at £9. 4. 9½. The church, dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul, contains several ancient monuments: the tower formerly supported a spire, which fell down about the close of the sixteenth century. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. Here are two charity schools for boys and girls, and an almshouse comprising two tenements. In 1716, a human skeleton, by the side of which lay a sword, and a brass coin struck in the reign of Antoninus Pius, was dug up in the vicinity. Blean Forest, from which Boughton has obtained its adjunct, was anciently the haunt of wild boars, wolves, and other beasts of chase. Boughton hill, about three quarters of a mile distant, is stated to command a more extensive prospect than any other hill in the kingdom.

BOUGHTON (GREAT), a township in that part of the parish of ALDFORD which is in the lower division of the hundred of BROXTON, county palatine of CHESTER, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (E.) from Chester, containing 911 inhabitants.

BOUGHTON (SPITTLE), an extra parochial liberty, within the county of the city of CHESTER, containing 150 inhabitants.

BOUGHTON-ALUPH, a parish in the hundred of WYE, lathe of SCRAY, county of KENT, 4 miles (N.N.E.) from Ashford, containing 453 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Canterbury, rated in the king's books at £6. 5., and in the patronage of Whitfield Breton, Esq. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a spacious cruciform structure, built of flint and ashlar-stone, with a low central tower. The river Stour flows on the eastern side of this parish. A fair for toys and pedlary is held at Lees, on Midsummer-day, at which place there is an almshouse for six poor persons.

BOUGHTON-MALHERB, a parish in the hundred of EYHORNE, lathe of AYLESFORD, county of KENT, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (S.W. by S.) from Lenham, containing 475 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Canterbury, rated in the king's books at £13. 15., and in the patronage of Earl Cornwallis. The church, dedicated to St. Nicholas, is a handsome edifice, with a square western tower: it stands on the summit of a ridge of hills, which divides the parish into two districts, Boughton Upland and Boughton Weald (the latter being so called from its situation within the Weald of Kent), and contains several interesting monuments to the memory of deceased members of the family of Wotton, among which is a splendid marble monument to that of Sir Thomas, and a costly one to that of Sir Edward Wotton. This family resided here for a considerable period, and this was the birthplace of its most accomplished member, Sir Henry Wotton, who was employed by James I. in several foreign embassies, and whose biography is written, in his peculiar quaintness of style, by Izaak Walton. The remains of the mansion, on a sunken pannel in which is inscribed the date 1579, have been converted into a barn.

BOUGHTON - MONCHELSEA, a parish in the hundred of EYHORNE, and extending into the hundred of Maidstone, lathe of AYLESFORD, county of KENT, 4 miles (S. by E.) from Maidstone, containing 828 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Canterbury, rated in the king's books at £7. 13. 4., and in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Rochester. The church is dedicated to St. Peter. The parish is intersected by a ridge of hills, the summit of which forms the northern boundary of the Weald of Kent, and on the southern declivity of which there are quarries of rag-stone.

BOULBY, a hamlet in the parish of EASINGTON, eastern division of the liberty of LANGBAURGH, North riding of the county of YORK, 11 miles (N. W. by W.) from Whitby. The population is returned with the parish. This place is noted for its extensive alum works, which were begun in 1615; they contain various petrefactions of ammonitæ, or snake stones, trochilæ, and shells of the bivalve kind.

BOULDON, a township in the parish of HOLDGATE, hundred of MUNSLOW, county of SALOP, containing 60 inhabitants.

BOULGE, a parish in the hundred of WILFORD, county of SUFFOLK, 3 miles (N. N. W.) from Woodbridge, containing 44 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, with that of Debach annexed, in the archdeaconry of Suffolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £3. 13. 1., endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £600 royal bounty, and in the patronage of Mrs. Reynolds. The church is dedicated to St. Michael.

BOULMER, a joint township with Seaton-House, in the parish of LONG HOUGHTON, southern division of BAMBOURGH ward, county of NORTHUMBERLAND, 6½ miles (E. by N.) from Alnwick, containing, with Seaton-House, 104 inhabitants. This village lies on the sea-shore, and is chiefly inhabited by fishermen, whose boats are moored in Boulmer bay, a natural basin environed by rocks, eight hundred yards long, and four hundred broad, the entrance to which is twelve feet deep at low water.

BOULSTONE, a parish in the upper division of the hundred of WORMELOW, county of HEREFORD, 6 miles (S. S. E.) from Hereford, containing 75 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to the vicarage of Hom-Lacy, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Hereford.

BOULTHAM, a parish in the lower division of the wapentake of BOOTHBY-GRAFFO, parts of KESTEVEN, county of LINCOLN, 3 miles (S. W. by S.) from Lincoln, containing 74 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £7. 15. 2., endowed with £400 royal bounty, and in the patronage of R. Ellison, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Helen.

BOULTON, a chapelry in that part of the parish of ST. PETER, DERBY, which is in the hundred of MORLESTON and LITCHURCH, county of DERBY, 3½ miles

(S. E. by E.) from Derby, containing 168 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, with that of Alvaston annexed, in the archdeaconry of Derby, and diocese of Lichfield and Coventry, endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £600 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the proprietors of land in the chapelry.

BOURN, a parish in the hundred of LONGSTOW, county of CAMBRIDGE, 1½ mile (S. E. by E.) from Caxton, containing 752 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Ely, rated in the king's books at £9. 15. 10., endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Master and Fellows of Christ's College, Cambridge. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. Bourn castle was destroyed in the reign of Henry III., during the war with the barons. A mineral spring here was formerly in high repute, but it is now neglected.

BOURN, a joint tything with Wrecklesham, in the parish and hundred of FARNHAM, county of SURREY. The population is returned with Wrecklesham.

BOURN-MOOR, a township in the parish of HOUGHTON le SPRING, northern division of EASINGTON ward, county palatine of DURHAM, containing 1139 inhabitants. At New Lambton, in this township, is a brine well ninety-seven fathoms deep, where salt-works were established in 1815. There is also a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists, with a Sunday school attached, in which about one hundred and sixty children are instructed.

BOURNE, a parish in the wapentake of AVELAND, parts of KESTEVEN, county of LINCOLN, comprising the market town of Bourne, and the hamlets of Cawthorpe and Dyke, and containing 2242 inhabitants, of which number, 2029 are in the town of Bourne, 36 miles (S.) from Lincoln, and 97 (N.) from London. This place takes its name from a stream of remarkably pure water, issuing from a copious spring a short distance to the south of the town, which is so powerful as to turn a corn-mill within three hundred yards of its source, about half a mile from which it becomes navigable, and is called the Bourn-Eau; it joins the river Glen, which runs on the eastern border of the parish, at a place called Tongue End, and thence the Glen shortly joins the Welland at Pinchbeck. Though little of its early history is known, it is supposed, from the discovery of Roman coins and tessellated pavements, to have been anciently a place of some importance. When the Danes invaded England in the ninth century, Marcot, the Saxon lord of Bourne, with a few of his own vassals and a detachment from Croyland abbey, after an obstinate engagement, defeated a party of them, who had made an inroad into this part of Lincolnshire. Prior to the time of Edward the Confessor, a castle was erected here, of which only the trenches and mounds are discernible; it appears to have included an area of more than eight acres. In 1138, Baldwin, a descendant of Walter Fitz-Gilbert, to whom the town was given by William Rufus, founded a priory for canons of the order of St. Augustine, the site alone of which, now called the Trenches, is visible: the revenue, at the dissolution, was £197. 17. 5. In the seventeenth century, Bourne was twice nearly destroyed by fire. The town, consisting principally of one very long street, the houses in which are in general modern and well-built, is pleasantly situated, and plentifully supplied with excellent water. The trade is chiefly in leather and wool: for the former there are several extensive tan-yards. A navigable canal has been constructed from this town to Spalding and Boston, by which means it is supplied with coal, timber, and other commodities. The market is on Saturday: the fairs are on April 7th, May 7th, and October 29th. The county magistrates hold a meeting every Saturday: courts of session for the parts of Kesteven are held quarterly. The town-hall, recently erected at an expense of £2500, on the site of a former one, built by William Cecil, Lord Treasurer in the reign of Elizabeth, is a spacious handsome edifice, under which is the market-place.

The living is a discharged vicarage, under sequestration, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £8, and in the patronage of the Earl of Pomfret. The church, dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul, though spacious, appears to be only part of a larger structure: it is principally in the Norman style, but contains several portions in the early and later styles of English architecture, and has two towers of mixed character, of which the southern is considerably higher than the other, and is crowned with pinnacles. Within are some interesting monuments, a finely enriched font of the later style, and a stoup under a crocketed canopy: the western entrance is a fine specimen of the later style, and over it is a large window of good composition. There are places of worship for Baptists and Wesleyan Methodists. A school for thirty children was founded in 1653, and endowed by Thomas Trollope, Esq., who also endowed an hospital for six aged men, and an almshouse for the same number of women. There is a mineral spring in the town, which was formerly in great repute. William Cecil, created Baron Burleigh by Queen Elizabeth, was born here, in 1521.

BOURNE (EAST), a parish (formerly a market town) in the hundred of EASTBOURNE, rape of PEVENSEY, county of SUSSEX, 7 miles (S.) from Hailsham, containing 2607 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Lewes, and diocese of Chichester, rated in the king's books at £26. 1. 8., and in the patronage of the Treasurer in the Cathedral Church of Chichester. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. The town, which consists of three detached portions, is pleasantly situated beneath the brow of a lofty hill, within a short distance of the sea, and has recently been resorted to for bathing, that part called Sea Houses being chiefly appropriated to the reception of visitors, for whose recreation a library and reading-rooms, and a small theatre, have been established, and there are assembly-rooms at the Lamb Inn. The bold headland, or promontory, of Beachy-head, formerly remarkable for the loss of vessels occasioned by the beating of the sea against it, the effects of which are visible in its numerous hollows and caverns, forms the south-west boundary of the parish. There are places of worship for Baptists, Independents, and Wesleyan Methodists. A strong circular fortification, called the depôt, comprising barracks, storehouses, a magazine, &c., and surrounded by a deep intrenchment, has been erected on the beach, in connexion with a line of Martello towers on the coast. The market was on Saturday, but has been discontinued: fairs are held on March 12th for pedlary, and October 11th for sheep, &c. Coins and other relics of the Romans have been discovered at various times, particularly in 1717, when a chequered pavement and a bath were exposed to the view. At Holywell, a mile west of the town, is a chalybeate spring, the water of which has properties similar to the Clifton Wells.

BOURNE (ST. MARY), a parish in the hundred of EVINGAR, Kingsclere division of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, 3 miles (N. W. by W.) from Whitchurch, containing 1053 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to the vicarage of Hurstborne-Priors, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Winchester.

BOURNE (WEST), a parish in the hundred of WESTBOURNE and SINGLETON, rape of CHICHESTER, county of SUSSEX, 7½ miles (W. N. W.) from Chichester, containing 1852 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Chichester, rated in the king's books at £10. 10. 5., and in the patronage of the Rector. The living is a sinecure, rated at £24. 13. 4., and in the patronage of the Rev. Lewis Way. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, is a neat commodious structure, in the later style of English architecture, with a well-proportioned spire of British oak, erected by the Earl of Halifax, formerly the munificent proprietor of Stansted Park, in the adjoining parish. The parish is situated on the sea-shore, and contains several hamlets; it abounds with pleasing scenery, studded with an unusual number of genteel residences, particularly in the hamlet of Prin-sted, the houses in which, each situated within a small shrubbery, or flower garden, are in the form of a crescent. On its western side is a small æstuary, which is crossed by a bridge, uniting the hamlet of Hermitage with the small brisk sea-port of Emsworth, in the county of Southampton. On the south is Thorney channel, which at low water is passable for carriages to and from Thorney island.
